DEAR SENATOR: From this morning's report in the Times on the tariff bill I notice with deep regret that the duty of 35 per cent on hand-cut files and "files of precision," which the Senate Finance Committee agreed to after you had so kindly interested yourself in our case, has been reduced in conference to 25 per cent, on a dead level with common files and rasps.

As this is positively unjust to the higher branch of the file industry, which we represent, I would ask you to do what you can to give us the 35 per cent duty asked for, since without it we are positively unable to compete in price with the same class of files made in Germany and Switzerland.

Should we be compelled to abandon our specialty the consumers as well as ourselves would surely suffer, for if we once give up the manufacture of hand-made files and "files of precision" the importers will have no competition and will monopolize the market, charging their own prices.

Can nothing be done to ward off this blow from an industry which while small yet leads the world in the excellence of its product and surely deserves preservation?

Over 100 of the very best file makers to be found anywhere in the world will bless you for anything you can do to restore that little 35 per cent of needed protection against labor which costs 150 per cent less in Switzerland, though of course not equally as efficient as are our American file makers.

Twenty-five per cent is entirely too low to preserve the industry. Asking your pardon for again troubling you in this matter, I remain, with kindest regards,
Very truly, yours,

E. P. REICHHELM.

APPLETON, WIS., October 1, 1913.

Senator REED SMOOT,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: We beg to call to your attention the action taken by the House September 30 on paragraph 116, House bill 3321, referring therein to Fourdrinier wire cloth; Ways and Means Committee had cut from 45 to 20 per cent; Finance Committee raised it back to 30 per cent; House yesterday reduced it to 15 per cent. If you will investigate, you will find this unfair. Read Schedule C, No. 5, metals and manufactures of, for our brief; also CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 1, page 782.

Yours,

C. E. MAESER,

American Wire Weavers' Protective Association.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the Senate agree to the report of the conference committee?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BORAH (when Mr. BRADY's name was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. BRADY] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. NELSON (when Mr. CLAPP's name was called). I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. CLAPP] is unavoidably absent, and, I believe, unpaired. If he were present, he would vote against the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. That Senator is not present, and I therefore withhold my vote. If that Senator were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. He being absent, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. McCUMBER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. McCUMBER] is unavoidably absent on important business. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PITTMAN (when Mr. NEWLANDS's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. NEWLANDS] and to state that he is paired with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. O'GORMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (when Mr. OLIVER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. OLIVER] is necessarily absent from Washington. Were he present in his seat and permitted to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when Mr. ROBINSON's name was called). My colleague [Mr. ROBINSON] is absent on official business. If he were present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], and therefore withhold my vote. If I were privileged to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when Mr. SHERMAN's name was called). I desire to state that the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is absent on account of important business. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I therefore withhold my vote. Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." In this connection I wish to add that our pair has this qualification, that either of us may vote when necessary to constitute a quorum.

Mr. REED (when Mr. STONE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. STONE] is necessarily absent, his absence being occasioned by sickness in his family. If he were present, he would vote "yea" upon this vote, as he would have voted on all other votes to sustain the report of the conference committee. He is, in his absence, paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." I will announce that that pair was made under the same conditions as the pair just announced by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). As announced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is paired with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I merely desire to say that if he were present my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. It does not, however, extend to the vote on the conference report. I accordingly vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. LEA. I am paired with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence, I am compelled to withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. I am requested to state that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] has been necessarily absent during the evening and is absent on this vote. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. KERN (after having voted in the affirmative). On account of the absence of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY], with whom I am paired, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS. The junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has stated that he is paired with my colleague [Mr. LODGE], who on account of illness will be absent until the completion of this bill. I wish to say that if my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE. In order to complete the record, I think I ought to state that the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is detained at his home away from Washington on account of illness; and that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON], the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE], the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] are necessarily absent from Washington. While I am not authorized to speak for any of these Senators, I feel confident that they all, if present, would vote "nay" on the pending question.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 17, as follows:

THURSDAY, October 2, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, for the preservation of our lives, the sanctity of our homes, the stability of our Republic, that we may worship Thee according to the dictates of our conscience and none shall make us afraid. Strengthen us for the duties of the hour, that we may go about our Father's business doing whatsoever our hands findeth to do in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The proceedings of Tuesday, September 30, 1913, were read and approved.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SHARP, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. ALLEN, for five days, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska, indefinitely, on account of the death of his sister.

REPORT OF ENGINEERS ON FLOODS IN THE OHIO RIVER, ETC. (H. DOC. NO. 246).

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent. Last spring, after the floods in the tributaries of the Ohio River had wrought such great havoc, the President requested the Secretary of War to have the Engineer Corps of the Army make an investigation and ascertain, if possible, the cause of the floods, and report a plan by which they might be prevented in the future, and so forth. The engineers have made the investigation and have just made their report. This was not done in response to any resolution by Congress. The report which the engineers have made is simply a typewritten report to the Secretary of War, and I ask unanimous consent that this may be printed as a public document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the document which he names be printed as a public document. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi if this is the report in which the engineers dealing with the flood question suggest that there have been constructed innumerable bridges across streams, which have affected the flow of the water?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, that report ought to be published so we can get it. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit an interruption—

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I would like to know how these documents are to be distributed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that on a request of this sort there are about 1,500 or 1,600 printed. They go to several places in the Government that are designated, and enough go to the document room for each Member to receive one copy. That will happen on the request I have submitted just now. Of course, if a larger number is to be printed, then it will have to be stated in the request.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman make a request for a larger number? I ask him to do so for this reason: In my district we were sufferers by this flood and the people there are very much interested in this report. Agents of the department have been through my district, as well as other districts, and the people would like to read that report, and I ask the gentleman to make his request for a number sufficient to be sent out for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask the same request for the same reason.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would not object at all to make request for just as many as are desired. I do not believe the chairman of the Committee on Printing is in the House. My understanding is that if the printing will cost more than $500 it would have to be by joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The rule is that you can not exceed $500 except by joint resolution.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I take it, Mr. Speaker, as this is a very short report that it will cost very little to have it printed. I would suggest, then, to the gentlemen who are interested in it, that if it is printed as a document they can then introduce a resolution and have just as many printed as they desire. Suppose I ask for 5,000 copies now?

Mr. BATHRICK. That will be all right.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I am quite sure that will come within the $500.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] that he exhaust the amount that is now allotted for this purpose, and, if necessary, and they want a further publication, it can be had by joint resolution.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, that is a very important report, and I would suggest there be no objection to printing the larger amount mentioned.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will admonish all gentlemen that the rule is they can not have a print of anything that costs over $500 without a resolution.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I have made inquiries and have learned that something more than 20,000 copies can be printed with the amount allowed under the rule.

The SPEAKER. Why not make it this way, if the Chair will be permitted to make a suggestion, namely, for the largest number or quantity that can be printed in the $500 limit? That will be a very simple solution of the matter.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] asks unanimous consent that this report be printed as a public document to the number of the largest quantity that can be printed under the $500 limit. Is there objection?

Mr. ELDER. Reserving the right to object, will they be equally distributed among the Members?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. They will go under this resolution to the document room and would not be distributed equally among the Members.

Mr. ELDER. Then I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ELDER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman—

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I will not change my request, because I think that would be a very poor way to have them printed.

Mr. ELDER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELDER] objects.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that we proceed under the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to call the roster of the committees, which the Clerk will do.

The Clerk proceeded with and concluded the call of the committees.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering Senate joint resolution No. 5.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider Senate joint resolution No. 5.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 5, providing for the appointment of a commission to consider the need and report a plan for national aid to vocational education, with Mr. FITZGERALD in the chair.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Education, to which was referred the Senate joint resolution No. 5, providing for the appointment of a commission to consider the need and report a plan for national aid to vocational education, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House with the following amendments, with a recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the resolution as amended do pass:

On page 1, line 4, strike out the word "men."

This amendment was adopted because of the fact that the committee was under the impression that the President should have full power to exercise his discretion in that appointment.

Page 1, lines 5 and 6, strike out "not later than."

On page 1, line 6, after the word "next," insert "or as soon thereafter as practicable."

The reason for those amendments was that when this joint resolution was submitted to the House or referred to the Committee on Education, could action have been taken at once, the commission would have had a sufficiency of time to have made their report by the 1st day of December, or soon thereafter; but action was so delayed the committee believed it would be impossible for the commission to make a report in the time named. That, Mr. Chairman, is the reason of the amendment granting more time.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that this resolution was agreed to by Senator PAGE, of Vermont, and Senator HOKE SMITH, of Georgia. It also passed the Senate. Senator PAGE, however, had introduced a very comprehensive bill on the subject of vocational education. That bill passed the Senate, but owing to the magnitude and importance of this great question it was taken under consideration both by Senator PAGE and Senator HOKE SMITH, and they agreed to the proposition that it was wise and best to authorize the President to appoint this commission to submit a plan of vocational education.

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, that this merely means a plan to be submitted to this House. It is not in any manner, form, or shape binding; no more so than it would be for a man who wished to build a house to have plans submitted to him for the purpose of his consideration. In the event they did not suit, he would reject them.

This question of vocational education is a question which today is occupying the attention of the people throughout the broad limits of every State of this Union. Sooner or later we must act on this great and important question—a question which reaches every home in this land, from the fact that it reaches every child in the Nation.

It appears to me that the consideration of this question as to the adoption of this resolution should occupy a very short time and that the resolution should meet the approval of this entire House. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that this resolution meets the approval of the Senate. It meets the approval of Senator PAGE, the author of a bill on this subject.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I do.

Mr. MOORE. This bill proposes to create a commission?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. It does.

Mr. MOORE. To take up the question of national aid in the matter of vocational education?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. It does.

Mr. MOORE. And proposes to expend $15,000 for the purposes of the commission?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman say whether the appointment of such a commission would mean that bills like the Page bill and the Lever bill will be considered by the commission, or will they be brought into the House and brought up for consideration here before the commission reports?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I understand, sir, that that commission will merely make or submit, after thorough investigation, a plan for a bill on vocational education.

Mr. MOORE. The Page bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. It has passed the Senate.

Mr. MOORE. And the Lever bill is before the House?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. The Lever bill is also pending before the Senate.

Mr. MOORE. The Page bill has not been before the House, but the Lever bill has?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Yes; and passed the House.

Mr. MOORE. And these bills differ upon certain material points?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Yes; they differ upon certain material points, upon which both Senator HOKE SMITH and Senator PAGE differ.

Mr. MOORE. Would the appointment of the commission mean that the question of vocational training would be taken up anew, independent of those bills and without reference to those bills?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I think so.

Mr. MOORE. Then we would treat those bills as not being longer under consideration by Congress, but would wait until a new plan is reported?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. That is my idea, that the bill on vocational education is to remain as it is and not be acted upon until this commission presents its plan. I do not think that observation appertains to the Lever bill, however.

Mr. MOORE. Can there be any understanding that action will be deferred upon those two bills until they, along with any new project, can be considered by this commission?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. My understanding is that it is already understood that action on the vocational educational bill which has passed the Senate will be deferred until this plan shall have been submitted.

Mr. MOORE. Then we may have the benefit of the views of this commission before any further action is had on either of the pending bills?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I think the Lever bill is a bill that is not to be considered, perhaps, in this plan of vocational education. I am quite sure that is Senator SMITH's opinion.

Mr. MOORE. I want to know, if the gentleman can give the information, whether there will be an understanding that we shall not take up the question of vocational education until this commission shall have reported.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. So far as a man can say so, that is my understanding, that the vocational education bill will not be urged until this plan, to be submitted by this commission, has been presented to the House.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it true that Senator PAGE, the author of that bill, agreed to the passage of this resolution?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Yes; he did. I am much obliged to the gentleman for his inquiry.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I do.

Mr. HAUGEN. Is not the status this, that the Lever bill passed the House?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. And the Page bill passed the Senate?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. And it went to conference, and has been considered for as long as a year?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Now, here is a proposition to appoint a commission, that will delay action, to begin with, up to December 1, or whatever date is fixed in the resolution, or for whatever time is consumed by the commission. And is it not a proposition to delay the work rather than to expedite it?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. As I understand it, it is a proposition not to delay the work, but it is a proposition to urge the work forward and to give it proper consideration.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will ask the gentleman if this matter has not been under consideration by the committees both of the Senate and House, and if they have not given it the most exhaustive investigation for years past, so that no additional information can be had through any commission? It would simply get us further away from the subject which we are trying to reach.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I am sorry to say that I disagree with my distinguished friend. The very object of the introduction of this resolution is to secure a more speedy result. There are differences of opinion even as to the Page bill and the necessity of it, and it is desired that the subject be carefully considered by a commission of nine, who will give their thoughtful attention to the plan which is to be submitted, so that a bill may be presented that will meet with the approval of both the Senate and House.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], in what he said, intimated his belief that the provisions of this resolution, if adopted, would affect the subjects of the Lever bill. I want to ask the gentleman if I am right in my assumption that the subjects treated in the Lever bill will not be investigated by this proposed commission?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. The gentleman is correct. They will not be investigated at all.

Mr. BATHRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BATHRICK. I notice that the Senate in this resolution has stricken out the words "not later than December 1" and amended the resolution so as to read "or as soon thereafter as practicable." What was the purpose of that?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. The purpose was this: This matter is just being brought before the House now. It is impossible for that commission to take up this great question and formulate a plan by the 1st of December.

Mr. BATHRICK. I did not finish my question. Why not have it read "not later than January 1" or "February 1," or have some definite time fixed?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Or "during the next session"?

Mr. BATHRICK. Or "during the next session," or something of that kind?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. The committee had that very point under consideration, and they were united in the conclusion that these words were the best words to adopt.

Mr. BATHRICK. Is it the gentleman's impression that that commission will report early in the next session?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I think they will report at the very earliest possible moment.

Mr. WILLIS. While the gentleman is yielding I want to ask him a question or two. I understand that the Lever bill, providing for a system of agricultural education, has passed the House and is pending in the Senate. Is that true?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. That is true. It has passed the House, but it has not passed the Senate.

Mr. WILLIS. I said it has passed the House and is pending before the Senate.

Mr. HAUGEN. Not in this session of Congress.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It has not been introduced.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Another bill, incorporating perhaps somewhat different ideas than those incorporated in the original bill, has been introduced in the House by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], and that bill has been introduced in the Senate by Senator SMITH.

Mr. WILLIS. Then the correct statement is that the Lever bill, providing for a system of agricultural education, passed the House in the last Congress?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. And the Page bill, providing for a system of vocational training, passed the Senate in the last Congress?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. I am asking these questions because I am greatly interested in both these branches of work. How will the passage of this resolution in any way expedite this matter? Does not the gentleman think these two committees, the Committee on Agriculture of the House and the Committee on Education and Labor of the Senate, that have already given a great deal of attention to these subjects, can more quickly reach a conclusion than a new commission can?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. My belief is that they did not reach the same conclusion as that of my distinguished friend, because they favor this very resolution. It is thought that this plan, submitted by nine gentlemen who would go into the question with all carefulness and diligence and thoroughness, would be better than the other and would meet with the approbation of both the Senate and the House.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I will.

Mr. POWERS. Is it not the purpose to have nine men appointed who have given years of study to this particular proposition, men chosen from among the best educationists in the country?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. That is correct.

Mr. POWERS. And these men, of necessity, will be much better prepared to deal with this question than the committees of the House, swamped with numerous other duties to perform.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I will say to the gentleman that that statement fully expresses the idea.

Mr. HAUGEN. Let me suggest that the very gentlemen referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky have appeared before the committee of the House and also of the Senate, and numerous volumes of testimony have been printed, and there is no new information to be had on the subject.

With the new language injected into this bill it delays action indefinitely, for it leaves the matter to the discretion of this commission. You have injected new language which practically leaves it to the discretion of this one commission, and that commission may see fit to report at the next session of Congress, or it may take years from now.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that I apprehend the President will appoint capable, earnest gentlemen to consider this very important question. I say this, that I believe the commission will push the matter to the limit, and come to a conclusion at the very earliest possible moment.

Mr. HAUGEN. After all, it leaves it to the discretion of the commission.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Georgia has given a wrong impression in regard to the status of the Lever bill, and as to the effect the passage of this resolution may have upon it. The Lever bill was passed in the last Congress by this House and went to the Senate. The Page bill was passed by the Senate with the Lever bill as an amendment. As thus amended, or the two incorporated into one, the bill did not pass the House. The Lever bill has been reintroduced in this Congress, has been considered by the Committee on Agriculture, and has already been reported favorably. I want the House to understand, if we pass this resolution, it does not and ought not to affect the status of the Lever bill. It is not a vocational educational bill. It provides for an appropriation for practical demonstration and instruction, in the field, as you may say, to farmers in their practical work. It is not vocational education. The Page bill does provide for vocational education, and there is considerable difference of opinion among members of the Committees on Agriculture in the House and in the Senate as to what kind of a bill along those lines ought to be framed. In my opinion this commission may very well be appointed to study this great question, and give the committees of the House and the Senate the benefit of its research; but I want it distinctly understood that the Lever bill, which is not a vocational educational bill, will not be influenced or affected by this resolution, and that the Committee on Agriculture proposes at the first opportunity to bring up the Lever bill.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, that is what I tried to make plain to the House.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Georgia will yield, I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Certainly I yield.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has stated that his committee has had consideration of the Lever bill. May I inquire about what expenditure of money will be entailed if that bill passes?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, the Lever bill calls for an appropriation of $10,000 a year for each State for extension purposes, and for an increase of $300,000 a year for 10 years, or until the total increase reaches $3,000,000, making a total of $3,480,000.

Mr. HAMMOND. A year?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes; finally, at the end of 10 years.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is the maximum?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is the maximum to be expended in the States in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture; but this increase above $10,000 a year will be conditional upon the State appropriating an equal amount.

Mr. HAMMOND. The point I want to get at is this, that there will be finally an expenditure of something like $3,500,000 a year under the Lever bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes; to be exact, $3,480,000.

Mr. HAMMOND. Can the gentleman tell me about what the proposed expenditure will be under the vocational educational bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. It could only be estimated, but it was thought it would call for $14,000,000 or $15,000,000 annually, and the Page bill involved a great and complicated plan.

Mr. HAMMOND. So that the two measures together will approximately take some $20,000,000 a year?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes; but their purposes are entirely different and distinct, and I was afraid that if the House accepts the statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES], or if it is permitted to go unchallenged, when the Lever bill comes before the House, as it will very soon, from the Committee on Agriculture, that it may be thought it is improperly before the House. That bill is not a vocational educational bill; it will provide for practical assistance, by way of advice, to farmers, right on the farms. Vocational education is good and ought to be provided for by Federal law which will carry sufficient appropriation, but plans suggested involve so much, and call for such large sums of money, that it is advisable, it seems to me, to have the entire subject thoroughly investigated and the best possible plan suggested to Congress. The Committee on Agriculture will finally frame the bill for vocational education and present it to the House; the committee needs all information that can be obtained.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I agree with the gentleman from Michigan, and I intended to convey the very idea that he has expressed. His idea conforms altogether with mine.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 45 minutes remaining.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I do.

Mr. HARDY. Has the gentleman considered that farming is one vocation, and other vocations would come in on the same level of right to be cared for, and that if we start into this matter with the prospect of $14,000,000 to be annually expended by the Federal Government we are entering on a wide field, which in the near future will place the general welfare of the people in the care of the Federal Government and end State care for their own citizenship?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I will answer the gentleman by saying that is one of the very objects in appointing this commission to conduct this investigation.

Mr. HARDY. Just one question. Do we need any commission to tell us what the effect of such a program would be if we go into all fields of vocation?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. It seems as though the Senate thought so. Mr. PAGE, who introduced this bill on the subject of vocation, thought so, and Senator HOKE SMITH, who introduced the Lever bill in the Senate, thought so.

Mr. HARDY. Does not the gentleman from Georgia see where it will go without the aid of a commission?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I am in favor of a commission, because I believe it is the right course, and there will be men upon the commission of such information and of such experience that they will facilitate the settlement of this great question.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman has no apprehension, in the event this commission is appointed and the purposes these gentlemen who are probably to be appointed have in view are carried out, that eventually the control and regulation of schools of the character here proposed to be established will be under the control of Congress and the Government of the United States?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Not at all. It is expected that the State autonomy will not be affected, and that is one question that will be considered by this commission.

Mr. BARTLETT. If my colleague will pardon me, I want to say to him I know that is the expectation, and I will say to my colleague they could not get such a proposition ordinarily unless they claimed that to be their purpose; but from correspondence with quite a number of men—presidents, teachers, and others—the purpose seems to be to have the Treasury of the United States opened for this purpose, and an indifference is manifested—I do not mean by my colleague, but the gentlemen with whom I have corresponded—an indifference is manifested as to what power should exercise the authority in controlling and regulating these schools, and for one I do not mean to say that I am going to oppose this resolution, but for one I shall never bring myself to the point of voting for any proposition that will transfer from the local authorities of the State to the national authorities the regulation over their schools.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ABERCROMBIE].

Mr. GOULDEN. Will my friend yield for one question?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I yield for one question.

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman why he has stricken out this definite period of December 1 and inserted "as soon thereafter as possible"?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. From the fact that it was impossible for the commission to report by December 1.

Mr. GOULDEN. Why not fix it some definite time—February 1 or March 1? I have had some experience with these commissions and they run along almost indefinitely, and I think it is well to fix some definite date.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I assure the gentleman that the Committee on Education considered every possible feature of that question, and they thought it was best to give that latitude, believing they would present their report at the very earliest possible moment.

Mr. GOULDEN. I am willing to yield to the superior judgment of the committee.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ABERCROMBIE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 38 minutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Flood of Virginia having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 99) to fix the times and places of holding district court for the district of Arizona.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Mr. Chairman, the Democratic platform of 1912 contained the following declaration:

We recognize the value of vocational education, and urge Federal appropriations for such training and extension teaching in agriculture, in cooperation with the several States.

The pending resolution was introduced in the Senate by Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and, as amended by the Committee on Education of the House, is in the following language:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint a commission consisting of nine, whose duty it shall be to consider the need and report a plan December 1 next, or as soon thereafter as practicable, for national aid to vocational education.

Sec. 2. That the members of said commission shall be paid their actual travelling expenses and subsistence while engaged upon the work of said commission.

Sec. 3. That said commission shall have authority to employ a secretary and to make such investigations of the respective States as they may deem necessary, the entire expense of the commission not to exceed the sum of $15,000.

Sec. 4. That the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to meet the expenses of the said commission.

Every Member on this side of the aisle is committed to the policy which this resolution seeks to inaugurate, and is therefore under obligation to give it prompt and serious consideration. It is the hope of the committee that the subject will appeal with equal interest to the Members on that side of the aisle, for if there is a matter of paramount concern to all of our people, regardless of party, creed, or race, it is their adequate preparation for productive capacity and efficient citizenship.

OUR NATURAL RESOURCES.

In natural resources that portion of the earth's surface embraced within the boundaries of the United States of America has been "favored by heaven o'er all the world beside." No other country can boast a greater variety or a more bountiful supply of nature's gifts. None other possesses soils more diversified and fertile, minerals more numerous and valuable, forests more extensive and useful, streams more plentiful and serviceable, climatic conditions more varied and healthful. Sky and air, earth and sea, forest and stream, mountain and valley, soil and climate, all conspire to make our land a delightful habitation for man.

HUMAN DEVELOPMENT.

And the greatest of nature's productions is man. Man himself is the most important of our natural resources and his development is inseparable from the development and use of those things over which he has been given dominion. Indeed, those things can be developed and appropriated only to the extent that man develops himself. Self-development is peculiar to man, and it is one of nature's laws that his development must precede the development of brute life and the utilization of things inanimate.

The power to acquire and utilize knowledge is the characteristic which, more than all others, save his spiritual nature, distinguishes man from other branches of the animal kingdom, and through the exercise of this power he has made wonderful progress in civilization. Nowhere else in the world has this progress been greater than in the United States of America. Considering the obstacles to be overcome, the hardships to be endured, and the problems to be solved, our advancement in commerce, industry, and government has been marvelous.

A PRIME REQUISITE FOR DEVELOPMENT.

But marvelous as has been this advancement we, as a people, are still lacking in one of the requisites for complete development, namely, a thoroughly and generally efficient citizenship—a citizenship whose masses have been adequately trained individually and collectively to live sanely and ethically, and to utilize wisely and in fullest measure the unrivaled natural advantages with which our land has been endowed. In other words, except here and there, our progress in educational achievement has not been such as to render certain or possible the best of development—civic, social, or economic.

TWO TYPES OF EDUCATION.

That education which has for its chief aim preparation for social life through personal culture is called "liberal education"; that which has for its primary object the development of productive capacity through the cultivation of individual efficiency for the performance of the world's work is designated "vocational education." Except as preparation for the so-called learned professions of law, medicine, and theology, most of the education of the past has been liberal rather than vocational, and has been given in colleges and universities, institutions that are beyond the reach of the average man. Within modern times certain other callings, notably engineering, architure, journalism, and so forth, have come to be regarded as learned professions, and for preparation for these provision is also made in the higher institutions. The tendency is to extend the designation of "learned profession" to all occupations for admission to which special academic or vocational training is generally conceded to be necessary.

Much of the so-called "liberal education" given in colleges and universities and most of such education given in elementary and secondary schools is largely vocational. All of it that serves as a necessary foundation for or as a natural concomitant of the preparation for one's life work, whatever such life work may be, is essentially vocational.

On the other hand, much of the training designated as "vocational education" is liberal. All of it that tends to widen one's mental horizon, to expand one's store of general information, to broaden one's sympathies, is essentially liberal.

Indeed, it is impossible to determine definitely just where liberal education ceases to be vocational or where vocational education ceases to be liberal. The two are so related, so inseparably connected, that it is impossible to draw a line of demarcation.

As before stated, the distinction is to be found in the chief aim, in the dominant purpose. If that be personal culture, the education is liberal; if that be preparation for efficiency in one's occupation, it is vocational.

Until within a recent period, except for the learned professions, the chief aim of education the world over has been cultural, the vocational feature being minimized. Especially has this been the case in our own country. It has been taken for granted that our youths would naturally choose or drift into the calling for which they were best adapted. As a result there are and have been countless misfits, millions of failures, and much of unhappiness, poverty, and crime.

EDUCATIVE AGENCIES.

Educative powers and processes are broadly distributed. Of the numerous agencies for education the most potent are home, school, church, press, stage, library, occupation, workshop, playground, and community life. Each is supplemented and reinforced by some or all of the others.

The distribution of educative functions among these agencies of society is continually shifting. Under the rapidly changing social and industrial conditions of modern life new and perplexing adjustments are constantly taking place. As a natural result some of these agencies are growing less powerful as educative forces, while others are becoming more effectual in influencing and fashioning the lives of the people.

When the various means upon which we have relied for incidental and informal training in the vocations have proved to be inadequate to meet the demands of an increasingly complex social environment, the failing functions have been transferred by common consent to the school, the public school—the one educative instrumentality that is completely under governmental direction. This changing of conditions, this breaking away from long-established customs, this shifting of the offices and processes of vocational training from former agencies to the school, has produced one of the most perplexing of educational problems. Indeed, the most important problem confronting State and Nation to-day is that of providing adequate vocational instruction for the masses of the people. It overshadows tariff reductions, currency revisions, and preparations for war, for upon its wise solution depend the peace, prosperity, and happiness of our people individually and collectively. The person who is adequately trained vocationally is qualified both for efficiency in citizenship and for success in life.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I will.

Mr. MOORE. Considering the magnitude of the question, does the gentleman think this commission can complete its work and give to Congress an intelligent report by the 1st of December, as provided in the resolution?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. In my opinion it is doubtful, and it is for that reason that the committee recommends that the resolution be amended so as to extend the date somewhat.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman from Alabama allow me to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Briefly. But I will try to do that later myself.

Mr. FESS. I was going to say that the original resolution was introduced and passed the Senate in April, and the 1st of December was a sufficient time if it had come over here and been acted upon promptly, but now it can not possibly be done by the 1st of December.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I thank my friend for his suggestion. As amended the resolution calls for a report by the 1st day of December or as soon thereafter as practicable.

THE NEW EDUCATION.

The world is coming to a realization of the fact that the vocationally educated man or woman succeeds best in business and industry as well as in the so-called learned professions; that commercial and industrial callings are as important and honorable as are civic, cultural, and professional pursuits, requiring as high a type of intelligence and character; and that if, as individuals or as a people, we would equal or surpass our competitors in skillfulness we must possess equal or superior skill. [Applause.]

Experience has shown that the chances for success and distinction of the person who possesses native talent alone, whatever may be his occupation, are far inferior to those of the person who combines with native ability the systematic and disciplinary training of a thorough and wisely selected course in vocational instruction. An education of the eye to see, a training of the hand to do, a teaching of the mind to think, a discipline of the will to execute—these, combined with a properly cultivated conscience, are absolutely essential in this age of specialization in material development. [Applause.]

The old type of education, which was dominantly liberal in its purpose, no longer suffices, and is called upon to make place for the new; and the new type, which must be dominantly vocational in its aim, will be varied and specialized, as specialized and as varied as are the occupations of the human race.

The task with which we are confronted is a most difficult one and raises many questions that educational tradition and civic experience do not answer. Lawmaker and schoolmaster must cooperate in finding a solution. Meantime our school system enters upon a period of transition. Unfortunately the situation is complicated by the confusion incident to the conflict of two sets of ideals, one of them old and rooted in tradition, the other young and extremely vigorous. As is usually the case under such conditions, sane reasoning is hindered by the controversies engendered.

SUGGESTED SOLUTIONS.

Various methods have been suggested for the solution of this problem. By some students of education and sociology it is contended that the solution is to be found in the revival and extension of the apprenticeship system; by some that it lies in the establishment of independent trade schools; by some that it can best be secured through vocational courses of study given by specially trained teachers in the schools already in operation.

There is a difference of opinion also as to the attitude that the Federal Government should assume in the matter of providing vocational training for the masses. Some contend that it should remain a State function, while others, perhaps a majority, favor national aid. Personally I believe that it is as much to the interest of a State that the people of every other State should be adequately educated as it is to the interest of a county in a State that the people of every other county in that State should be properly trained. If it is the duty of the richer counties to assist the poorer counties in the State, equally is it the duty of the wealthier States to assist the less wealthy States in the Nation. This is essential to national solidarity and national efficiency. [Applause.]

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. HARDY. Does not that same reasoning apply to all education? And under that reasoning, would not you establish national schools from A to Z?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. In great measure the same reasoning does apply to all education, and I favor Federal appropriations for general educational purposes; that is, I favor cooperation of State and Nation in the support of education, especially elementary and secondary education of a vocational type.

It is probable that the solution will be found in a wise utilization of all of the methods suggested. Our commercial, industrial, occupational, and educational conditions are so numerous, diversified, and complex as to render it practically impossible to apply everywhere exactly the same method to the solution of any social problem. But so far as it is possible there should be uniformity of method, and so far as they can be utilized existing agencies should be employed. Such a policy will conduce to economy in both school and governmental administration.

RESULTS OF VOCATIONAL TRAINING.

Vocational education of the right kind for everybody would remedy many untoward conditions, check many alarming tendencies. Briefly stated, these would be some of the results of such education:

First. It would hold in the schools for a longer period the millions of children who under existing conditions withdraw at about 14 years of age, vocationless, aimless, and helpless. The majority now quit school at that age, most of them to follow juvenile occupations—blind alleys that lead nowhere.

Second. It would equip for productivity and self-support a majority of the 95 per cent of the people who are now forced to enter upon life's work untrained vocationally. It is estimated that under present methods not more than 5 per cent receive special vocational training. Preparation for life is the great desideratum.

Third. It would check the rapid and alarming drift of population from the country to the city, and thereby promote the development of agriculture, one of the results of which would be a reduction in the cost of living. The country boy moves to the city because he believes that there the possibilities of success are greater.

In former times one or two members of a farmer's family moved to the city—now the entire family moves. In 252 counties of the United States, nearly all of them rural, the population is less than it was 30 years ago; in numerous others it is stationary in rural communities. If this tendency is not checked, we will ultimately cease to be a food-exporting Nation. We may become a food-importing people in a country whose agricultural possibilities can not be estimated.

Agriculture is a national problem, and the people must be taught what is possible in agriculture. Soil depletion must be supplanted by soil repletion. Let us not forget that food production must precede food consumption.

France, the greatest producer nation in the world, has in great measure solved the problem of agriculture. She maintains numerous agricultural schools. Why not follow her example?

Fourth. It would tend to make producers rather than consumers of the boys and girls reared in the cities, a large percentage of whom are foredoomed under existing conditions to lives of idleness and failure.

The city youth, no less than the country child, suffers from lack of vocational guidance and preparation. Only 38 per cent of our people are breadwinners. The Nation's greatest task is to convert its idlers into producers.

Fifth. It would greatly ameliorate the condition of those who labor, whether in mine or factory, in countinghouse or field, in commerce or industry. The sons and daughters of the men who toil should not longer be neglected.

Every child should be guaranteed an equal chance in life with every other child. For the untrained there can be no equality of opportunity.

Sixth. It would diminish poverty and crime, which in large measure are due to lack of definite occupation and inadequate vocational instruction.

Pauperism and criminality are usually the results of untrained or misdirected energy.

Criminals and beggars come chiefly from the ranks of the unskilled and vocationless.

Ignorance and idleness, shiftlessness and inefficiency, imperil State and Nation. Prevention is the remedy. [Applause.]

A FOREIGN VIEW.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is impossible in the time allotted for me to enumerate the benefits that would accrue to individuals, to the States, and to the Republic from the operation of a properly organized, adequately supported, and efficiently administered system of vocational education.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt my colleague just a moment?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Yes.

Mr. CLAYTON. I understand that two propositions have had the consideration of the Congress, one known as the Lever bill and the other known as the Page bill, and that the object of the pending resolution which my colleague now advocates is to have appointed by the President a commission of experts who have given thought and study to the matter to consider the subject and bring to the Congress a plan for our intelligent guidance, so that we may formulate proper legislation on the matter of vocational education. And I want to say, Mr. Speaker, before my colleague answers that question, that I am in hearty sympathy with the object of his resolution. And I want to say further to the House, because he is too modest to say it himself, and perhaps the House does not know it, that there is no Member here who has devoted more years and more intelligent thought to the great and overshadowing question of education than my colleague who now addresses the House. He has distinguished himself in the line of educational endeavor in my own State, and I am glad that he is here to contribute his services to this great cause of the country at large. [Applause.]

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I thank my colleague and friend for his compliment, and in further reply I will say that he is entirely correct as to the object of the pending resolution. There is great diversity of opinion among the people and among the Members of Congress as to what is the best method of procedure. Some claim that we should enact the Lever bill, others that we ought to pass the Page bill. Whatever legislation is enacted will result in great and increasing expenditures on the part of the Government. Congress will be called upon ultimately for very large appropriations, and the Committee on Education is of the opinion that we ought not to run the risk of making a mistake in the very beginning; that we ought to know where we are going before we start; that before the Government enters upon the policy of making large expenditures for education in any form, time should be taken to have a committee of experts, as is suggested by this resolution, investigate the subject thoroughly and recommend a plan of action.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I will.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Is it the idea of the gentleman from Alabama that this commission will take under consideration matters in the scope of both the Page bill and the Smith bill?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. That is my idea. I believe it ought to do so, because agricultural training is as much vocational education as is any other form of occupational instruction. Indeed, in my opinion, agricultural training is the most important form of vocational education.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. I understand the idea is that the proposed commission shall take up for consideration matters of a larger scope, including matters of law, for example, and things of that kind.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. That is not my idea, and that is not the contention of the committee. How much time have I left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ALEXANDER). The gentleman has three minutes left.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I see very clearly, Mr. Chairman, that I shall not have time to complete the line of thought that I had in mind.

Mr. ELDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I will yield for a question.

Mr. ELDER. If this is started, and the Federal Government should start the general control of the schools, does the gentleman think that we people of the South could afford to turn over our public schools to the Federal Government?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I do not think we could, and I do not advocate that, and this committee does not advocate that. I favor Federal aid under State supervision; but I will answer that question more fully later when I come to it.

Mr. ELDER. Does not the gentleman think that would be the logical conclusion of it?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I do not. The Federal Government is making appropriations to-day, and has for 50 years, for education in every State of the Union. The land-grant colleges of the various States are supported in large measure by Federal appropriations, and we have had no trouble there in the matter of Federal intervention or interference.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, in view of the interruptions that have been made of my colleague, and in view of the most excellent argument that he is giving us, that his time be extended for 30 minutes.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I should appreciate that, although I do not ask it.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask it, Mr. Chairman. I know the modesty of my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON]?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I hope there will be no objection to that. I unite in the gentleman's request.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the time of the gentleman will be extended 30 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. While in a few widely separated communities considerable progress has been made in the establishment of vocational schools, it is recognized by students of education that the task is only begun. This neglect of duty upon our part not only weakens our capacity for internal production and trade, but also gives encouragement to our competitors in international commerce and hampers us in our efforts to secure our share of the business of the world.

Not long after the St. Louis Exposition had been closed certain German critics who had visited the exposition reported to their countrymen that, notwithstanding our superior natural advantages and wonderful industrial achievements, Germany had nothing to fear from the United States in competition for international trade. With all of our advantages, they found offsetting disadvantages sufficient, in their opinion, to warrant them in reassuring their fellow citizens of Germany's ability successfully to continue to compete with us in the markets of the world.

Perhaps the most significant of the offsetting disadvantages reported was that described as "a feeling of complacent satisfaction with everything American." As an evidence of this "complacent satisfaction with everything American" they called attention to our lack of adequate provision for the industrial training of the masses and to our "reliance on a general and more or less superficial education, together with natural adaptation." Overconfidence and inadequate vocational education were, in their opinion, sufficient to retard greatly the development of the most favored nation on earth.

It behooves us to investigate the conditions upon which this intelligent criticism is based.

PHYSICAL RESOURCES AND INDUSTRIAL TRAINING.

In this connection permit me to quote from Industrial Education, by Dr. Harlow Stafford Person, of Dartmouth College:

Had these German critics—

He says—

wished to give an analysis of the advantages possessed by the United States they could have done no better than to adopt * * * the analysis presented by our own Federal census. The industrial strength of the United States is to be attributed to five primary causes:

1. Agricultural and similar resources; in the production of wheat, corn, cotton, animal products, and forest products the United States stands first.

2. Mineral resources; in the production of coal, iron ore, and copper, basic materials of industry, the United States stands first, and in the production of the precious metals ranks with the leading countries.

3. The development and perfection of her transportation system the United States possessing more miles of railroad than all the countries of Europe combined, maintaining lower rates than obtain in any other country.

4. Freedom of trade between all the States and Territories, which combines into one commercial area regions as diversified climatically as Italy and Scandinavia, thus forming the greatest home market in the world.

5. A doubly selected population possessing a freedom from inherited and over-conservative ideas; energetic, active, adventurous, but not undisciplined.

For a similar analysis of the disadvantages suggested—

they (the German critics) might have offered the following:

1. The very prodigality of nature in this virgin region has made the acquisition of wealth so easy that there has developed on the part of the American people a liking only for the accomplishment of big things at whatever cost—a wasteful disposition. Such a wealth of resources has been offered to the relatively sparse population of this extensive region, that nature has in effect borne the cost of this waste—as in the exploitation of forest resources—and has developed a careless confidence. But now that the surplus of natural wealth has been generally appropriated success must come to the individual, not as a matter of the mere further appropriation of nature's wealth, but by the creation of wealth by effort. Under these new conditions a careless, wasteful disposition handicaps the American in his competition with more thrifty peoples.

3. The physical wealth of the country has been so reflected in a high standard of living on the part of all classes, in large profits and high wages, that success in competition by the cutting of wage cost, on the one hand, or by accepting decreased profits, on the other hand, can be accomplished only with great confusion.

4. The vast supplies of cheap power and cheap raw material have been already appropriated by a limited number of industrial explorers, and their future value already capitalized in "prospective earnings" and distributed by "business enterprise" to the public. To the great mass of enterprisers in the United States, therefore, their properties do not represent nature's bounty but capital invested. Nature's bounty has been gathered in in advance by comparatively few. For the great number of enterprisers to conserve invested capital means to resist any considerable decrease in profits based on values partly artificial. The necessity of maintaining fictitious values is a handicap in international competition.

5. Notwithstanding their great system of public education, the American people do not yet possess, and do not seem to appreciate the value of, the most efficient human instrument for increasing competitive efficiency under given conditions of natural resources—a system of technical education. This the Germans do possess, and it gives them an advantage in competition with the Americans.

In short—

the German observers console themselves by recognition of the plain fact that now, except for a few world monopolies, such as the mineral industry, the profit on invested capital for the individual producer in the United States is narrow; that the German or any other people, in spite of inferior natural resources, by careful, economical methods, by the development of the greatest skill not only in the fashioning of goods but in the art of exploiting markets, may compete on equal terms with a people possessing superior resources but self-confident, complaisant, and disdainful of effort.

For a continuance of the ability to cope with us in international trade Germany relies not upon superior natural advantages—her resources are very meager in comparison with ours; not upon extraordinary climatic or agricultural conditions—her climate is rigorous and her soils are unfertile; not upon a rapidly increasing population—no other country excels ours in that respect; not upon her supply of raw materials—most of her raw materials are imported from other countries, some of them from our own; not upon a superior type of citizenship—in grade of citizenship America is unexcelled.

Germany places reliance in her one advantage—an acquired advantage—a highly developed system of technical (vocational) education. And she competes with us not only in foreign markets, but also in our home market. Even in America the best recommendation that a manufactured article can bear is expressed in these words: "Made in Germany."

What is true of Germany is true in great degree of several other foreign countries. It is clear, therefore, that we can not longer rely entirely upon our unrivaled natural resources for success in the markets of the world. Our chief resource, the children of the land, must be trained as well or better than the children of other lands. Nothing short of this will suffice.

OUR EDUCATIONAL POLICY.

Our educational policy, whether State or National, should be all-comprehensive in scope and extremely individualistic in application.

Unwise and full of error is the contention that the citizen is under obligation to provide educational advantages for his own children, and his own children only. Equally untenable is the contention when applied to States. Woe unto that government which makes provision for courthouse, prison, and scaffold and at the same time neglects adequately to train its children for self-support and for the responsibilities of citizenship!

If there is a matter of supreme importance to both State and Nation, surely that matter is the establishment and maintenance in each of the States of a well-organized, adequately supported, and efficiently administered school system—a system which will guarantee to every child such training of head and hand and heart as will fit for intelligent, independent, and patriotic citizenship and as will qualify for successful effort in the occupations of life.

This should be our educational ideal; this our educational policy.

EDUCATIONAL CONDITIONS IN THE SOUTH.

Each of the States has established a system of public schools, but this ideal has been attained in few, if any. Certainly no Southern State has reached that standard. And I will speak now of educational conditions in that section.

Prior to the War between the States conditions in the South, civic, social, and economic, were not such as to conduce to the development of the doctrine of universal education at public expense. Not until the close of the period of reconstruction did that principle take deep root, and not until within a recent period did it become popular. Even now there are many people who, if they do not openly oppose, are extremely lukewarm in their advocacy of government-supported schools for all of the people.

This attitude upon their part is due chiefly to the fear that the education of the negro along old-time conventional lines will tend to disturb social, civic, and industrial conditions, and thereby render more acute the already tensely acute racial situation. That such fear exists, and that upon the part of many it is an honest apprehension, there is no question.

Our policy relative to negro education in the South has to do directly with several perplexing problems, among which are the labor problem and the problem of the adjustment of the races. Every section is engaged in the solution of a labor problem, and every section is coming to have an increasing interest in the solution of the problem of the races.

Each of these problems calls for prompt and serious consideration. Alike to both races do they appeal, and so related, so inseparably interwoven are they, that it is impossible to consider them as distinct propositions. With us the labor problem is largely a race problem, and for the same reasons the race problem is largely a labor problem.

On account of the enormous influx of people from other nations, amounting to more than a million annually, the problem of labor as it relates to the entire country is growing in complexity. Indeed, labor and capital seem to be destined to the waging of an unending contest. At times the fierceness of the conflict shakes the foundations of government, threatens a disruption of business and industry, and presents an appalling spectacle of man's inhumanity to man. Students of government, lovers of justice, friends of humanity, all have been shocked and dismayed.

The South's labor problem is peculiar to the section, and grows out of the occupancy of the same territory by two very dissimilar races, one of which was for generations under involuntary servitude to the other. It would be useless to undertake in this presence to place the burden of blame for the existence of slavery. Suffice it to say that all impartial students of history are agreed that the sections were jointly responsible, and that so long as slavery was financially profitable, neither section questioned either the ethics or the wisdom of its continuance.

While its abolition was accomplished through the most stupendous expenditure of blood and treasure known to history, the people of both sections, of the South no less than of the North, rejoice that human slavery no longer exists. [Applause.]

SOME RESULTS OF SLAVERY.

The effect of slavery upon labor was to degrade it—to degrade it in the estimation of each race. To the white man, labor, especially physical labor, came to be regarded as fit only for the slave. To the negro, it came to be looked upon as an attribute of slavery, and therefore to be despised and evaded. Is it any wonder, then, that freedom brought to both races economic confusion and industrial disaster? The negro regarded it as freedom from work; the white man as subjection to an ignoble existence. The natural, the inevitable result was many mistakes upon the part of each. Each suffers to-day from those mistakes, though many of them were committed almost a half century ago.

But, Mr. Chairman, the southern whites and blacks were not the only people who blundered in the beginning of freedom. The greatest of the mistakes of that exciting period was committed by those who administered the affairs of the Federal Government. The sudden and wholesale enfranchisement of three millions of people steeped in ignorance and superstition, and who had received no preparation whatever for the grave and exacting duties of citizenship, was the colossal mistake of the times, and was as unfair to the ex-slave as it was unjust and cruel to his former master. It drove a poisoned dagger to the heart of the white South, and retarded temporarily, if not for all time, the civic growth and educational development of both races. It complicated if, indeed, it did not create the race problem. The disastrous effects of that stupendous error are still visible and burdensome. For almost 50 years they have obscured the visions of men.

THE RACE PROBLEM.

And there is a race problem. Close our eyes to it as we may, try to evade it as we will, the problem remains. To teach two dissimilar races to live upon the same soil in harmony and mutual helpfulness, to develop without friction a race within a race, to establish a civilization within a civilization—that seems to be the problem of the races. There has been nothing like it in history; there is no lamp of experience by which to guide our footsteps.

The problem is not open to immediate and complete solution. If it is ever solved, the solution will come through cooperative efforts upon the part of intelligent and patriotic representatives of both races and all sections. Great intelligence, unswerving honesty, unflinching patriotism, wisest discretion, and untiring consecration will be necessary. There will be needed also much of toleration, patience, confidence, earnestness, courage, and true religion.

In other words, for the race problem, as with all other problems, there is no solution outside of education. This education must be of the right kind and must be universally applied. The most ignorant are not the most efficient, even in the performance of so-called menial tasks. On the contrary, the most ignorant are the most inefficient and at the same time the most immoral, the most criminal, the most dangerous to society and government.

Every white home in the Southland is jeopardized by the presence of the great horde of ignorant, superstitious, unclean, disease-breeding members of that race. The negro cooks our food, nurses our children, washes our clothing, tends our homes, and in self-defense, if not from a spirit of altruism and patriotism, it devolves upon the dominant race in both State and Nation to see to it that he is taught how to live intelligently, morally, and hygienically. He must be trained for his environment, and his education must be industrial, technical, and moral rather than literary, professional, and cultural. [Applause.]

NATIONAL AID NECESSARY.

While each of the Southern States has recognized the necessity for universal education at public expense, while each is striving heroically to meet its obligations in that respect, and while under existing conditions each is making commendable progress, in many of them the task is only begun. Indeed, to students of economics it is coming to be clear that the task of providing adequate educational facilities for all of the people is beyond the power of some of the States to perform.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, in that connection I want to ask the gentleman if we did not make a great mistake in not passing what is called the Blair educational bill, so far as the interests of the South were concerned?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. In my opinion, yes; and I may say that it was then, as a schoolboy, that I became an advocate of Federal aid to education.

Mr. KINDEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I do.

Mr. KINDEL. If you had better freight rates in the South, would you not fare better in your section? Is not the lack of better freight rates a hindrance to the development of the South, the same as it is of the West?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I think, perhaps, that does contribute somewhat to the material conditions there.

Mr. KINDEL. And is not that one reason why Germany and other European countries are better situated than we? Take, for example, the parcel post. You can ship an 11-pound package by parcel post from Germany to this country for 81 cents. The same package sent from here to Salt Lake City, for example, would cost $1.32.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I can not answer that question. I am not so well posted on parcel-post rates as is the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. KINDEL. In addition to vocational education, would it not be well to add commercial geography, as you might put it?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Perhaps so. However, I am unable to yield further at this time.

If the South were as wealthy and productive as other sections of equal area and population, which is not true by reason of the ravages of war and the presence of the negro, it would require about one and one-half times their rate of taxation to give to her children advantages equal to those provided by other sections for theirs, for the reason that the South is confronted with the irremovable necessity of maintaining a dual system of schools. To provide equal advantages under existing conditions would require a rate of taxation many times larger than that levied elsewhere. Such a rate would be oppressive, impoverishing, confiscatory, and most of the burden would have to be borne by about half of the population.

If this be a correct diagnosis of the case, what is the remedy? In the absence of action by the National Government there is no hope of prompt and effective relief. Congress should make an adequate annual appropriation for purposes of education, general and vocational, to be apportioned among all of the States, chiefly upon an illiteracy basis, and to be expended under the supervision of the several States. Such apportionment would place most of the appropriation where it is most needed and therefore where it would accomplish most good for the entire country. It would also leave the direct administration of the fund with the individual States, where it properly belongs.

Shall the Federal Government make appropriations for the building of locks and dams, for the deepening of rivers and digging of canals, for the irrigation of arid lands, for the construction of public highways, for farm demonstration purposes, for the eradication of the boll weevil and cattle tick, and at the same time neglect the nobler and more important duty of preparing the masses of its people for intelligent, productive, and patriotic citizenship? Such a policy is little less than social and governmental suicide. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Five minutes will suffice.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ALEXANDER). The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. In view of the importance of this question of adequate vocational training for all of our people, in view of the fact that the Federal Government will probably be called upon ultimately for many millions of dollars, in view of the great diversity of opinion in this House and the other, the Committee on Education believes that before we enter upon a policy we should authorize the President, who is eminently qualified for that service, to appoint the commission proposed in the resolution—a commission to be composed of students of education, of experts in vocational training. The House will not be compelled to adopt the report which may be submitted; but it is the opinion of the committee that it would be wise to authorize the appointment of the proposed commission, defer action for two or three months, and get the benefit of the opinion of recognized experts.

Senator SMITH of Georgia, who advocates one of the theories advanced here, and Senator PAGE, of Vermont, who leads another school of thought, appeared before the Committee on Education and requested jointly that the resolution be reported favorably. I hope every Member will vote for its adoption. [Applause.]

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I have received two letters on this important pending question, one from T. H. Harris, superintendent of public education of Louisiana, and the other from Thomas D. Boyd, president of Louisiana State University, and I ask unanimous consent that these letters be published in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to print two letters in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters referred to are as follows:

STATE OF LOUISIANA,
DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION,
Baton Rouge, June 17, 1913.

Hon. L. LAZARO,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR DR. LAZARO: I understand that a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 5) has been introduced by Senator HOKE SMITH, of Georgia, and reported favorably out of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, providing for a commission charged with the duty of investigating carefully the question of industrial education, with the view of making a report to the National Congress which would be of value to that body in determining what should be done, if anything, in the way of aiding the States in promoting education of a practical nature.

I am perhaps not far wrong when I say that one of the most important educational questions before this country is this question of what should be done in bringing the industries into the schools and fitting boys and girls for efficiency along practical lines. A commission of able men with the National Congress behind it ought to be able to gather information of great value and to make a report which would in some measure, at least, settle this important question. I trust, therefore, that you will give your hearty support to the resolution mentioned above, using your influence to have such a commission appointed and to supply it with the funds that will place it in position to gather valuable information.

With good wishes,
Yours, sincerely,

T. H. HARRIS.

LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY AND AGRICULTURAL AND MECHANICAL COLLEGE,
PRESIDENT'S OFFICE,
Baton Rouge, September 13, 1913.

Hon. L. LAZARO,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On the 6th instant a bill was introduced in the Senate by Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and in the House by Mr. LEVER, of South Carolina, which is of special interest to the university as the agricultural college of Louisiana. It is designated S. 3091 and H. R. 7951, and provides for agricultural extension work by the agricultural colleges in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture.

This bill is the outcome of efforts that have been made for several years to secure congressional legislation on this subject. After numerous revisions, the bill is now in such shape that it should be entirely satisfactory to the agricultural colleges, the United States Department of Agriculture, and the friends of such legislation in Congress. The passage of this bill will be of vast benefit to the people of Louisiana. It will enable the university to continue and extend the agricultural extension work begun some years ago. This work has already accomplished much good for the farmers of Louisiana and there is a growing demand for its extension. It is impossible for the university to meet this urgent demand from the farmers of the State with its present limited means. I hope, therefore, that you will give to the agricultural extension bill your earnest and active support, not only because it will be especially beneficial to the State of Louisiana at this time, but because it will satisfy the universal demand of American farmers for legislation of this kind.

This bill is less complicated and carries a smaller appropriation than the bill for vocational education introduced by Senator PAGE, but there is no necessary opposition between the two. In my judgment, it would be better to pass the Smith-Lever bill now, because it meets a pressing need, while the Page bill, of much wider scope, may safely be left for future consideration.

Very respectfully,

THOS. D. BOYD, President.

Mr. MONDELL was recognized.

Mr. MOORE. Before the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ABERCROMBIE] takes his seat, I want to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has the floor.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield.

Mr. MOORE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama, who is unquestionably an authority on this subject, how long he thinks it will take this commission to make this investigation and complete its report?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Personally I believe it will take anywhere from three to six months, but I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. MOORE. The resolution fixes December 1, or as soon—

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Or as soon thereafter as practicable.

Mr. MOORE. Does not the gentleman think we had better fix a definite time?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. The only trouble about fixing a definite time is that the commission may not be able to report within the time fixed.

Mr. MOORE. We have two other bills to consider, and it is indicated by the chairman of the committee that one of them will not be affected at all by this resolution; that is to say, the Lever bill, which pertains to agricultural education. It might be important for us to have whatever information we can get from this commission before we consider either of the pending bills.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. That is my opinion. However, I am not speaking for the committee. Personally I have no objection to fixing a definite time.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman think three months would be sufficient?

Mr. SIMS. No.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I doubt it.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman think the 1st of April would be time enough?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I think they might report by the 1st of April.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we have listened with a great deal of interest, and I think with much profit, to the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ABERCROMBIE]. I think most of us agree to a very large extent with the views he has expressed. He expressed one view, however, just at the close of his remarks, that I can not altogether approve, in view of the fact that we had hoped that through the passage of the contemplated legislation we might derive some benefit up our way. If, however, the suggestions of our good friend from Alabama [Mr. ABERCROMBIE] are adopted, that Federal appropriations when made ought to be based on illiteracy, we in Wyoming will not get much benefit, for we have very few illiterates in our State.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Does not the gentleman believe that such appropriations ought to be placed where they will do the most good?

Mr. MONDELL. I agree with the gentleman, and I appreciate and sympathize with the peculiar difficulties that confront the people of the South in the matter of education by reason of the fact that they must maintain two systems.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Another question. Leaving out the peculiar conditions in the South, leaving out the special needs of the South, does not the gentleman think adequate vocational training for all the people is desirable?

Mr. MONDELL. I do; but does not the gentleman think that it might be a temptation to increase illiteracy in order to get Federal appropriations if appropriations were based on illiteracy?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. That is simply my personal opinion. Of course, the committee is not committed to any such proposition.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that, and personally I would be favorable to legislation that would have the effect of giving the greatest aid where it is the most needed; that is, in sections where there is the largest amount of illiteracy; but I should scarcely want to have Federal appropriations for these purposes based on the percentage of illiteracy any more than I should want to have the appropriations for roads, which gentlemen hope to get in future, based on the depth of the mud, because we do not have much mud out our way, except very rarely, and if appropriations for roads were based on the depth of mud that had to be traversed, as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] suggests, our name would be mud, so far as appropriations are concerned, while Oklahoma, with its rich and rare gumbo, would probably benefit very largely.

Mr. Chairman, on August 23, 1912, the House passed a bill to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States, and so forth, providing for agricultural extension work in the agricultural colleges, and, through the agricultural colleges, agricultural extension work of a practical character upon the farms. That bill was amended in the Senate by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting legislation the effect of which would be to make direct appropriations for agricultural and vocational instruction in the higher and intermediate schools of the country. The conferees were unable to agree as between these widely differing propositions, and it is now proposed to have the President appoint a commission of nine, whose duty it shall be to consider and report a plan by December 1, or as soon thereafter as practicable, for national aid to vocational education.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman advise us if the bill he refers to is not commonly known as the Lever bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the bill to which I refer is commonly known as the Lever bill, and the amendment made in the Senate is commonly known as the Page bill.

Mr. MOORE. So that we may clearly understand what we are discussing, the Lever bill does not pertain to vocational education, generally speaking, but pertains only to agricultural education, or the sending out of lecturers to farmers?

Mr. MONDELL. No; the Lever bill would to a certain extent aid vocational education in the agricultural colleges and in connection with the agricultural colleges; but it is more distinctively a bill for agricultural education and practical agricultural extension work.

Mr. MOORE. It has been stated here by the chairman of the committee presenting the resolution that if this commission were appointed to investigate and report upon the matter of vocational education, in all probability it would not in any way affect the so-called Lever bill to which the gentleman refers. Does that mean, then, that the matter of instruction to the farmers of the country, as contemplated by the Lever bill, would be taken away from the commission and would confine its work solely to investigating the question of educational instruction in other occupations, such as the mechanical arts and the industries?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I would say that the suggestion made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania has a good deal of meat in it, unless we consider agricultural education as vocational and agricultural instruction as vocational, and I think the resolution is open to that criticism.

My objection to the resolution, Mr. Chairman, is not due to the fact that the language does not clearly indicate what I assume to have been the thought of the committee in reporting it. There are few Members of the House—at least from the agricultural districts—who are not well informed with regard to the two general plans of Federal aid which have been proposed, and there are many Members of the House who are, in my opinion, as well informed on that subject as any gentlemen whom the President could possibly select as a commission. To mention only two out of a multitude, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] have given a great amount of study to these questions, and they and many of our colleagues are as well informed in the matter as any members of a commission which the President may appoint. The House generally is as well informed on the subject; the Senate is as well informed on the subject.

The two plans differ from each other very greatly, and most Members have considered the matter sufficiently that their minds are pretty well made up with regard to them. It is true that there is a difference of opinion between the House and the Senate, and it seems to have occurred to some gentlemen that the differences between those opposing views might be composed by the appointment of a commission. I can not think of any new facts, of any convincing arguments that might be presented that have not already been presented or that have not already occurred to gentlemen in regard to the relative merits of those two plans or of any possible combination of them. But when there is a difference of opinion between Members of the House and the Senate or between the committees of the House and Senate in regard to matters of legislation passed by one body or the other a plan is provided whereby those differences may be composed, if it is possible to accomplish that result. If gentlemen can be brought into agreement, we have a way in which that can be accomplished, to wit, through a committee of conference, and a committee of conference of the House is just as well qualified—in my opinion, very much better qualified—to hear the arguments of both sides, to judge of the views of the two bodies, and to reach an agreement with regard to the differences between the two Houses, if it is possible to reach such agreement. This is a most unusual method to adopt in an attempt to compose differences between the two Houses, and it is, in my opinion, a method which would be much more honored in the breach than in the observance.

If every time we have a disagreement between the two Houses and conferees are unable to agree the suggestion is made that the President or some one else appoint a commission to investigate the subject matter—if every time that condition occurs we proceed along those lines, it is an admission that the method established by the Constitution does not work well, is not effective, and I do not think gentlemen are willing to admit that at this time. It further involves an admission that somewhere outside of Congress the President or some one else may find some gentlemen who as members of a commission can bring arguments which will influence Members of Congress or inform them on important subjects and influence them when their colleagues are unable to do so. Now, I do not claim that Congress is all wise or that in the breasts and minds and hearts of Members of those two bodies reposes all the information in the world by any manner of means, but I do believe that on subjects which properly come before the two bodies in the regular way Members can generally be found who are quite as well informed on those subjects as anyone in the country; and if they are not, certainly the membership of this House is capable of securing information in the usual way and proceeding to an adjustment of the differences which may exist between them. The precedent, I say, is a bad one, an unfortunate one; it is one that will have a tendency to incline gentlemen who by reason of pride of authorship or for other reasons are inclined to insist on a disagreement to do so in the hope that by the appointment of a commission an easy method may be provided whereby gentlemen may recede from positions they have taken without loss of prestige. There is another thing about this appointment of a commission. If the House approves the appointment of a commission, the House is to a certain extent bound by the report of the commission.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. In the event that this commission is appointed, the object of that commission is to report a plan for vocational education. That does not, in your opinion, does it, bind the House to that plan? Could they not reject it if they saw fit and proper to do so?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I will say to my friend that we have been trying for some time to evolve a plan. The House did evolve a plan for agricultural training. The Senate evolved a plan for vocational training. The conferees were unable to agree as between them. I do not believe that it is necessary to go outside of Congress and ask the opinion of a commission of gentlemen, no matter how well informed they may be, as to what, in their opinion, would be a feasible and a workable and a satisfactory plan.

But if I were to arrive at the conclusion that that was necessary, that the appointment of a commission was the only way of arriving at an agreement as to what the plan should be, I should feel that I was under obligation, at least, if I did not fully agree with the plan, to very largely accept the judgment of the commission that I had proposed should be appointed. I do not think that we ought to abrogate our functions as legislators in that way. If we had not considered this subject at all, if this were comparatively a new subject, and if the Congress before beginning an investigation of the subject desired all the information that experts could give it, then it might be all right to appoint a commission, as we did in the case of the monetary commission, to study the subject and to make suggestions and recommendations. But the House has considered the matter fully. I assume that the Senate has done so also. There are gentlemen in the House who have given years of study to these questions, and I think are as well qualified to pass upon them as any commission that the President might appoint.

There is another proposition involved. The differences between the two Houses are in a sense fundamental. As between the extension of Federal aid through channels already established, intended to reach the farmer primarily and principally, and a proposition that the Federal Government shall take out of the Public Treasury large sums of money and turn them over to school districts for the purpose of having those sums used for various educational purposes throughout the country, whatever your views may be with regard to the merits of those two systems we must all agree that they are radically and fundamentally different.

I for one am not inclined to suggest the appointment of a commission to tell me whether or no I should depart from the views I now hold with regard to the relative merits of those two plans. I have a very clear idea in regard to them. I do not believe that I will be persuaded in a matter of principle by a commission that might be appointed, and that is one reason why I am not inclined to vote for a commission which would possibly recommend a policy which would be an unwise one—an unwise one because of the precedent it would establish with regard to Federal expenditures generally.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. MOORE. Has the gentleman indicated that he does not intend to support the resolution?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman supposed that he had so indicated. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been out of the Hall while I have been speaking and desires definite information on the subject, I will say I do not expect to support the resolution.

Mr. MOORE. In view of the statement of the gentleman, I want to ask him two questions: The first is as to our common understanding of the Lever bill, which is that it is intended to afford national aid to the various States for educational purposes in an agricultural way. That is my understanding of the Lever bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE. That it is intended to extend Federal aid to the States to promote agricultural education.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the fundamental idea of the Lever bill.

Mr. MOORE. That is the gentleman's understanding?

Mr. MONDELL. That is my understanding.

Mr. MOORE. In view of the fact that the majority of this House has voted for the Lever bill and is likely to do so again, and as a majority of the Senate apparently has indicated its favor toward the bill having the provisions of the Lever bill, would it not then leave all other vocational educations high and dry if we pass the Lever bill without passing a resolution of this kind?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I am not so sure about that. In fact, I do not think so at all. I do not think that necessarily follows.

But I did not rise to express any opinion as to the details of these matters. I think as a matter of fact I have not thus far indicated which of the plans I approve, although if the gentleman will read the RECORD of some time since he will discover that I voted for the Lever plan.

My objection to the resolution is that it attempts, in an unusual way and a way that, in my opinion, ought not to be adopted, unless it shall be absolutely necessary, to compose the differences between the two Houses in regard to a legislative matter. I think that we will have no difficulty whatever in coming to an agreement in regard to the matter, and whether the agreement be in the line of the views of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] or in the line of my views or in the line of the views of both of us, we shall at least have arrived at it in the usual and orderly way provided by the Constitution of the United States and the statutes of the United States thereunder.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Very briefly, because my time flies.

Mr. POWERS. I want to inquire of the gentleman if he is constitutionally opposed to commissions?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no.

Mr. POWERS. I believe the gentleman voted for the continuation of the Tariff Commission.

Mr. MONDELL. I am in favor of tariff commissions; yes.

Mr. POWERS. Then why oppose this character of a commission, since the educational matter is as much confused between the Senate and the House as the tariff has been?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, we never had the President appoint any commission of nine gentlemen to compose any differences between the House and the Senate in the matter of the tariff. The House and the Senate appointed very select committees of their own to perform that function.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman answer my second question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will answer a brief question. There are other gentlemen who desire to be heard.

Mr. MOORE. Notwithstanding the gentleman's position in regard to the resolution, he is in favor of educating the farmer's boy?

Mr. MONDELL. I am very much in favor of doing so.

Mr. MOORE. Which means to educate the farmer's son.

Mr. BUTLER. Tell us something about the education of the farmer's daughter. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. It means to raise the standard of agricultural education. It means the wider dissemination of knowledge relative to country life. It means practical information to the farmer. It means help in the direction of returning the urban population to the farm. It means aid in the reduction of the high cost of living in case the Democratic tariff, soon to be enacted, does not accomplish that happy result. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MOORE. Then why not extend that sort of education to the boy on the street, to the boy who works in the mill, or to the boy who takes up some other vocation than that of farming?

Mr. MONDELL. I am perfectly willing to have that done, and, as I said to the gentleman a moment ago, I am not discussing the relative merits of these two plans. I have simply remarked that the two plans are dissimilar.

Mr. MOORE. Would not the resolution give a half loaf to the boy on the street?

Mr. MONDELL. It would probably settle the difference between the two Houses, unless there may be gentlemen somewhere—I can not imagine that there are—who have become so fixed and set in their views that they want an unusual way of coming to an agreement.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Does not the gentleman think, considering the majorities of these two committees of the Senate and the House, that it would be better to refer this matter to a commission than to refer these differences to a Democratic caucus? [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. A joint Democratic caucus, does the gentleman mean?

Mr. PAYNE. Joint or several; any kind of a Democratic caucus.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I have never been particularly enamored of Democratic caucuses, and yet it can be said in their favor that Democratic caucuses are composed of Members of the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. WILLIS. The Democratic caucus is the legislative branch.

Mr. MONDELL. As the gentleman from Ohio suggests, for the time being it is the legislative branch of the Government. It is the whole thing when the President does not intervene to upset or fix the decision of the caucus.

But this is an altogether different matter. This is a proposition to ignore the Democratic caucus, which, from the standpoint of our Democratic friends, has been doing such glorious work. This is a time when it is proposed to ignore the Democratic caucus, to proceed to the creation of a commission outside of the legislative branch of the Government, the duty of which commission is to inform the Members of Congress how they ought to vote with regard to a matter we have had under consideration for the last two or three years.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GOULDEN. I should like some information, because the gentleman from Wyoming, aided by my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. PAYNE], is making a very illuminating address. I would like to ask wherein the Democratic caucus is different from caucuses of the Republican Party, in which the gentleman took part for a number of years, when he was a very faithful adherent to that plan of legislation.

Mr. MONDELL. I regret that my friend from New York has exposed, in this little speech of his, failure to listen to remarks of mine in which I have called attention to the fact that you gentlemen have been bound by caucus action more times in 1 year than the Republicans were in the 18 years that preceded. As the gentleman was not here when I made that statement the other day, I reiterate it for his benefit and satisfaction.

Mr. BUTLER. Can not the gentleman enlarge on it?

Mr. MONDELL. If pressed, I might do so. I have no desire to add to the agony of the gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. GOULDEN. I want to say that I served here for eight years when the House was Republican, and I know that the Republican caucuses were very frequent and very binding, and their action was usually in the shape of a rule when it came into this House.

Mr. MONDELL. As the gentleman never attended one of them and never had any opportunity to attain any particular information with regard to them, I am sure that his testimony on the subject would not be held to be the best in the world. But to return to our muttons, Mr. Chairman, I am opposed, and earnestly opposed, to this proposition. Some gentlemen here seem to be jocular about this, seem to be under the impression that I am not serious and earnest in what I have said. That is not the fact at all. I hope that in the near future Congress will pass a bill providing for agricultural extension work, for vocational education as a part of that work in the agricultural colleges, for the extension of aid in the practical teaching of agriculture and allied industries. I hope that will occur soon, and I fear that the reference of this matter to a commission will delay action by Congress. It may delay it indefinitely.

Mr. BUTLER. Can we not provide for a commission to report in about two days?

Mr. MONDELL. I presume that would do just as well. The appointment of this commission may delay action indefinitely, and in any event if it has any effect at all it must somewhat bind Members who vote for it to approve the recommendations of that commission, whatever those recommendations may be. In view of the fact that the House is full of Members, numbers of them on both sides, who are thoroughly familiar with these subjects and that there are numbers of gentlemen in the Senate who, I assume, are well informed; in view of the further fact that the Constitution has provided a method, in use every day, under which differences between the two Houses may be adjusted, I am very much opposed to this unusual plan of attempting to secure an agreement with regard to legislation.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. COX. I wish to say that the gentleman has discussed this question of the difference between the two Houses very intelligently. Can the gentleman inform the committee now how much what is known as the Smith bill carries on its face?

Mr. TOWNER. It is practically the same as the Lever bill.

Mr. MONDELL. The Smith bill and the Lever bill are practically the same.

Mr. COX. I refer to the amount of money.

Mr. WILLIS. Three million dollars.

Mr. COX. My recollection is that the Smith bill carried $20,000,000.

Mr. TOWNER. It is the Page bill the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. FESS. The Page bill carries $13,000,000 and the Lever bill $3,000,000.

Mr. MONDELL. My understanding is that the Senate provision would lead to a very much larger expense than the House bill, but that may not be a good argument against it. If the work to be done is work that ought to be done by the Federal Government, it is no argument against it that it is going to cost a considerable amount of money. That is not the proposition. Without regard to the merits of the two plans, the two Houses have the subject before them. They can pass upon it at any time that these gentlemen can reach an agreement, and there is no more reason why they should fail to reach an agreement with regard to this legislation than with regard to the vast volume of legislation that is taken up and passed through the two Houses of Congress. There is no more reason for the appointment of a commission in regard to these matters than in regard to scores of other matters of legislation which come before us. It means delay, I fear, and I am therefore opposed to it.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I shall desire to occupy all of the time that has been so generously yielded to me, but I do want very seriously to say something about this resolution. I am strongly in favor of national aid for vocational education. I am strongly in favor of national aid for agricultural education. I voted for and spoke for the Lever agricultural extension bill, and will do so again if I have the opportunity. Every time the agricultural appropriation bill has been before the House I have strongly advocated by vote and voice enlarged appropriations for the cooperative demonstration and farm-management work of the Department of Agriculture. I did this because I believe in agricultural education that will bring the benefits of scientific investigation right to the farmer's door. Because I am thus in favor of national aid to both agricultural and vocational education I am opposed to this resolution. The adoption of this resolution means further delay; I want action now. It seems to me that by no stretch of the imagination can it be made clear that the adoption of this resolution will be an aid in the advancement of either of those two forms of education. As I understand the situation, it is substantially this: The House by a large vote passed the Lever bill, which provided for a system of agricultural extension and education. The Senate passed the Page bill, which provided a very extensive system of vocational educational training, and, as I understand, there the matter is suspended, as it were, between the two Houses. In this case, instead of having the two committees of these two branches of the legislative department get together and work out some sort of a measure, as they do upon every other proposition that comes before the Congress, it is proposed that a commission shall be appointed, in the first place, to spend $15,000, and, in the second place, to report some time, we do not know when.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with what the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has said with reference to the ability of the committees of this body and of the body at the other end of the Capitol properly to draft legislation along these lines.

I mean it as no matter of pleasantry or fulsome eulogy when I say that I would rather trust the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], aided by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN]—I would rather trust those three gentlemen to draft the legislation that we have in mind than to trust any commission of theorists and experts that might be appointed for this particular purpose. [Applause.] The difference that is alleged to exist, which to some extent does exist, between the two Houses is a difference that arises not out of a lack of accumulation of facts, but out of lack of agreement as to constitutional theories. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS], in the inquiry that he propounded to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], suggested that there was some analogy between this and a tariff commission. There is not the slightest analogy on earth. The object of the tariff commission, or Tariff Board, is to collect the facts upon which a tariff law may be based. We already have the facts here. Everybody who has looked into the subject at all admits the necessity for and desirability of vocational training. Everybody admits the desirability of and necessity for national aid to agricultural training, but a question has come up as to certain constitutional principles. Some gentlemen say these matters ought to be in the control of the States, and other gentlemen say these questions ought to be settled by the Federal Government. When the dispute is not as to questions of fact, but as to questions of fundamental policy and constitutional law, why, forsooth, should we appoint a commission to settle those questions? But it has been said here that we do not need to adopt the plan that this commission shall propose. Then, if we are not to adopt the plan, what is the use of spending $15,000 of the people's money when there is to be no result. It is alleged that the formation of a plan is to be the only thing. They are not to collect the facts, for we already have the facts. They are to work out a plan and draft a bill. Then, if we are not to adopt that plan, we will have made no progress at all, and $15,000 of the taxpayers' money will have been spent in vain.

It has been alleged here, and in the most perfect good faith I am sure, that the passage of this resolution will not interfere at all with the passage of the Lever bill. I am opposed to the adoption of the resolution because, in my opinion, the passage of this resolution at this time will unavoidably and necessarily delay, if it does not actually defeat, the Lever agricultural extension bill and probably also the Page bill, and thus prevent the immediate national aid to agricultural and vocational training which the farmers and the boys and girls of the country desire and expect, and which the welfare of the Nation demands. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee [Mr. HUGHES of Georgia], with his usual foresight and absolutely unfailing ability, eloquence, and frankness, stated the matter correctly before he was led to change the statement by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN]. What is the fact? It is simply this: If you pass this resolution, then there will be no legislation along the line of agricultural extension or of vocational training until you get a report from this proposed commission, and nobody on earth knows when that report will be made. Why do I say that? Because, as was suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], the very moment a bill to provide national aid to agricultural or vocational training is called up, gentlemen will rise in their places and say: "We have a commission investigating this general subject of vocational and agricultural training. Let us wait until the commission reports."

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this resolution because the inevitable result of it will be delay. Where the character of our citizenship and the welfare of our people depend, as they do in this case, upon prompt action, delays are dangerous. It should not be forgotten that more than 90 per cent of the pupils in our public schools never reach the high school at all. These 90 per cent go into active life from the grades. Are we doing for them all that we ought to do? Are we sending them forth as well equipped as they ought to be? Do they leave the schools feeling that what they have obtained helps them to earn a better living and live a better life? When a boy studies carpentry or blacksmithing or agriculture it does not necessarily mean that he is to be a carpenter or blacksmith or farmer. His work has helped him to find himself, to discover his own possibilities; he has learned that toil is honorable; that it is as meritorious to plow a field or make a chair or shape the glowing iron as it is to sell goods or write a book. Agricultural education will solve economic problems and elevate our citizenship.

Hence the desirability of the earliest possible legislation in the direction of Federal aid and encouragement to agricultural and vocational training.

I am further opposed to this resolution because it is an abdication of the proper functions of this House and of its committees. It has been said here, and well said, by others that we have ample ability in the membership of our own committees. I have already suggested some gentlemen on the Committee on Agriculture who are thoroughly equipped to draft this bill. If there are not enough gentlemen on that committee, certainly additional ones can be found in the Committee on Education. I would be perfectly content to intrust the drafting of this bill to the three gentlemen I have already named, aided by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ABERCROMBIE], who has spoken here so instructively to-day, and by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. FESS], both of whom are experienced school men and educators of national reputation, both of whom understand the needs of the hour and have the ability to draft the necessary legislation. In view of this situation, when we have upon our committees men who have already spent a lifetime in investigating these questions and getting at the facts, why not proceed to do the work that ought to be done and not wait on a commission? Simply because we have now come up against a position where there is a difference of opinion, largely upon constitutional grounds, between the House and the Senate, why should we come to a full stop and say, contrary to our practice upon every other kind of legislation, "We will appoint a commission to settle it"? Why not go right ahead and settle it now through the instrumentality of the able Committees of the House on Agriculture and Education instead of courting delay by adopting a program of procrastination? Here we are waiting for the return of the tariff bill, waiting for the conferees to compose the differences between the two Houses. What would be thought if we would say, "Well, let us appoint a commission of nine gentlemen to report upon this thing some time, we do not know when, but whenever they get ready"?

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIS. I will.

Mr. RAKER. Is the gentleman constitutionally or otherwise opposed to a committee being appointed from both Houses to go into this question fully and report back to the two Houses?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not know what the gentleman implies by the use of the word "constitutionally." I do not think there is any objection from the standpoint of constitutional law, but I am opposed to the appointment of a commission to attend to the business of Congress—

Mr. RAKER. I meant objection.

Mr. WILLIS (continuing). I will say to the gentleman, as clearly as I may, that when we have a proposition as nearly thrashed out as we have this one, when every man in the country who has investigated the subject at all admits the necessity for vocational training, when every man admits the necessity for agricultural training and for national aid to both, when the committees of the House and the Senate have been at work upon these subjects, and there are Members in both Houses who have spent years in working out this proposition—now, when we have got that far, I say to the gentleman that it is a mistake to say we will stop and appoint a commission and spend $15,000 to do what the committees of the House ought to do, and can do better and more quickly than a commission can do it.

Mr. RAKER. What I desire to get at is this: Suppose the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate felt as though they are not thoroughly prepared at the present time? Now, could not the gentleman's objection be entirely eliminated if a joint committee of the House and Senate be appointed, five taken from the House and five from the Senate, to report to their respective bodies as provided in this resolution?

Mr. WILLIS. I should have no special objection to that, but I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. RAKER. I was asking the gentleman if further information is necessary in his view—

Mr. WILLIS. I do not think there is need for further information as to the necessity for the legislation, as to the collection of facts; I think we are prepared to vote. We were prepared to vote a few months ago on the Lever agricultural-extension bill, and did vote for that measure; I did and the gentleman did.

Mr. RAKER. That being the case, the committee from the House reporting this resolution and the committee of the Senate reporting the resolution, does not it to some extent—

Mr. WILLIS. The committee in the Senate did not report this resolution.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, yes—

Mr. WILLIS. All right.

Mr. RAKER. That being the case, is not that some evidence of the fact that the committees are lacking in some information desired in this case, and ought not the committee to be a joint committee from the House and the Senate to go into this matter?

Mr. WILLIS. I should have no objection to a joint committee of the House and Senate, but I want to say to the gentleman further, in reply to his observation, that sometimes it becomes necessary to save a man from his friends; and, likewise, it sometimes becomes necessary to save a bill from its author and from its friends.

It has been stated here, and it is shown in the hearings, that two distinguished Senators appeared before the House committee and urged that this resolution be adopted. While I have great deference for their opinions, I think they are in error in the program they have mapped out in this case. I believe the best way to advance this legislation is to proceed along the lines that we follow with reference to every other kind of legislation in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. COX. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Very briefly.

Mr. RAKER. If neither the Committee on Education of the House nor the Committee on Education of the Senate reported this bill, would it not be some evidence that they wanted further light, and would not the House and the Senate get better results if the members of those respective committees were appointed to go into the matter and make a full investigation and report?

Mr. WILLIS. I agree with the gentleman if further investigation is necessary that it should be done by the committees of the House and Senate.

Mr. RAKER. I agree with you on that.

Mr. WILLIS. Then we are agreed on that point at least. I do not see any reason for having a commission appointed to spend $15,000 of the people's money without any tangible results.

I just want to say one more word, and then I think I will have expressed all I care to say on this proposition, and that is as to the absolute necessity for early action along the line of aid to vocational education and agricultural education. I wish that every Member of the House could have the pleasure of coming in personal contact with the work that is being done in many of the great schools of this country along the line of vocational training. I have in mind one school just now, not so very far from here, in the city of York, Pa. I have gone into the shops with the high-school boys, where I have seen them working at the anvil and the forge, working in the carpenter shop, working in the foundries and machine shops, and studying all the things that would be necessary in order to develop them as skilled mechanics. They work there in the shops one week, and the next week are back in the high school, and the next week back in the shops. That is the system they have worked out there. The same system has been applied in the schools of Cincinnati, Ohio, Fitchburg, Mass., and some other places. It is splendid work, and I think it is perfectly proper and highly desirable that there should be national aid along this line of vocational training.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. For a brief inquiry.

Mr. HARDY. I do not know as I ought to ask, but are those schools under State supervision entirely?

Mr. WILLIS. Entirely so. Along the line of agricultural education everybody from every section of the country knows of the immense advantage of that work. In December we will have here in Washington 1,000 corn boys from Ohio to show you what work is being done in agricultural education in that State. I think the Federal Government ought to take up the work of agricultural education and ought to aid, so far as it may be able, to bring to all the boys and girls of our country the benefits of agricultural training, a training that makes for better citizenship, with a larger and loftier outlook upon life.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that aid ought to be in the form of making appropriation conditioned upon an appropriation by the State?

Mr. WILLIS. That was the plan that was adopted in the Lever agricultural-extension bill, as the gentleman will remember.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I know that.

Mr. WILLIS. And was probably about as wise a plan as could be thought of. The gentleman voted for the Lever bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; I did not.

Mr. WILLIS. Well, I did. Now, Mr. Chairman, I repeat what I said in the beginning: That it seems to me it is important that we act. The people of the country expect us to do something along these lines, and to do it now, and in my judgment they will not be at all satisfied if we put them off by saying, "Well, we have appointed a commission to investigate this question and make a report some time in the dim and distant future, after it has spent $15,000 of the taxpayers' money to do what we are already amply prepared to do through the committees of the House and Senate."

Mr. MONDELL. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I have no set speech, but will make a few impromptu remarks.

There has been no objection raised on the part of the opponents of this resolution to vocational education. The difference has arisen as to the way that object can be most efficiently and thoroughly met. I want to state for the information of the House that Senator PAGE, who is the author of the Page bill in the Senate—and a bill that passed that body—appeared before the Committee on Education and urged the adoption of this resolution. This resolution has already been adopted by the Senate, and Senator SMITH, who is heartily in favor of the Lever bill, likewise appeared before the Committee on Education and urged the adoption of this resolution.

Naturally, in the discussion of a measure of this character a good number of questions arise. When this matter finally comes before the House for action, there will probably be those who will oppose this national aid to vocational education, not that they are opposed to vocational education, but they take the position that the States and not the Federal Government are the proper instrumentalities to appropriate the money to further the interests of vocational education in the respective States of this Union.

None of these questions is presented, so far as this individual resolution is concerned. This resolution merely empowers the President to appoint a committee of nine to consider the needs—that is the language of the resolution—of vocational education in the various sections of this great country and to report a plan to put in operation that character of a system.

The argument was made here by the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that the House would be bound by the report of this commission. The gentleman is entirely mistaken as to the purport of the resolution that we are considering. We are not bound by anything of the sort, and will not be. By voting for this resolution the House is not bound to support the plan brought in. It does not even bind the House in favor of vocational education of any character. All that this resolution proposes to do is to empower the President of this great Republic to appoint a committee of nine men who, by reason of their learning, by reason of their intense interest in this subject, by reason of their study of this great question, can bring to light the facts and formulate some kind of a plan to be put in operation.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWERS. I will yield with pleasure.

Mr. WILLIS. If Congress should not adopt the plan that would be formulated under this resolution, what would be gained by the expenditure of this $15,000?

Mr. POWERS. I will answer the gentleman. Suppose Congress does not adopt the plan reported by this commission? There is no doubt in that event but that Congress will get a good deal of needed information, by reason of the report of the learned men whom the President of this country will undoubtedly appoint. And I want to say for the present occupant of the White House that he is as well qualified and knows the people of education and those interested in vocational education throughout this country equally as well if not better than any President who ever occupied the White House. He is a school man. His life has been devoted to work of this character. He knows the people throughout this country who have made a study of this great question. I shall have every confidence in the ability of the men that he will appoint upon this commission; and although this House in all probability will change the report of the plan in some particular, and we do not expect the House to adopt bodily the plan brought in, yet we do expect from the men appointed by the President much needed information upon this great question.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWERS. With pleasure.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman believe for a moment that if a committee of nine were appointed by the President of the United States, no matter how high their character and standing, they will ever be able to report a plan to Congress that, if adopted by Congress, will enable the farmers of this country to increase their yield of wheat from 15 to 30 bushels an acre, or their yield of corn from 20 to 40 bushels an acre?

Mr. POWERS. If I did not believe that this commission could aid a plan of that character, I would be opposed to this resolution. I have no doubt but that they can help solve that problem.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. POWERS. With pleasure.

Mr. MOORE. Is it the gentleman's understanding of this resolution, he being the ranking member on the minority of the committee, that its passage would result in a report by the commission upon vocations other than agricultural?

Mr. POWERS. I do so understand it.

Mr. MOORE. The Lever bill applies solely to agriculture. Those occupations not pertaining to the farm would also receive consideration at the hands of this commission? Is that the plan?

Mr. POWERS. That is one of the purposes of this resolution. And I want to say further in regard to this proposition, and in answer to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], that an erroneous intimation has been given that the purpose of this resolution is to again force delay in the passage of needed legislation along this line.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWERS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. I wish to disclaim any suggestion that I thought that was the purpose. I did not mean that. I meant to say that was the probable effect, but surely not the purpose of the committee.

Mr. POWERS. And in further answer to the gentleman from Ohio I desire to say that both the author of the Page bill in the Senate and the Committee on Education in the House, all of whom are in favor of this legislation and all of whom are extremely anxious that this matter get under way at the earliest possible moment, are of opinion that this resolution, instead of retarding needed legislation along this line, will greatly accelerate legislation of this character.

The objection has been made here that there is no time limit within which this commission shall report. That can easily be modified in this resolution. It could be provided that they should report not later than the 1st of April or the 1st of May or the 1st of June, giving them ample time to consider this matter. But I have no doubt in the world that these men, appointed by the President, will make the earliest possible report. They are to get nothing for their services. The nine men appointed by the President on this commission do not get a cent. They are to receive no salary; they are to do it for the love they have of the cause; and men who are so intensely interested in vocational education as to devote their time and labor to it without a cent of compensation will, I believe, accelerate the work with the utmost speed consistent with gathering the information necessary to make a proper report.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. POWERS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. GOULDEN. I have no doubt the gentleman has given considerable attention to this matter. How long will it take a commission of this character to complete their work and make a report if the House passes this resolution?

Mr. POWERS. Giving merely my own opinion, in my judgment it ought not to take longer than two months, or three months at the outside. I think we will have a report in three months if this resolution is adopted. I am expressing merely my personal opinion.

Mr. GOULDEN. Would there be any objection, then, to inserting an amendment limiting the time to three months or, say, to the 1st of February or the 1st of March?

Mr. POWERS. I am not the chairman of this committee.

Mr. GOULDEN. I am simply asking for the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. POWERS. I am merely giving my own personal views on the matter. I would have no objection to making it three months, except for the delay which might necessarily come about by reason of the fact that this resolution would have to go back to the Senate.

Mr. RUPLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWERS. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. RUPLEY. I am asking the gentleman as a member of the committee: As I understand the proposition, the Page and Lever bills are at the present time tied up in the Senate for want of knowledge of a plan on the part of the United States Senate?

Mr. POWERS. That is correct, as I understand it.

Mr. RUPLEY. I ask the gentleman, as a member of the Committee on Education, do we have the knowledge, do we know where to obtain the information as to a plan to cover this great work of vocational education?

Mr. POWERS. I can only state for myself; I have not the information.

Mr. RUPLEY. I notice that in this resolution the word "men" has been stricken out, and if the resolution passes the President can appoint nine persons—nine men or women—on this commission.

Mr. POWERS. He will be so empowered, as I understand it. I think he could have done it anyway.

Mr. RAKER. The very purpose of striking out the word "men" is to give the President power to appoint, and with the idea that he will appoint, women educators as part of the members of this commission.

Mr. POWERS. I can not speak for the President.

Mr. RAKER. No; I mean the intention of the committee in striking out the word "men."

Mr. POWERS. There is some question about the word "men," and it was stricken out so as to give the President all the power he wants in the premises.

Mr. RAKER. Without any restriction whatever.

Mr. POWERS. Without any restriction whatever.

Mr. RAKER. He can appoint women educators if he sees fit.

Mr. POWERS. He can if he so desires, under this resolution.

Mr. RAKER. Sure.

Mr. POWERS. How much time have I consumed, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. RUSSELL). The gentleman has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. POWERS. I shall consume no more time in my own right, but will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I am very sure there is no man who really favors any form of vocational education in this country—or, rather, national aid for it—who would oppose this resolution if he thoroughly understood the conditions under which it is presented to us. I think I can make that clear to everyone here. I agree with the gentleman that if originally this resolution had been suggested without any seeming or actual necessity for it, I would not have favored it particularly. I rather would have acquiesced in the view of those who said that, perhaps, it was unnecessary. But we must take conditions as they exist. And now I ask the attention of gentlemen of the committee while I state very briefly the reasons why I favor the passage of this resolution. The Committee on Education, of which I am a member, have thoroughly examined this matter, and we have ascertained, as we think, the conditions that surround this bill and its consideration at the present time. Originally this proposition came from the agricultural colleges of the country. It was introduced into the Sixtieth Congress by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN], and was then practically what is now known as the Lever bill. No action was taken by the Sixtieth or the Sixty-first Congresses, but in the Sixty-second Congress Mr. LEVER introduced a bill which has since been known by his name. It was considered by the Agricultural Committee and favorably reported and passed by the House. It then went to the Senate; but in the Senate Senator PAGE, of Vermont, had introduced a bill, which was known as the Page bill, very much more extensive in its scope, not limited by any means to vocational education in agriculture, but extending aid to all vocational schools of every kind and character in the United States. It was ably supported in the Senate, and after a time passed the Senate.

The Lever bill having passed the House, went to the Senate. The Senate bill having passed the Senate, came to the House. These bills were referred to the respective committees of the Senate and House. Nothing was done in that Congress, as gentlemen may well believe. Various efforts were made to secure some plan by which the various supporters of both bills could perhaps agree on a compromise, but nothing resulted from these efforts. Such was the condition of affairs at the beginning of this Congress, when Mr. LEVER again introduced into the House the Lever bill. Senator SMITH, who strongly advocated the Lever bill in the Senate in the Sixty-second Congress, introduced substantially the same bill in the Senate in this Congress, and Senator PAGE again introduced his vocational bill in the Senate. When the matter came before the Senate for consideration neither of these bills could muster enough votes to insure passage in the Senate. Gentlemen should thoroughly understand, those especially who favor the Lever bill, that the Smith bill introduced in the Senate is substantially the Lever bill introduced in the House, and if they favor the passage of the Lever bill here, they would favor the passage of the Smith bill there, and its friends and supporters and sponsors there have the same view of it that you have here. What should these gentlemen do? The committee could not agree or did not think it wise to attempt to agree, and those especially who supported the Smith bill said that while there had been a vast amount of testimony taken on the Page bill and a large amount of evidence in favor of that, there had not been a like opportunity afforded for those who favored the Smith or the Lever bill to make their showing. So, upon the suggestion of Senator SMITH, this resolution was prepared. It was urged by him before the committee.

The committee finally favorably reported it unanimously, and it went before the Senate and was unanimously passed, because it was understood by each side that some compromise must be made. Of course, gentlemen will understand that the Senator from Georgia probably thought it would further the interests of his bill to have this commission appointed, and the Senator from Vermont probably thought it would favor the interests of his bill to have this commission appointed. But that makes no difference. The question is this: Are we in favor of doing something? The House committee, when it came to consider this resolution, called Senator PAGE before it and received his testimony. It also called Senator SMITH, representing the other idea, and his testimony is published. Both of these gentlemen stand for their respective bills, but they are a unit in declaring that in order to get some legislation passed they must adopt some plan of compromise such as this.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the House to this proposition. Both of these gentlemen say it is not likely or probable that they can secure the passage of any legislation unless this resolution is passed. Gentlemen here say that the passage of this resolution will delay legislation. In view of the facts I have stated I can not see how gentlemen who really favor legislation can so believe. They say they are in favor of the Lever bill, and yet they are opposing this proposition which, if defeated, will have the practical effect of killing the Lever bill, because it is admitted that if the Lever bill should pass the House, this or some other resolution would be substituted in the Senate. Of what use is it for gentlemen to cavil? They say this will cause delay. Their constituents, the farmers of the country, will not believe that.

They will understand that conditions are such as to demand the passage of this resolution if legislation is to be secured. They will understand that the passage of this resolution will facilitate and not delay substantial legislation. Gentlemen object to the expense, when every dollar spent will secure for Congress and the country information which is greatly needed and without which intelligent action can hardly be taken. Gentlemen object to a commission whose report and recommendation they say may be entirely ignored. It should be remembered, on this side at least, that the reports and recommendations of the Tariff Commission were not carried out. But the information which they accumulated has been used by all students of the subject, ever since it became available, to the manifest benefit of all. Such objections ought not to go far in influencing the action of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS] has the floor.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I thought the gentleman's time had expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has 35 minutes remaining.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question which is in the interest of what seems to be nothing more than fair discussion? Nearly all the speeches so far have been made in support of this measure. I want to speak against it, and only for about 10 minutes, and I will ask the gentleman if he could not allow me to present a few observations now, and thus break the one-sided flow of argument.

Mr. POWERS. Without coming out of my time?

Mr. HARDY. Without prejudice to the gentleman's time.

Mr. POWERS. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman can reserve the balance of his time.

Mr. POWERS. I want to state, however, that I do not yield the floor except for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has 35 minutes remaining.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. POWERS. When the gentleman from Texas has finished, I again obtain possession of the floor, do I not?

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection to it. The gentleman could not yield the floor to the gentleman from Texas and reserve that right if any objection is made to it.

Mr. POWERS. I will yield to the gentleman with that understanding.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman yields the floor I wish the gentleman would yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, as I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. POWERS. Well, I can not possibly do that.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the understanding of the Chair that the gentleman from Kentucky reserves his time.

Mr. POWERS. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas, but I understand I am not to yield the floor, the time not to be taken out of my time, and when the gentleman from Texas has finished I am to have the floor for the remainder of my time. With that understanding, I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, at this late hour of the day, with the few Members present who have studied this question more than I, doubtless there is no opportunity for me to change anybody—if, indeed, I otherwise could—but I mainly wish to make these remarks to let the people I represent understand the situation here and the position I take. I want to say that this country could live and would live if our General Government were one perfectly centralized in form and if the several States were converted into mere districts or provinces; but I do say it would not be the country or Government it has been and, I hope, will always be—that is, a federal or confederated Government of sovereign States. Through the gold-baited hook which is being held out by the Congress and the Treasury of the United States to the different States we are in danger of being caught and landed in the net of complete centralization. We are in danger of surrendering to the Federal Government all of the natural powers of our original State governments. Now, I want to say furthermore that the Democratic Party has twice given utterance in its platform to expressions upon this subject, or one similar to it. In 1908 they used this expression:

The Democratic Party favors the extension of agricultural, mechanical, and industrial education. We therefore favor the establishment of district agricultural experiment stations and secondary agricultural and mechanical colleges in the several States.

And that would cover the broad scope of this resolution to extend national aid to vocational education. But mark you how that clause in our 1908 platform is concluded:

We therefore favor the establishment of district agricultural experiment stations and secondary agricultural and mechanical colleges in the several States.

Evidently that platform plank was put there with reference to a special bill something like the Lever bill, passed by a Democratic House, to aid agricultural training, and while it starts out with agricultural, mechanical, and industrial, it winds up with only agricultural. This was in pursuance of the policy of aiding agricultural and mechanical colleges, a policy inaugurated, as I remember it, largely on account of the fact that we had a great public fund in the National Treasury that came not from taxation but from a sale of public domain. In its inception it was fought, I think, by some who feared the encroachment of Federal upon State authority and powers, and its opponents were silenced or beaten by safeguards against what was deemed its evil trend and by the golden bait it held out to the States. We have traveled this road some time, and the Agricultural Department is doing all it can to aid the farmer, and the Bureau and Department of Labor is doing all it can to aid labor, and I am in favor of all these things, as my votes will show, in so far as we can go within the purview of our Constitution and without surrendering the rights of local self-government.

A similar plank occurs in the platform of 1912, as follows:

We recognize the value of vocational education, and urge Federal appropriations for such training and extension teaching in agriculture in cooperation with the several States.

Mr. POWERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Certainly.

Mr. POWERS. Is it your construction of the Democratic platform that it meant to indorse only agricultural education?

Mr. HARDY. Specifically it does only indorse agricultural education, or agricultural aid, but it says that "we recognize the value of vocational education."

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Most assuredly.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I want to suggest to the gentleman that in all agricultural colleges there is also the allied principle of mechanical arts, and the intention of that language was to continue that system. I might say I drew that plank and submitted it to the committee at Denver.

Mr. HARDY. That all the more confirms my view that the plank was drawn with reference to bills favoring such agricultural institutions and specifically aiding agriculture and not in the broad sense of vocational education in general.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. Under those conditions, would the gentleman oppose a resolution providing for an inquiry as to education other than that of agriculture?

Mr. HARDY. Under my present apprehension of my duty, I would oppose a resolution of inquiry on agricultural education or any other, but I would not oppose such a bill as the Lever bill, for the simple reason that I feel bound by my platform to support that bill or some similar bill.

Mr. MOORE. That would not prevent the gentleman from considering the propriety of educating boys that are not being trained in agriculture exclusively?

Mr. HARDY. I want to say, probably to meet the point the gentleman is thinking of, that as a Democrat, as an American, as a citizen, I believe that every other vocation ought to stand on a level with agriculture.

Mr. MOORE. That is fair.

Mr. HARDY. And therefore as a matter of principle, I would support or favor the National Government providing training schools for the miner, the engineer, and for every other vocation as quickly as for agriculture. That is the reason why this broadened resolution has a tendency to open my eyes to the ultimate consequence of embarking on this sea of legislation.

Now, let me see what it amounts to when we get fairly embarked on the sea, as the policy has been unfolded here to-day by its friends. Its early years will cost the Government fourteen million to fifteen million of dollars per annum, and I apprehend before we are long on the voyage it will cost the Federal Government up in the hundreds of millions of dollars.

Now, why do I oppose it? I oppose it because the Democratic platform of 1912 gives me ample and just reasons why I should oppose it in principle, notwithstanding I might be bound to vote for a specific bill. In another paragraph of that platform we say:

Believing that the most efficient results under our system of government are to be attained by the full exercise by the States of their reserved sovereign powers, we denounce as usurpation the efforts of our opponents to deprive the States of any of the rights reserved to them and to enlarge and magnify by indirection the powers of the Federal Government.

I want to tell you the danger to the State governments in the future years will all come from the fact that the Federal Treasury hangs its glittering and alluring bait of dollars and cents before our patriotism and the local self-government principle that we have espoused and stood by for so long. We do not stop to think of the hook when we look at the bait. The temptation comes when we see the opportunity to get our hands into the Federal Treasury, to reach them down and pull out a little of the coin of Uncle Sam and devote it to the uses of the State. I am not a stickler for restricting the powers of this Congress by strained construction of the Constitution when the rights of the people are sought to be upheld, but I do want to warn the Democrats of this country that every time we take a step toward putting our hands into the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of our people, without full or at least strong warrant of the Constitution, we are surrendering the policies and principles of our fathers, and not only that but we are surrendering the soundest policy that was embedded in the framework of this Government when the Constitution was instituted; that is, the policy of local self-government.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. HARDY. Certainly.

Mr. POWERS. May I ask if the gentleman from Texas is opposed to Federal aid to the agricultural colleges throughout the country?

Mr. HARDY. I am going to give the gentleman my view on that as I go along.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ABERCROMBIE] in a very able address stated, in answer to a question of mine, that the logic of his argument was that the Federal Government should aid in the training of children for all vocations, and when I asked him if his logic did not lead him further to the conclusion that the Federal Government should aid in the education of the children of the land in all lines from A to Z, he said it did; and then he supplemented that by saying that he was in favor of that proposition; that is, to start in with our common schools, with the toddling child learning its letters, and go on up to the ripe and finished scholar or industrial expert.

I want to tell you that when you take from the local governments the right to have something to do with the training of the minds and principles of the children that are coming up and surrender it to the Federal Government, which comes in due order and in due season, following the policies foreshadowed by this resolution, you will say to California: "It is not a matter for California to say whether the oriental races and her people shall go to school together." You will say to the South: "It is not a question for you to determine whether the white child and the black child shall go to school together," for where the pocketbook which runs the institution is, there the control evermore must be.

I know that the bills which have been introduced have provided that the Federal Government shall pay one-half and the States one-half, but if we take as our warrant the general welfare clause of the Constitution, so eloquently presented by the gentleman from Alabama, and say that every State is equally interested in the education of the children of every other State, and therefore their education is a duty devolving upon the Federal Government, then we will soon reach the point where we shall call upon the Federal Government to supply all the funds necessary to run our schools; and when you do it, who will control your schools but the Federal Government?

Mr. Chairman, I propose to stand bound by the platform of my party, but whenever that platform, in my judgment, is wrong I shall not go further than the platform calls on me to go, and if a bill in aid of an agricultural college within the purview of that platform came before this House I should vote for it, not because I wanted to, but because I thought in honor I was bound to. But I think it is high time now to utter a word of warning and strike a note of alarm to notify our people of the direction in which we are tending and where we are going.

You people on that side, as well as our people in the Southland, do not want to surrender the autonomy of your States, to have them become provinces or districts of a single State. When the Federal Government interfered with the enforcement of your railroad legislation in Iowa, a Republican attorney general of that State was the first attorney general in the United States to go to jail rather than to submit to the authority of the Federal Government forbidding him to bring a suit under a State law.

If we are lured by the golden bait the time will come when we shall have spread the authority of the Federal Government over all walks of life in all this land, North and South, East and West, and in the little State of Rhode Island and in the big State of Texas we will find our people appealing from the power of the Federal Government when it is exercised contrary to their sense of justice and right, but I fear appealing in vain. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This precedent will rise to plague us, as bad precedents always do.

Our Government is now being carried along various lines by good men who, however, are looking at things with a oneness of vision that sees but in a straight line—sees but the end desired. They are asking that the Federal Government take up this line of treatment and another line of treatment. Now it is education—vocational education; soon it will be—indeed some are now ready to ask—that the Government shall see to the education of all the children in all matters.

And there is another thing that I want to say, and that is that when you remove the power of training your children from your locality and place it in a central control—for instance, at Washington, where general knowledge of conditions exists but local knowledge of your conditions does not exist—you will lose interest in the training school, especially when you do not pay direct taxes for it. I have paid taxes since I reached the age of maturity in order to uphold the public-school system in my State, and I am glad of it. I want to say one thing about that. While we have a magnificent school system, yet the patrons of that system do not take as much interest in it now as they took in schools when each parent went down in his pocket to pay the tuition of his child, as they did when I was a child. And in future, further pursuing the idea, if instead of paying 1 per cent tax for the support of a public school, as we do in Texas now, we learn to know that the fund to support the public school comes from the National Treasury, derived from the collection of duties on imports or from income taxes on the wealth of the land, how much will our people be interested in the character of the schools or the system of schooling? Little by little you will turn over to the Federal Government the entire training of the children of this land. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. POWERS. I understood the gentleman from Texas desired more time. How much time does he desire?

Mr. HARDY. I shall not take longer, Mr. Chairman. I had not thought of discussing this subject till it came up unexpectedly to me, and I want to apologize for having detained the committee thus long.

Mr. POWERS. I will yield further time to the gentleman if he desires.

Mr. HARDY. I thank the gentleman. I want simply to add that I want our people to study this question before we again put a plank in our platform about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] out of his own time?

Mr. POWERS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has 35 minutes remaining.

Mr. POWERS. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the remarks of the last speaker, the eloquent gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], and I have been particularly struck with one vein of thought which he has brought out here, and that is the bringing into this debate of the element of partisanship. I am extremely sorry that that thought seems to be uppermost in the mind of the gentleman from Texas, because to my mind, if there is any one thing wherein we all, Republicans, Democrats, or Progressives, ought to lose sight of our party allegiance, it is in the question of the education of the rising generation. [Applause.]

The Committee on Education listened attentively to the representative of the Democratic Party, Senator SMITH, and to the representative of the Republican Party, Senator PAGE, not as Democrats or Republicans, but as men interested in the uplifting and welfare of our country and in the proper education of our children. I am surprised that any gentleman on this floor is disposed to say that his judgment will in any way be warped on the question of education by some plank that may or may not at some time have been included in some party platform. I say let us put partisanship to one side when the question of education arises. I am very glad to say that that is what has been done by the Committee on Education under the able leadership of the chairman of that committee, Mr. HUGHES of Georgia.

Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to take the time of the House to elaborate upon what in my own mind I consider to be the origin and the desire on the part of the proposers of this resolution. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], has described the difference of opinion between the two branches as regards the so-called Page bill and the so-called Lever bill. Sufficient it is to say, perhaps, that the enactment of the Lever bill calls for an appropriation of something like $3,000,000, while the enactment of the Page bill calls for something like $15,000,000.

In the committee I suggested a change in the phraseology of one clause, because of the fact that it seems to me when we ask this commission to "study the need and report a plan" we are to a certain extent binding the House and Congress to affirmative legislation looking toward Federal aid to industrial education. I for one believe that the point this commission ought to study principally is the broader question whether or not Federal aid shall be granted to vocational education. It seems to me that that is the basis and foundation of this legislation; but I was perfectly willing not to raise that point to the extent of personally offering that amendment. I think that is the great question, whether or not we are to change the policy of our Government and bring in Federal aid for education, a subject which, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] has said, has so far been limited to a State proposition. Let us first study that question. If the commission are to do anything at all, let them study that question first; and then, if Congress sees fit to adopt a policy of Federal aid, report a plan under which that aid shall be given. I for one am heartily in favor of vocational education, the extension of the opportunity for the young people of the land to better their mental condition and at the same time secure a means of livelihood. But this relationship between the State and the Federal Government is a very broad one, indeed, and, as I have already stated, should be given the first consideration. It seems to me it will be difficult to establish the true relationship between the National Government and the general education already in vogue as provided by the separate States.

In that connection I want to say that about 10 years ago the State I have the honor in part to represent in this body adopted a law whereby a commission on vocational education was established. It was soon found that it was impossible to separate the relationship between the subject of general education and that of vocational education, so that eventually the two boards were consolidated. It seems to me that some trouble is liable to arise when Federal aid is established in its relationship with the other forms of education. Let me state briefly the condition as we find it to-day as the result of the one board having both lines of work to do in Massachusetts.

From the latest report of the board of education I find the present situation to be that 23 approved State-aided vocational schools are in operation in 19 cities and towns of the Commonwealth, having an enrollment of 7,164 pupils and a force of 233 teachers. A number of schools in process of organization have asked for the approval of the board also. The variety of instruction is shown by the fact that during the school year 1911-12, 99 courses in 40 different subjects were given in the evening industrial schools, covering the building trades, electrical trades, engineering, granite workers, jewelry workers, machine trades, ship fitters, woodworking trades, textile trades, and household arts for women. In the day schools in the larger cities very thorough courses are given in the mechanic arts.

Agricultural education is also receiving its rightful attention in our State. Under a law passed by the legislature of 1911 State aid is furnished to the extent of two-thirds the salary of special instructors having approved agricultural departments of a distinct vocational character in rural high schools. A special agent is employed by the board for the sole purpose of stimulating the interest in this department among the various high schools of the State.

The subject of vocational education is regarded as so important that some of our large corporations conduct schools of their own while the pupils are employed by the corporations. Great advancement has been made in Massachusetts, and I am informed similar results have been obtained in other States.

I submit that these State boards, in hearty sympathy with the great subject, are better able to meet the local needs than any Federal authority would be. Should Federal aid be established there will be one of two results—either the National Government will interfere in local and State affairs or else the States will feel themselves in a sense pensioners upon a national bounty, neither condition a desirable one to bring about.

Let this commission be appointed to study this question of the relationship between Federal and State aid before positively binding Congress to furnish Federal aid to industrial education. It has been a success under State authority. Why disturb that present arrangement? Let us do everything possible to extend the system whereby the most practical results may be obtained in behalf of those in whom we are so deeply interested. It must first be positively demonstrated that there will not be a conflict of authority between the Nation and the State which will be prejudicial to the interests of those intended to be benefited. We know that vocational education along with agricultural extension can be successfully carried out under State authority, and the resulting benefits are being daily proven. I therefore urge that a most careful study shall be made of the principle involved before we take any chances of destroying the good methods already in vogue and experiment under a new system and a new principle of national method. Experimenting with education is a dangerous proposition, and Federal aid to industrial education is bound to be an experiment. I therefore urge this House to be very sure that we do not commit ourselves to this policy before thoroughly studying its results and realizing the necessarily complete reorganization of our educational system and the relationship in educational matters between the Nation and the State that would result in Federal aid being granted to vocational education.

Mr. COX rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. COX. For the purpose of getting recognition in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has yet remaining 25 minutes of his hour.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is certainly very interesting. I did not understand him to say that anything had been done in his State along the line of carrying vocational training out on the farms. In the State of North Dakota a considerable fund of experience has already been gained along this line, where education is being taken directly to the farmers. There is a corps of able, well-educated, trained men, who go right out on the farms. It is their business to carry education to the farmers, to come in personal contact with them as they do their work throughout the State. The first year under that system, partly supported by subscription and partly by taxes raised from the different counties served, with only 12 counties partially covered, there were over 2,346 farmers who had received instruction directly on the farm from these field demonstrators. So if this resolution should pass and if this commission should be named, I believe that they can find in North Dakota some very useful information gained from actual experience under a very direct system of vocational education.

The kind of vocational training which was proposed in the Lever bill is perhaps better illustrated in the work now being done in North Dakota than anywhere else in the Union. First of all it should be understood that the work is not done by or through the agricultural college, though our agricultural college is friendly to it. The work is under the direction, management, and supervision of the Better Farming Association of North Dakota, of which Prof. Thomas P. Cooper is secretary and director. Prof. Cooper was formerly a member of the faculty of the University of Minnesota School of Agriculture, and was selected as director of the work of the association in North Dakota on account of his special training and fitness for the work.

The money to carry on the work of the association is partly furnished by personal or private subscriptions and partly from taxes levied by the county boards of such counties as desire to cooperate in raising the money necessary to carry on the work of the association.

The first year of demonstration work was that of 1912, and the association from the beginning realized that the present agricultural problems are so broad and far-reaching that a comprehensive plan of development must touch the very foundations of the economic and social life of those who actually live on the farms. In planning the work it has been clearly kept in mind that progress in any industry is dependent on the individual, and this is particularly true on the farm, where the unit of production consists usually of a family and perhaps one employee, seldom more than that. Hence the plan, very wisely worked out by the Better Farming Association, has been based on the principle of personal contact with the individual who is actually engaged in production.

The plan consists of demonstrations to illustrate certain agricultural facts as they apply to the locality, culminating finally in a general advisory work in regard to the management of the farm and any special farm problems which may exist, and consists of field demonstrations, live-stock demonstrations, and farm-management advisory work.

The demonstration work has been done along the lines indicated in a very interesting statement made by Prof. Cooper, as follows:

Field demonstrations have been instituted in the following forms: (a) Demonstration plats, areas of 20 to 150 acres, on which a rotation has been adopted involving methods of culture and tillage that are applicable to the local conditions.

(b) Demonstration fields, areas of one-third to several acres, on which the growing of new and special crops is demonstrated.

(c) Demonstration farms in which the farm as a whole, including its live stock and all its operations, is used to demonstrate the application of modern agricultural knowledge.

Live-stock demonstrations: The demonstrations in live stock consist in assistance in compounding rations, the breeding, selection, or methods of care of the various classes of stock now found in the State.

Advisory farm management work: Farmers in districts where work is carried on and that with the development of the specific field and live-stock demonstrations there is need for further information in regard to the development of the farm as a unit or in the solving of some particular problem which may not be definitely connected with the demonstrations as given. Hence, there arises a demand for forms of advisory work which shall deal with the specific problems at hand on the individual farm. This form of work is born out of the confidence that has developed from thorough systems of demonstration and will eventually be found most useful to the community and the State, although it must first be based upon careful demonstrational work which shall develop the confidence of the people to the extent that they will accept the advice and aid of the agricultural expert.

Agricultural experts of broad training and experience are placed in counties or districts thereof to develop agricultural interest and induce a change in method. Each man is assigned to a county or part of a county, consisting of from 500 to 800 square miles. He makes his home at some central point and covers the territory often and thoroughly, and is ready to assist and advise those who care to avail themselves of his services.

The work is primarily not one of investigation but of taking personally to the individual operating his own farm the results of investigations as obtained by the Department of Agriculture, the experiment stations, and similar agencies. The field men of this association interpret the results of work and experiments and show their possible application to local conditions. The field demonstrations and personal contact of the field have as their purpose the converting of knowledge now existent into the common practice of large numbers of people engaged in agriculture. All forms of experimental work on the farm are carefully avoided, and only those methods which have been amply demonstrated and worked out are applied to the farms in each locality.

All field or live-stock demonstrations are carried on in cooperation with the farmers without expense to the association. The farmer furnishes labor, machinery, land, seed, etc., and is required to operate under the direction of the agriculturist and is the owner of all crops or products obtained. Summarized, the features of the plan of work are, first, the competent agricultural field agent in personal contact with the farmer receiving assistance, and, second, the cooperation of the farmer in the demonstration, thus securing a maximum of interest.

I believe I have already said that each county pays one-half the cost of the demonstration work. During the first year, 1912, there were 12 counties that went into this very practical scheme of vocational training. The actual work done by the association last year is told in a most interesting statement made to the association in the annual report of Prof. Cooper, from which I quote a few paragraphs, as follows:

The form of work is such that it is difficult to properly convey to the mind the various activities that have been carried on and their effect upon the community. It is only after a period of years that the value of work can be shown, and then as reflected in the changed conditions that prevail in the community or county. Specific forms of field work have been carried on the past year with 2,346 farm cooperators. Each of these men carried on some special form of work under the direction of the representative of the association. The results of the work, so far as possible, are expressed in numerical terms. The following summaries show, so far as possible, the classification of the work and the cropping results obtained this year:

Summary of cooperative work for the season 1912.

The field agent of the association covers his territory regularly, yet he must be available at practically any time to a cooperator needing assistance. Each demonstration is carefully watched, and the agent endeavors to be at the farm whenever a critical condition exists, making it possible to give the directions needed at the time. The number of visits made each cooperator depends upon the character of the cooperation. Some forms of work require but two visits, while others will require several during the season. The fact that there are certain periods during which the great majority of cooperators must be reached promptly is the limiting factor in the number of cooperators each agent can care for.

The yields on the demonstration plats and fields as obtained in 1912 are presented as a matter of record rather than of comparison. One year's time is insufficient in which to obtain results from systematic rotations and tillage methods. The results of rotation and better tillage methods will not be developed for a period of from three to five years. Any increase in the crop yields that has been obtained this year has been due solely to better tillage methods, better varieties of grain, or the use of better seeds, and to the extremely favorable year for crop production.

The results of demonstration work have already been reflected in the desire of many farmers to adopt some form of rotation to the entire farm. The results of the year's cropping have not proven the value of a rotation, but the rotations adopted for use on the different farms appear so logical that already farmers are preparing to adopt them bodily on the entire farm. No standard form of rotation has been adopted. Varying conditions of soil, altitude, and climate have presented different problems. The effort has been made to consider each individual case and to adopt a system of cropping that would fit its need. So far as possible clover and timothy have been made use of as the grass crop. The farm manures have been applied on sod or to the corn ground.

The methods of cultivation and tillage recommended by the field agents have been such as were capable of adoption on the entire farm. The economics of the farm business have been kept in mind and the application of labor limited to the amount that would prove profitable. Generally speaking, the extra cost of farming land under direction of the association has been approximately $1 per acre. It is seldom that additional labor of men and horses would exceed in cost $1.50 over the ordinary methods of culture.

Demonstration plats or fields have been located so far as possible on soils that represent the average conditions of the locality. Average land has been obtained and soils avoided that were to a marked degree better or worse than the surrounding lands. Thus the future results as obtained from demonstration should reflect the possibilities of the vicinity.

Special attention should be given to the acreage of alfalfa sown this year under the direction of the association. In the districts where work is developed a much larger acreage, three to four times as much, has been sown, due to the interest aroused in this crop by the field agents. There is little question but what the crop will be uniformly successful over the greater portion of the State. The work of this year will result in the seeding of a very large acreage in 1913. Experience of this past year and the condition of the alfalfa crop before going into the winter give every reason to believe that with more common knowledge as to the successful methods of culture the crop will become important and profitable.

Attention is being directed to the production of corn more generally throughout the State. In spite of its manifest advantages as a crop the latest estimates of the Bureau of Statistics of the United States Department of Agriculture show an average of slightly over 4 acres of corn per farm. The acreage sown to the corn crop should be much increased and varieties of corn grown which will mature in the average season. The results of this year's corn contest have demonstrated that corn may be matured in all sections of the State and that satisfactory average yields may be secured. Future corn production in the State depends almost entirely upon the use of home-grown seed and the development of suitable local strains or varieties. This is to be accomplished locally through the demonstration fields and breeding plats.

The development of interest and the use of live stock on the farm is an essential part of the work of the association. Demonstrations in this phase of the work have been limited the past season because of the necessity of starting field work and preparing a sound basis for the future development of the live-stock industry. Interest is very much increased in this phase of agriculture. Some definite cooperation in the way of feeding, care, and selection of the dairy cow, swine, and poultry has been given. Much additional help will be offered this winter. Already plans are well developed for the organization of cow-testing associations, community breeding circuits, and the purchase of special types of live stock for these groups.

In addition to the work which has been presented in tabular form a large amount of work has been reported which is of definite value to the public, but which can not be estimated numerically. The representatives of this association have assisted the farmers along practically every line of endeavor which affects the profit and home life of the farm. To illustrate some of the features of the field work which have not been otherwise presented, but which represent actual accomplishment, the following examples are given:

The furnishing of plans and assistance in the construction of all farm buildings, including special assistance and advice in the construction of silos; securing and distributing farm labor—two representatives of the association secured and placed where most needed 320 farm laborers; the organization of marketing associations and the construction of potato warehouses; the reorganization of farms for better systems of farm management or crop rotation; securing and distributing large quantities of special varieties of grains and grasses; the adjustment of farm machinery; simple veterinary work; the organization of community breeding circuits; purchase of live stock; organization of circuits for testing of cattle for tuberculosis; work in the country schools—instructing the boys and girls as to better agricultural methods or forming corn clubs; cooperation with local commercial clubs; county superintendents of schools interested in work affecting rural conditions; the holding of numerous local fairs, grain and corn contests, and a colt show; the oversight and judging of the State acre-yield corn contest; and much special work in relation to the farm home, the planning of grounds, the growing of wind breaks, and numerous other forms of work, small in themselves, but significant from the viewpoint of the farmer as showing actual accomplishment that is on a par with the production of more or better grains.

Prof. Cooper concludes his report to the Better Farming Association in these words:

The ideal of education and instruction has been to make knowledge useful to a large proportion of the population. This the Better Farming Association has attempted to do from an agricultural standpoint. With the counties of the State as schoolrooms, the farm, the growing crops, and the live stock as illustrative material and texts, and with the farmers and their families as cooperating students, the representatives of this association have, under all kinds of conditions, endeavored to present the fundamental agricultural truths in a way and in such a form that they would be immediately useful. The year's work has proven that the method of organization and forms of work adopted by the association are effective; that farmers are ready to cooperate along lines that promise results, and that many people find use for a district or county agriculturist who is in position to give definite advice and help. Work of this nature is no longer an experiment. With a force of 20 men in the field, the year past has convinced all who have watched the progress of the association that this is one of the most effective methods of carrying on agricultural work that has been attempted. It may safely be assumed that with the foundation for work that has been laid this year the next year will show much greater results along more specific lines. It may be expected that in time the cumulative effect of the succeeding years' work will take an important part in placing the agriculture of North Dakota upon a permanent and profitable basis.

A number of additional counties of our State have been added to the list this year for field and other demonstration work, and while I have no official report and no statistics respecting what has been done this year, the work of the Better Farming Association, Director Cooper, and his very able corps of assistants, has received the commendation and approval of those who live in counties where the vocational training is being done.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to again suggest that if this joint resolution is adopted the commission appointed by the President should investigate with special care the results of the Better Farming Association of North Dakota working in cooperation with certain of its counties, which furnish perhaps the best practical example in the United States of vocational training as applied to agriculture.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some confusion in the minds of the committee as to what vocational education is, and as to the provisions of the two great bills, the names of which we have heard so often this afternoon, the Page bill and the Lever bill. I understand the purpose and object of those bills are entirely different, and that there is no reason in the world why they should be considered together, or why there should be confusion in the mind of anyone respecting them. The Page bill provides for Federal aid to teach vocations in the schools and for the establishment of schools. The Lever bill provides for the employment of educated, experienced, practical men to go from the agricultural colleges and from the Department of Agriculture right out into the country and onto the very farms themselves and give to the farmers the results of experiments and investigations which the department and colleges have been making during years and years by the use of Federal and State money. The Lever bill passed the House and it went to the Senate. A great deal had been done in making sentiment favorable to that bill.

It was found to be very popular. The author of the Page bill and those who were particularly anxious to secure its passage through the Senate realized the popularity of the Lever bill, and, thinking that they might have a chance to pass their bill by attaching it to the Lever bill, they offered it as an amendment to the Lever bill and passed them together through the Senate. The House refused to accept the Lever bill so amended, and the two measures, or the one composite measure as it were, died between the two Houses. Now, when the suggestion is made that the question of vocational education be investigated and studied and a report made to Congress, it is suggested that that will delay consideration of the Lever bill. It seems to me that can come only from those who altogether misunderstand the purpose and object of the Lever bill and misunderstand altogether what vocational education is.

A word in regard to the Lever bill. Starting away back in 1862, when the Morrill Act was passed, agricultural colleges were established in the States by Federal aid, and from time to time acts have been passed by Congress providing money for assistance to those colleges in the establishment and maintenance of experiment stations. Those colleges have been making experiments and investigations, and have been piling up results until the shelves are literally loaded and groaning with the information, and the heads of the men who have been devoting their time to this work are filled with this information, but there has been absolutely no means by which the information could be taken out to the people who needed it and could make use of it. It was thought at first when those appropriations were made, when the colleges were established, when the Hatch Act and the Adams Act supplemented the Morrill Act, that it would be only necessary to conduct those colleges, where the scientific part of agriculture could be studied and investigated and the result could be taken to the farm by way of bulletins and other literature and by way of institutes and lectures. But it has been found that those methods have entirely failed. Educated men representing the department and the colleges within the last year, almost without number, have come before the Committee on Agriculture and told us that their methods of work and their methods of acquiring knowledge have been effective, but their methods of disseminating it have been found altogether wanting, they have been found ineffective, and they are with one voice now advocating the Lever bill, which provides for practical instruction, not in the schools, not by way of teaching a vocation, but by sending men who know right out on the farm to get down to the soil alongside the farmer, who wants to know, to talk to him about the results of the investigations and the experiments which the agricultural colleges and the department have made.

The Lever bill, which passed this House a year ago, contained a provision that 75 per cent of all the money appropriated by Congress and by the States for this particular purpose should be spent in this practical work, realizing as we did that when money was appropriated by Congress heretofore it was used within the colleges. When we asked them to take some of the money appropriated under former laws and use it outside, they said the laws did not permit them to do so; that they must use that money within the colleges, so it is absolutely necessary to have the money provided by the Lever bill to carry the practical work out to the men upon the farms. Now, that bill provides for one line of work and the Page bill for one radically different from it, as it provides for work within the schools. The Lever bill when it has matured, if it becomes a law, will carry an annual appropriation of $3,480,000. The Page bill, if it were to become a law, would call for an annual appropriation of upward of $15,000,000. I have examined the Page bill, I have read it over and over again in an effort thoroughly to understand it, and I fail to comprehend what it means, and I doubt if anyone—well, I doubt if the ordinary man can read that bill and understand the line of work to be provided for under it. I was very forcibly impressed, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this committee, with the broad nature of this vocational-education proposition and the need of much more study than any committee of this House has ever given to it before a proper bill can be framed and a proper plan put into operation.

I do not doubt the ability of the Committee on Agriculture of the House or the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate, by giving plenty of time, to devise a proper plan. But I have favored this resolution because I have confidence in the President that he will appoint good men to give exhaustive study to the question of vocational education, and I have thought that they will present to Congress a mass of information that will be valuable to the committee, and suggest a plan that will be the beginning of the work to be done by the committee in framing a bill for vocational education.

Mr. KINDEL. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. KINDEL. I would like to ask you as to the adoption of a plan for geographical education, or commercial geographical education, as well as vocational education. What would the one be without the other? If you had everything at hand, with the knowledge to perform it, and did not have the wherewith to get there, how would you make the people prosperous? In other words, without the transportation-question study in connection with the vocational, how would you make them prosperous? Has the gentleman given that any thought? That is what I wanted to ask him.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That kind of education has not been suggested to us in committee as vocational education, although I suppose it might be included, and it might be proper for Congress to make appropriation to carry it on. [Applause.]

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the discussion of this resolution shall be closed at 5 o'clock.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I can not agree to that. Nearly all the speaking has been done by those who favor the resolution. It is now about 4 o'clock, and I do not believe that the gentlemen can finish the consideration of it to-day. I suggest that the committee rise and the House adjourn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] objects.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not objected yet.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The general debate can not be closed in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. There is a gentleman whom I am very anxious should present his views, and as he leaves here this afternoon I sincerely hope that the gentleman will withdraw his motion until we hear from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. It will only take a short time. He is a member of the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think any arrangement ought to be made whereby Members may leave here at this particular time. So if it will help to hold Members in the city of Washington I think I should object for that reason.

Mr. MONDELL. May I inquire how long the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] desires to talk?

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. He desires 30 minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to be heard, but I would like to have the privilege of extending some remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FOSTER. No. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TOWNER. Let me make this suggestion. Suppose the time be yielded to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] to make his address, with the understanding that the committee at the end of the address shall rise.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be satisfactory to me.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. I agree with that.

Mr. COX. I do not know whether we will all agree to that or not, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FOSTER. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent that any Member of the House, whether he has spoken on this resolution or not, shall have the right to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that you can not make a blanket order like that in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. POWERS. I will make this proposition, then, namely, that any Member who has spoken—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands such an order can not be made in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Each individual can ask it for himself, but not for anyone else.

Mr. POWERS. I will grant the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is recognized for 14 minutes.

Mr. KINDEL. Before the gentleman proceeds—

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. KINDEL. I would like to ask unanimous consent to publish some statistical reports on transportation, freight, and parcel post in connection with the remarks I have made here to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KINDEL] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks upon transportation charges and parcel post in connection with his remarks made here to-day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me so that I may make a request?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. I desire to offer an amendment fixing the time when this resolution shall go into effect.

Mr. TOWNER. That can only be done when the resolution is taken up under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order under general debate.

Mr. MOORE. If I may be permitted to make my request, I wanted to have it offered now and read for information and have it considered as pending.

Mr. FOSTER. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that that can not be done now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] makes the point of order, and the point of order is sustained. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is recognized for 14 minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, one-fifth of the entire population of the United States is in school now. As much money is being expended by the States and the Nation for education as for almost any other subject. There is no one phase of national life that ought to be a subject of national concern with deeper meaning than that of education. [Applause.] And while we in Congress are speaking of the wealth of our country and saying that the farms in a single year will produce something like

While we become very enthusiastic here upon the floor in speaking for the material advantage of the country, the one thing that this Congress ought never to forget is that the real source of this wealth is not to be measured in the markets. You can not measure it out by the yardstick. It can not be measured by the bushel. It can not be estimated by dollars. It is a matter of soul and heart culture, and the one chiefest of all functions of a government is to supply the needed education of the boys and girls who are to become the energizing forces in the production of this wealth in the future. [Applause.]

Everybody seems to be agreed that something ought to be done, but gentlemen are at some variance as to how it should be done. They are also a little in doubt as to who should do it. Of the millions of children that go to school, less than 2 per cent graduate in college and less than 6 per cent graduate in high schools. Ninety-three per cent of all the children that enter the schools of this country in every State leave the schools before they reach the high school. Ninety-three per cent.

I ask, What are we doing for the benefit of the 93 per cent that leave the schools in the grades? What is their position, going out of the grades, in order to do the work with which they have to make their living? Is our education adapted to-day to enabling my child when he leaves the grades to live a better life, a more productive life? What have we done to insure this? State after State has tried to do something. The Federal Government, assisted in 1862 by the Morrill Act, and then again in the second Morrill Act of 1890, and then again in 1906, and still again in 1907, and there did not seem to be very much objection to the Nation helping at that time.

I am sorry that my distinguished and eloquent and fair-minded friend from Texas [Mr. HARDY] is not at this moment present here. Every single objection that that distinguished Member of the House offered to this proposed vocational education resolution could be opposed legitimately to every effort of this Government, whether it be in the line of agricultural or industrial education or along the line of education in improved transportation, as suggested by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KINDEL].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. FESS. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Ohio what he thinks about the principle involved in the Lever bill, and that is that an appropriation out of the Federal Treasury shall be conditioned upon an appropriation by the State? That is, the State shall not obtain an appropriation from the Federal Government unless it first makes an appropriation itself. Does the gentleman think that is a correct principle?

Mr. FESS. I want to answer my good friend from Tennessee that I have not sufficiently gone into the merits of the specific question he asks, which demands a specific answer, to enable me to commit myself here. But I will say this: I oppose any plan in this Congress in matters of education that would take the education out of the States. I do, however, want such a mutuality between the State and Nation that if the Government assists the State the State will also pull up and do its part. However, that is not in this resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, no; it is not in this resolution.

Mr. FESS. My point is that State after State has offered certain things. Individual after individual has proposed certain things. Association after association has proposed certain things. We have a national association for the promotion of industrial education, a great movement in this country. They have proposed a certain thing. We have the famous National Educational Association of the country. They have proposed a certain thing. We have the National Association of Superintendents of the country. They have proposed a certain thing. We have 17 different fugitive associations that have interests in the vocational life of the country suggesting certain things, but we do not unify on anything. One pulls this way and another pulls that way. Here is a suggestion raised by my friend from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], which indicates a difference, and we do not get together. The Lever bill offers some objections, and we do not reach them. The Page bill offers some objections, and we do not reach them. There seems to be a lack of a clarifying plan to unify a system of vocational training. And let nobody confuse the idea of vocational training with the idea of agricultural training or with the idea of industrial training. Industrial training is one thing. That is for the urban community. On the other hand, agricultural training is another thing, and that is for the rural community. But vocational training is a combination of the industrial and the agricultural, and this bill is to provide for the appointment of a commission of experts to look into these conflicting ideas and to report back to this House a clarifying plan, if they can decide upon it, for us to have something concrete to work upon. And that is no reflection upon the committees of this House. These committees have plenty of work.

What we want is not a Member of this House to devote his time to making this investigation, but we want—and I am sure every Member here will understand the sentiment and the spirit in which I speak it—we want one of the best-equipped men in the world to make this appointment, and I want it done when he is in the presidential chair. For there is no man who touches upon the needs of education, both industrial, agricultural, and cultural, in a more clarifying sense than Woodrow Wilson. [Applause.] He knows how to do it, and if we do not do it at this time I do not know whether we will come any closer to it hereafter. And the thing that concerns me is, Why can not we who believe in vocational education, who believe in industrial education, who believe in agricultural education, who believe in cultural education, agree to have a commission of experts to make their report? Then we will have something to work upon. This, to me, is the thing that is most important.

Now, who are objecting? One is objecting upon the constitutional ground. That can be relieved. If the Nation is to take full control and dominate the education of my State of Ohio, I am opposed to a measure like this, because education is a local matter, and I think most of this House would oppose the idea of national domination of local education. Others are objecting upon the ground that vocational education is not a function of this Government; that we do not have a national system of education, and should not have a national system of education; that we ought to have 48 State systems of education, but not a national system; and they say education is not a national function. Do we really, sincerely believe that education is not a function of the National Government? We found bad food and we passed the pure-food law for the sake of the stomachs of our citizens. We found bad conditions in labor centers, and we passed laws here making better conditions for labor in the country by saying to certain centers of business, "You must improve; you must do away with certain things, and make sanitation a greater asset of the Government." If we have not yet regulated child labor, we will do it, because that is a function of this Government. We can go into the subject of a national law on divorce and marriage, because that reaches the home, and that is what we are going to do.

Mr. COX. Why not religion, then?

Mr. FESS. Religion is a horse of another color. There are too many. There is only a man and a woman to be married.

Mr. COX. And there is only one soul to be saved or lost.

Mr. FESS. And does the gentleman think the Government ought to save it?

Mr. COX. That is your argument.

Mr. FESS. The biggest thing you can do is to save a soul to the usefulness of a useful life, and there is nothing like education to put a boy on his feet and help him to do that. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. By law?

Mr. FESS. Make the law help him. This good friend from Indiana wants to reduce the cost of living. You can not do it by tariff legislation—and you will find that out later on—but I will tell you how you can do it. You will increase the production of the acreage of this country through scientific agriculture, and as you increase the production you will meet the demand and your prices will come down. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. COX. In my judgment you will never increase the yield of the acreage in this country by virtue of a few theoretical professors, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] said a moment ago, but you will increase it by virtue of the farmer who knows what is practical.

Mr. FESS. I would say to my friend from Indiana, if the theoretical professor is an obstacle to legislation, what about your President to-day? Is he an obstacle? [Applause.]

Mr. COX. He is a practical man in addition to being a theoretical professor.

Mr. FESS. And we want a practical man to appoint a practical commission to report a practical plan of vocational education.

Mr. COX. But are you going to get him?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. COX. Have you got him selected?

Mr. FESS. Oh, we do not presume to say what the President will do. I say to you, my friend, that President Woodrow Wilson has his eyes now upon 20 men, any one of whom has become a tremendous power in vocational training. Think about President Van Hise, of the University of Wisconsin, and other men who can be named. Think of your own Secretary of Agriculture, Prof. Houston, and others—Dr. Claxton, if you please. But, then, we do not want to take them out of Congress, and we do not especially want to take them out of the Cabinet or out of the Presidency. We want President Wilson to use his best judgment in the selection of the men who will not do it for political reasons, but who will do it for the good of the public.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may continue for 15 minutes more. I promised the gentleman that much time, but was compelled to give it to others.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will modify his request and ask that the gentleman be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio is speaking now in the time of the gentleman from Kentucky. The gentleman from Ohio would be entitled to recognition if he should rise and ask for it. There is no need for asking unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. He is entitled to recognition, except that the Chair has promised to recognize the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee will waive his rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio, then, is recognized in his own right.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman spoke just now of a unified system of education. Would it be the gentleman's idea that there ought to be a unified system of vocational education throughout the length and breadth of the Union?

Mr. FESS. I would say to the gentleman that I used the phrase very loosely.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman would not hamper the States in their initiative?

Mr. FESS. Oh, no.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Or in any given measure that would differentiate their education from that of any other State?

Mr. FESS. Certainly not. I would not want to make a system that would apply to every State alike, or make boxes all of the same size and put everybody in those boxes. I think there is not anything so serious in educational matters as to cut the cloth for everyone after the same pattern. I thank the gentleman for bringing that question to my mind. I used the expression in a very loose manner.

Mr. TAYLOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. TAYLOR of New York. The gentleman's idea and purpose is to offer inducements to the States in the form of money so the States might perfect their system along the line of the system outlined by the National Government?

Mr. FESS. That was the idea.

Mr. TAYLOR of New York. That is substantially the gentleman's idea.

Mr. FESS. That is the idea. There is not to be a uniform system that every State must follow out.

Mr. TAYLOR of New York. The gentleman did not intend, as was implied by the gentleman from Texas, that this Government should take over the entire educational system and say to one State, "You have got to do just what we want," whether its conditions required it or not?

Mr. FESS. No; I would oppose that.

Mr. TAYLOR of New York. The gentleman just offers inducements to the States by the payment of money. You say to them, "If you will live up to this requirement in your educational system and in accordance with this resolution, we will give you so much money."

Mr. FESS. That is the idea. Or, in other words, it seems to me we ought to appeal to the man who is making the laws for the Nation to plan for an increased productiveness of the citizens of the State and the citizens of the Nation, and productiveness is not to be confined to this or that particular field. For example, we have a decline of agriculture in the New England States. As you know, people have gone to the West, and now they are working the farms of the West until the farms there are not producing as much as they used to produce when they first began cultivation. In other words, our population is increasing by leaps and bounds. The demands upon our people are increasing, and yet our supply of the needs of these demands are not increasing, but rather are decreasing. That is what I think we ought to look after, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] made it very clear that we should not simply build schools for the education of teachers in the schools, for the education of trainers of agriculture, but we ought to establish a system or create an atmosphere whereby the boy or the girl who will go to a training school in agriculture or in any industry, when that boy and girl gets through they will return to the farm; so that they will not be educated away from the farm, but will be educated back to the farm. In other words, we ought not simply to train teachers or experts, but we want our experts to take their children and train them to be producers in anything they themselves have studied.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. The discussion always comes back to the farm, and I am very glad to have it come back there; but the question of industrial centers always arises, and we ought to consider that, and that comes to me in view of the question raised by the gentleman from Virginia—that among the producers of the country are not only the farmers, and we propose to provide for that particular industry, but there are other industrialists who ought to be considered—those who live in the congested cities, the men who toil in the mines, the men who fish for a living, all of whom are producers and conduce to the wealth of the country just as much as the farmer does in proportion. Now, how are you going to educate those; how are you going to provide for those by this system of educational aid?

Mr. FESS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks a question that certainly gives new impetus to the argument for the need of such a commission. He puts a question which goes beyond what we have here discussed. We have been confining what we have said to what could be done on the farm. Now, the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is, What are you going to do with the child who is not in the centers, who is not some specialist, who is some unskilled worker; what are you going to do for those who are unskilled? It seems to me that so much more is the need of a commission to study the needs of our people; and while this commission probably would not cover it, it might be so enlarged that it could cover it.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. Do I understand that the gentleman is in favor of this commission reporting by the 1st of December?

Mr. FESS. The bill was introduced early in the Senate, and then it was reported, I think, some time about June, and at the time it was introduced they put in it the phrase "December 1st," and when it came to our committee we at once said that no commission that would go into the details of the work could scarcely report that soon, and we asked that that be changed.

Mr. RAKER. Now, what I was driving at was this: How long does the gentleman, from his experience, believe that it would take a commission to gather the appropriate data on which to report back to the House a plan on which the House or the Congress could act?

Mr. FESS. I would answer the gentleman from California that there can be men named in the United States, known to President Wilson, who could report it, I think, in two months easily.

Mr. RAKER. Now, I want to ask the gentleman this question: Is it not peculiar and is it not strange that we have been driving the boys from the farm and from industrial education when we have had these great men who could have given them a plan, but who have not given them any, when now in two months you are going to select 10 men that are going to revolutionize this whole thing?

Mr. FESS. I would answer my friend from California that there has been plan after plan proposed, submitted to committees, and special committees of investigation—dozens of them—have reported plans, but every single committee was voluntary, and there was no official character about it at all. Now, why do you not give it an official character?

Mr. RAKER. Then the real purpose is, whoever is appointed, to give it an official character, and if anyone differs from the report of the commission when they bring it back then he is opposed to all educational propositions along this line?

Mr. FESS. No; nothing of the kind. No committee should be so arrogant as to think that they have recommended a plan that must not be modified.

Mr. RAKER. I am seeking information. There have been several committees appointed and have made reports. Are not those reports accessible?

Mr. FESS. Those reports are accessible in the records of these associations.

Mr. RAKER. Can they not be obtained?

Mr. FESS. I will insert some of those reports in my address if the House will allow.

Mr. RAKER. I am more than willing to let you do it.

Mr. FESS. They will be in the RECORD.

Mr. RAKER. They are all different?

Mr. FESS. They differ in detail—that is, in minor matters.

Mr. RAKER. But in the principal proposition there is no difference?

Mr. FESS. No difference. There are certain elements of objection, and, strange to say, they come from college men.

Mr. RAKER. That is nothing against them.

Mr. FESS. That is nothing against them; but, strange to say, it comes from them. Their objection is that you are going to destroy the value of education if you enter the field of vocational education. They say that education should be for culture, and not to make a living.

Mr. RAKER. It ought to be determined under resolution by the House and Senate that if you are going to have vocational education the subject you speak of now ought to be eliminated.

Mr. FESS. Which subject?

Mr. RAKER. Culture.

Mr. FESS. We do not have to eliminate it, because it is not in this resolution.

Mr. RAKER. Do not misunderstand. If that is the only objection, it ought not to defeat vocational education.

Mr. FESS. That is the objection of some college men. I do not mean that is the only objection. There have been other objections made here; but that is the objection of college men.

I will say to my friend from California that objection grows out of a misconception of education. Simply because a man can read Greek and translate Latin is no evidence that he is cultured; but if a man who does not know any Greek and can not understand Latin can do a piece of work, and every man who sees the work sees the mark of reflection and thought, that man is a man of culture, as well as the fellow who can appreciate a piece of music. And why not make skilled workmen out of the men who are going to make a living by the work of their hands, and when they are making the living they are making a life at the same time? And the chief pleasure is in the life rather than in making the living. [Applause.] In other words, if Sallie, your daughter, is an artist on the piano, the question is, Can she at the same time bake a biscuit that is not a sinker? [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. She ought not to be able to play on the piano until she has learned to bake biscuits first.

Mr. FESS. Yes; and we want her to be able to do both.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Referring to the statement the gentleman has made in regard to the young lady, does not the gentleman think she should be a first-class cook rather than a musician?

Mr. FESS. I do. Both are worthy accomplishments.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman think a young man who understands Greek should also be able to black his own boots?

Mr. FESS. I do. In that case he would not need to do both.

Mr. TAYLOR of New York. The gentleman does not think that this education should be confined to agricultural pursuits?

Mr. FESS. No; certainly not.

Mr. TAYLOR of New York. The gentleman thinks that Members from the cities should be just as much interested in this as Members from sections where the people are engaged in agricultural pursuits?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of New York. Take the boy who wants to become a plumber. He does not need to study botany and biology and psychology, and all that, but he wants to receive thorough instruction in reading and writing and spelling and then receive instruction in the art of scientific plumbing, so that when he goes out into the world and engages in his trade he can not only wipe a joint, but he can also make a set of specifications.

Mr. FESS. Exactly. The gentleman has it exactly.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to thank the members of the committee for listening to this disjointed discussion of a subject that is so near to my heart, to which I have given a good deal of study. In conclusion I want to say most sincerely that it seems to me the best education for the children of this great Nation of ours is that which will send the child from the school-room better equipped to live the life in the environment he is bound to live in. If he is going to be a farmer, let him be a skillful farmer. If he is going to live in an industrial center, let him be a skillful workman, as much so as he can be in an industrial center, so that while he is making a living he will at the same time have the discipline that will enable him to have some culture beyond it.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Fess] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, the first and chief duty of any Government republican in form, in which its character must depend upon the intelligence of the body politic, is education, the broadest possible training for service to the State and Nation.

The real function of government is to produce a high-grade citizenship. Indeed, that is the ground for government, with all the burdens entailed. This citizenship may and must be viewed from two angles—first, the State, and, second, the individual. The character of the citizen's activity is twofold; it is purely mental, which until recently expressed itself in professional occupation, or it may be physical, largely, which is seen in manual labor. The latter represents the great bulk of any nation's people. The educated product of a community is divided into three groups, viz, the college graduate, the high-school graduate, and those who leave school before the high school is reached. The college graduate represents less than 2 per cent, the high-school graduate numbers less than 6 per cent, while those below the high school are at least 93 per cent. Most obviously the 93 per cent must be the chief concern of the State.

With no systematic vocational program, our present system does not reach the great mass of the youth by giving that sort of education that will best fit them to adjust their lives to the work they must follow after leaving school. The maximum results of education stop short of the professional rank. It is not adapted to the most needed knowledge and training; it does not seek to produce the highest skill, and really is that unsettling process that educates for failure rather than success.

The country's error with the great mass of our people is due to the wrong conception of the object of education, which is confined to simply culture, with little reference to the real work of the citizen.

Broad general culture is the chief goal of the teacher—the altruistic leader. In this class are placed all great educational lights and leaders—Pestalozzi, Kant, Fichte, Arnold, Channing, Wayland, Horace Mann, and Emerson.

Most of these spiritual leaders regarded education as its own reward. A boy or a girl should be educated primarily because of the human soul, which would be most sinful to allow to remain unopened. The chief measure of any system of education is the amount of soul power expressed by spiritual appreciation that can be realized.

While this conception should be kept before the Nation, it is perfectly apparent in this workaday world that this goal is not the lot of the vast mass of the human family. The Nation must face the problem as it is and not as it ought to be; however, the final goal should not be lost sight of. In the condition which confronts the Nation rather than a theory, over 90 per cent, or nine pupils out of every ten, will be called on by the State to make a living by the employment of manual labor—work with their hands. A system of education that does not care for the nine-tenths is notoriously faulty. This great body of pupils are not necessarily what they are by choice, but by circumstances which they can not control, whether by lack of foresight and ability is not at issue. However, the State by a proper system of education can minimize the evil influences and multiply greatly the useful products of the talents awaiting development. This system should seek to enable the youth to command his environment. If he is on the farm and is to follow the plow, sow the crop, and reap the harvest he should be trained to do it, not as his father did, necessarily, but in the best way to compel the earth to yield its maximum product with a minimum expenditure of energy. His agriculture should be scientific. If he is in the city, then the work of his hand should not be after the methods of his ancestors for generations past, but should reflect knowledge of the subject, science, and skill in handling—art.

The interests of the farm call for agricultural training schools. The congested urban life calls for vocational schools, combining the science of the technical school and the art of skill of the industrial school.

What has been accomplished, and how, on the farm? What can and should be done among the urban peoples?

The real purpose of the State should be to keep open to every youth an equal opportunity to make the most of life. It should assist in clarifying purpose and presenting opportunity. The boy who is to till the soil should be led to it in the best possible way. The boy or girl who is to work in a shop should be educated for it. In other words, the State should assist in preparing every citizen for some vocation. This duty is twofold—first, its reflex upon the worker, and, second, its effect upon the State.

It was Paschal who said every faculty of the mind existed for the sake of activity. This dictum may be viewed from a positive and a negative angle. The use of the faculty gives pleasure to the possessor, as well as increasing the good of the community. Negatively speaking, if it is not used it will be lost. The old adage, "Use or lose, rest and rust," is herein applied. Malebranche said: "The chief joy in life is in pursuit; therefore were truth a bird, and I held her in my hand, I should let her go that I might have the superior joy of recapturing her."

The reflex influence of a thing accomplished upon the doer is apparent. The performance of something by dint of compulsion and without thought is irksome. It becomes a task. It may be most burdensome. If, on the other hand, it is by a skillful hand, directed by a trained mind, it becomes a real accomplishment, a satisfying achievement. It not only bears the marks of reflection, but it has the brand of discipline, of skill. It has been well said that character can be best read in the manner in which we end our work. A piece of work slovenly performed displays a slovenly character. Herein is the serious evil of allowing anything short of best performed to satisfy the worker. The "about correct" pupil is not bad because of an error in result, but because of the serious effect that such habits of work will have upon the life of the worker. Work that is slovenly thrown off never adds anything worth while, either to the sum of accomplishment or to the good of the worker. "The good is the evil of the best," says the Spanish proverb.

The old cobbler sitting at his bench day after day doing nothing but driving the wooden pegs into the soles of the shoe was asked whether his work did not become wearisome to him. He replied: "No; I do not allow it, because I always try to drive the next peg just a little slicker." Here is the philosophy of work.

Every citizen should be trained to do some one thing, not only because of its value to the individual citizen but because of its ethical value to the community in which he lives. Too many citizens measure life by what they get out of it. The real measure is what one puts into life. The chief worth of a citizen is not what he has been able to get out of a community, but rather what he is able to add to a community. The successful accomplishment of a task often has its largest meaning by its influence upon others in a community. In other words, instead of its meaning being selfish it is altruistic, instead of it being individual it is community in its real significance. A deed useful in character, well performed, can not be confined to the doer, but is community wide. The ethical value to a community of vocational education is apparent. This is why such a system of education is not for the poor boy or girl alone, but is also for the child of the well-to-do family, who never needs give a thought to the task of a mere livelihood. It must be for such as well, since he has no assurance that he will always thus find the world. But entirely aside from such a consideration he should be admitted to the real joy of an appreciation of accomplishment and should be taught also to respect the pupil who is compelled to accomplish for a livelihood. In this manner he will not confine himself to the making of a living, but rather will make his chief purpose in the making of a life, which is very much better, for, after all, the wealth of any community does not lie in the thing to be measured off or weighed out or marked, but in the men and women in the community.

Herein may be seen the common error so oft expressed in the argument against vocational training. The chief opposition in certain educated circles is the charge that such education is inevitably at the expense of culture. This is an error, first, because culture as the chief desideratum is limited to a very small proportion of pupils; second, such education, rather than being a hindrance, would be supplemental. It would not necessarily subtract from the cultural classes, but more certainly add to them. Again, this contention arises out of the proposition so well stated by Emerson. He declared it was not the educated farmer the country needed, or the educated artisan, or the educated professional man, as lawyer, minister, teacher, and so forth. The country demanded the educated man on the farm rather than the educated farmer. The latter's knowledge is confined to the farm, while the former extends beyond the farm, and includes the education needed by a wide-awake citizen of the community.

All will agree that Emerson's dictum is ideal, and is worthy the goal of any community, but the deduction that skill of hand means want of heart; that ability to do is loss of ability to feel or think; that vocational education is versus cultural education, such deduction is entirely erroneous. The field of Edison or Burbank may not be classified as classical culture, yet it is a matter of serious doubt whether a knowledge of the letters and languages indicates a higher degree of genuine culture than the insight into the laws of nature that are brought to light by the wizards of the scientific world. When the real astronomer broke forth, "O God, we but think Thy thoughts after Thee," he was expressing one type of culture. We usually confine culture to subjects that arouse emotions, intellectual and spiritual. We say our imaginations are enlarged, our feelings are edified, our purposes and determinations are ennobled, and so forth. Herein are the suggestions of culture. Their trappings are not in things material; they can not be handled, even though they are skillfully worked. Anything which has its product in the market excludes culture. The time is here when such definitions will no longer rule. Limits are not so placed in the world of culture. In other words, culture extends beyond the make-believe, and takes in the real accomplishment.

Some one has said the eighteenth century was marked by authority. Few gave the command; the many obeyed. Its chief result was a blind obedience which suppressed individuality.

The nineteenth century was marked by opinion. The ruling passion was independence almost to the approach of arrogance. This opinionated century gives us the work of protest in all fields of thought and action.

But the twentieth century is marked by achievement. To-day the biggest word known to man is service. The supreme question is not, Who are you? or What is your name? or Whence came you? The one question asked of all alike by the present century is, What can you do? The answer to that question fixes the rank of the queried. It matters not whether it is in the field of science, letters, or arts, or out in the big world of invention and discovery in the various applications of these various bodies of knowledge; the differentiation between success and failure is here.

If the real purpose of public education is the character of citizenship, then the desirable character results from the skill of vocation as certainly as from the knowledge of profession.

A painting is the product of culture. An appreciation of it is also a mark of culture. The great musical composition is the product of culture. An appreciation of the symphony is the mark of culture. But often the great musician is totally incompetent to appreciate the great painting, and vice versa. However, one would scarcely deny to either the title of culture. So it is with the product of the vocation. Anything well done need not blunt appreciation of other things well done; neither need vocational schools prevent desirable qualities of appreciative culture in the higher arts.

The common objection of certain citizens to vocational training generally arises out of a total misconception of results.

The need of vocational schools in our country is quite apparent to all. Growth of sentiment within the past decade has been phenomenal. It has been recommended by both the employer of labor and capital and by the employee, as indicated by the position of the leading associations and various organizations.

Commissions are at work investigating the progress of such schools in Prussia and various parts of Europe. Also systematic investigations are in progress in the United States. These demands have been responded to by consistent efforts and some fugitive plans. Hundreds of cities have undertaken the work of manual training for the boys and domestic science for the girls within the last 10 years.

The agitation has almost assumed the character of a propaganda. A glance at the bibliography will reveal the surprising fact that every phase of the subject has been most copiously covered. In the last decade there have come from the press 120 books upon industrial education alone in this country, to say nothing of the great number from each of the countries in Western Europe.

Aside from this, a most distinctive work has been done, and is now being done, by associations, committees, and commissions. Not less than 50 reports have been made by associations and committees, and at least 30 commission reports have also been made. In these various reports every phase of the subject has been covered. In addition to these reports, books have been published on the trade-unions phase of industrial education. At least a dozen books touching this phase have come from the press within the past decade. A bibliography of the subject issued this year by the Bureau of Education, including periodicals with the monographs, reports, and books on the various phases of vocational education, numbers 885 publications, all of comparatively recent issue.

No propaganda can succeed without a healthful backing of public opinion. In this realm there has been a most marked activity. The Bureau of Education issued this year a statement of this side of the movement, which I wish to incorporate in this address.

INDUSTRIAL PROPAGANDA.

Much of the credit of creating and directing public opinion along the lines of vocational needs, both as to training and vocational guidance, is due to the aggressive publicity of the Educational Department of the National Government. Recently there have come from the Bureau of Education the following important bulletins:

- 1911, No. 2. Opportunities for graduate study in agriculture.
- 1912, No. 1. Courses of study for rural school teachers.
- 1912, No. 4. Mathematics in technical secondary schools.
- 1912, No. 6. Agricultural study in secondary schools.
- 1912, No. 9. Country schools for city boys.
- 1912, No. 18. Teaching language through agriculture and domestic science.
- 1912, No. 20. Readjustment of an American rural high school to the needs of the community.
- 1912, No. 28. Cultivating school grounds in Wake County, N. C.
- 1913, No. 3. Training courses for rural teachers.
- 1913, No. 6. Agricultural instruction in high schools.

Mr. C. A. Prosser, secretary of the Association for the Promotion of Industrial Training, said in a recent address before the National Educational Association:

The unquestionable tendency in American education is toward broadening the responsibility of the State for the educational conservation of the child up to 16 years of age. In this forward movement the following principles and steps seem to be demanded in connection with vocational as well as general education: (1) The State should have the care and the responsibility for the training and educational welfare of all children, at least until they become 16 years of age. (2) No child under 16 years of age should be permitted to go to work unless he is at least 14 years of age and has reached a prescribed minimum educational standard which should not be less than that necessary to meet the test for entering the sixth grade of the regular schools or its equivalent. (3) All children between 14 and 16 years of age should be compelled either to attend school or to enter employment, and when not employed should be required to return to school. (4) Where State-wide action is not yet practicable, local communities should be authorized by law to decide either by a referendum or by the action of a local board of control whether children between 14 and 16 years of age, employed during the day, should be required to attend part-time classes for a period of not less than four hours a week out of their working time. (5) As fast as conditions permit, we should move in every State in the direction of State-wide compulsory part-time education for those between 14 and 16 years of age who are employed as wage-workers.

The almost universal demand for vocational training is voiced by the following organizations, representing the best thought upon the subject in the Nation:

- National Metal Trades Association.
- National Association of Manufacturers.
- American Federation of Labor.
- National Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education.
- National Child Labor Committee.
- National Committee on Prison Labor.
- American Association for Labor Legislation.
- National Education Association.
- American Society for the Prevention and Study of Infant Mortality.
- Southern Commercial Congress.
- Southern Educational Association.
- General Federation of Women's Clubs.
- United Textile Workers of America.
- American Society of Equity (representing more than 6,000,000 farmers).
- National Farmers' Grange.
- National Farmers' Congress.
- Department of Superintendence, National Education Association.
- International Congress of Farm Women.
- American Foundrymen's Association.
- National Domestic Science Association.
- National Committee on Agricultural Education.
- American Education and Cooperative Farmers' Union.
- Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America.

This is not a movement by professional educators. It appeals to all phases of our life. The National Association of Manufacturers, fairly representing the employers' side of the question, asserts that the loss of the Nation from children leaving school in the grades would be at least $250,000,000,000. Much of this loss can be prevented by a systematic vocational training which is in easy reach of the Nation. At its annual meeting in 1912 it made the following recommendations:

1. Continuation schools for that half of the children who leave school at 14 years of age, and mostly in the fifth and sixth grades, these continuation schools to be liberally cultural and at the same time to be extremely practical and related as directly as possible to the occupations in which the several students are engaged.

2. The development of a modern apprenticeship system, wherein by contract the respective and equal rights of employer and employee are fully recognized, the entire trade is taught, together with such other subjects as are essential to good citizenship.

3. The development of secondary continuation or trade schools, by which the more efficient of the great army of boys and girls who will enter the continuation schools may progress from these lower continuation schools, as in some other countries, to the foremost places in industry and commerce.

4. Compulsory education through adolescence, being until the seventeenth or eighteenth year, attendance being in the all-day school until the fourteenth year, and thereafter in either the all-day schools or in the continuation schools for not less than one-half day per week, without loss of wages for hours in school.

5. The strengthening of all truancy laws and the development of public sentiment in support thereof.

6. The training of teachers in thoroughgoing methods of industrial practice, including as part of such training extended experience in actual shopwork.

7. The establishment of independent State and local boards of industrial education, consisting of one-third each, professional educators, employers, and employees, thereby insuring, as in the more successful European countries, the proper correlation of the schools and the industries.

8. The development of the vocational and creative desires of the concrete or hand-minded children now in the grades, discouraged, anxious to quit, and often called backward, only because the education now tendered them is abstract and misfit.

9. The establishment of shop schools and part-time schools whenever practicable.

10. The establishment of departments or centers of vocational guidance, so that the great majority of the children who now enter industry at 14 with no direction, 85 per cent falling into the "blind-alley" occupations, may with the reversal of these figures, as in some other countries, enter, under advice, intelligently and properly into the progressive and improving occupations.

Resolved by the National Association of Manufacturers, That it is the imperative need of the industrial workers and employers of the country that thoroughgoing systems of industrial education be everywhere established, so that our factories may be more constantly and better employed, that standards of skill and of output may continuously be improved, and that foreign and domestic markets may be better held and extended.

One of the most widely effective associations of the country is the one for the promotion of industrial education. Its latest pronouncement was in the following resolutions:

State aid is necessary to stimulate and encourage communities to carry on work in vocational education.

Vocational education includes all forms of specialized education, the controlling purposes of which are to fit for useful occupations, as industrial education, agricultural education, commercial education, and household-arts education.

Industrial education denotes the field of vocational education designed to meet the needs of the manual wage-worker in the trades and industries and the household.

Agricultural education is that form of vocational education which fits for the occupations connected with the tillage of the soil, the care of domestic animals, forestry, and other useful work on the farm.

Commercial education denotes the field of vocational education designed to meet the needs of the wage earner employed in such business and commercial pursuits as bookkeeping, stenography, typewriting, clerical work, salesmanship.

Household arts education is that form of vocational education which fits for nonwage-earning occupations connected with the household.

Vocational schools include all agricultural, industrial, commercial, and household arts schools, the controlling purpose of which is to fit for useful occupations, and which deal with pupils above 14 years of age and below college grade, as indicated below.

An all-day vocational school is a school giving training to young useful employment, which provide instruction directly related to such preparation before entering employment.

A part-time vocational school is a school for persons engaged in useful employment which affords instruction during a portion of the working time of the pupils that is supplementary to such employment.

Evening schools or classes in industry or agriculture are schools or classes attended by persons over 16 years of age, already engaged in useful employment, which provide instruction directly related to such employment.

Evening schools or classes in household arts are schools or classes giving instruction in home making to pupils over 16 years of age however employed during the day.

The proper expenditure of State moneys for vocational schools should be fully safeguarded, but initiative should be left to local authorities. State aid should be sufficient to justify participation by the State in control and administration. Experience seems to show that the best results are secured when the local community furnishes the plant and equipment and pays approximately half of the operating expenses.

This very broad insistence by so numerous voluntary associations is finding expression in concrete plans introduced in many towns by local authorities, and in a larger sense in many States by statutory enactment. At least a score of States have taken action. Literally hundreds of towns have made some effort. Some form is in operation in such considerable cities as the list given out by Mr. Prosser:

Hammond, Lafayette, Muncie, Indianapolis, Terre Haute, Vincennes, Ind.; Saginaw, Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids, Detroit—Cass Technical High School and the Detroit Technical Institute, Detroit University, Mich.; Harrisburg, Scranton, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, and Lancaster, Pa.; Hartford, Waterbury, Bridgeport, New Britain, Conn.; in Chicago, the Lewis Institute part-time class carried on under the auspices of the National Metal Trades Association; the Lucy Flower Technical High School, the Crane Technical High School, and the Lane Technical High School and evening industrial classes; Moline, Decatur, Springfield, Joliet, Rock Island, Rockford, Ill.; David Ranken, Jr., School of Mechanical Trades in St. Louis, Mo.; Bayonne, Paterson, Newark, Trenton, Jersey City, Passaic, in New Jersey; Cleveland, Toledo, and

Cincinnati, Ohio, through cooperative part-time and continuation courses; Portland, Oreg.; Chattanooga, Tenn.; Baltimore, Md.; Boise, Idaho; and Providence, R. I.

In Massachusetts alone there are 35 towns and cities reported using some form of vocational training, serving nearly 11,000 pupils. In 1911-12 the following schools were approved by the State authorities:

Boston Continuation School of Home Making.
Everett Independent Evening Industrial School.
Holyoke Independent Evening Industrial School.
Lowell Independent Industrial School.
Quincy Independent Evening Industrial School.
Somerville Industrial School for Girls.
Springfield Day Industrial School for Boys.
Watertown Evening Industrial School.
Westfield Day Industrial School for Boys.
Worcester Trade School for Girls.

Other States active in the movement are Wisconsin, Indiana, Illinois, New York, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, New Jersey, Rhode Island, and Washington.

The success of many cities has attracted sufficient attention to warrant the Bureau of Education here in Washington to publish special monographs setting forth the work. This was done for Columbus, Ga.; also Worcester, Mass. A similar publication was made of the gardening work done in Wake County, N. C. In all of these specific investigations and reports the advocate of vocational training is abundantly rewarded by the results achieved.

A scheme for the education of boys was worked out by some of the leaders in the movement, including Dr. Snedden, commissioner of education in Massachusetts:

TEACHERS FOR BOYS' WORK.

1. One of the most serious problems of the industrial school of the future is to deal with adolescents, taking them as they come and fitting them for practical tests of social and industrial efficiency.

2. The ordinary type of pedagogical training given to prospective teachers will not serve to adequately prepare them for successful service in such industrial schools.

3. Successful teaching must be based upon the real experience in the line taught.

4. Trade training alone will not make good teachers.

5. The industrial school has problems peculiar to itself which call for special training for teachers in such schools.

6. We are not likely to secure good teachers for industrial schools by drawing teachers from regular public schools and giving them additional training.

7. Pseudo experience, such as is gained by ordinary students in school and college shops, will not replace actual practical experience.

8. "Student" experience under real conditions, such as is gained by a short period of contact with industrial environment, will not replace real experience.

9. A person who has passed through college, whether general or technical, by a continuous school process, is not likely to make a successful industrial-school teacher nor to afford good material for a special training course for such teachers.

10. We can not secure as teachers in industrial schools those competent to hold desirable and profitable positions in industry as long as we pay them on the same basis as regular public-school teachers.

11. In training competent industrial-school teachers we must expect a greater per capita cost than we are in the habit of expecting in the training of ordinary school-teachers.

12. A scheme for training industrial-school teachers, starting with adults who have already had successful experience as teachers in regular schools, is not likely to succeed.

13. A scheme of training will not be efficient which proposes to deal with those who bring to it only a general secondary school preparation, and which proposes to give them during the college phase of their education all necessary training to fit them for successful teaching in industrial schools.

14. The evening course, which proposes to train persons with experience employed during the day, is only a partial solution of the problem, owing to its inability to afford an opportunity for observation and practice in teaching during the course.

15. The German experience shows that the most effective teachers must be drawn from the industries.

16. The most effective scheme known thus far is the German scheme. Involving the following steps: (a) A technical training in the middle technical school, followed by (b) a prolonged experience as an actual worker in the industry which is to be taught; (c) a return to a training course giving special training for teaching in an industrial school, accompanied by an experience as an assistant teacher in an actual school.

17. In view of the fact that (a) we must get our efficient teachers from the industries, and (b) that these people can not afford to take full-time day courses, the most promising plan would seem to be a course which provides for a series of evening unit courses, each unit dealing with some specific phase of the special instruction required for an efficient teacher; following this by employment in industrial schools as an assistant teacher, with an obligation on the part of the industrial school to conduct a certain amount of further normal training work with these assistant teachers.

18. The most promising plan for training teachers for industrial schools would involve the following steps: (a) The gathering of the pupils with successful experience in the industries; (b) evening unit courses for the student while he continues to work at his calling; (c) each unit dealing with some phase or factor of the preparation required for an efficient teacher; (d) followed by employment as an assistant teacher in an industrial school; (e) with obligation on the part of the school to give a certain amount of additional normal training to him after he enters the service.

Many States have instituted an elaborate survey of the conditions, both rural and urban, of the public-school situation. While these various surveys in city, county, and State have been fairly complete, they can serve this House but little, as they are all independent, fugitive, as it were, in character, and can therefore observe no unity whatever. What the research department of the Women's Educational and Industrial Union of Boston did for the city of Worcester this committee desire this Congress shall do for the entire Nation. The scope of the investigation is suggested by the outline of the committee's activity:

1. Industrial opportunities for women in Worcester.
2. The exodus of young girls from the schools:
 - (a) Number of girls leaving school.
 - (b) Age of girls leaving school.
 - (c) Schooling grade when leaving.
 - (d) Nationality.
 - (e) Status of family, economical and intellectual.

These inquiries showed very significant facts:

- (a) More than 700 girls under 16 years of age left to go to work.
- (b) Sixty per cent leave at the earliest age the law allows—14.
- (c) Eight per cent were unable to pass fifth grade; 33½ per cent were unable to pass seventh grade; 50 per cent were unable to pass the ninth grade.
- (d) Leaving school is not due to economic status of parents.
- (e) Out of over 200 families studied, over one-half lived in comfortable homes.
3. Industries entered by girls:
 - (a) Less than one-fourth go into mercantile industries.
 - (b) Three-fourths go into factories and mills.
4. Kinds of work done by young girls:
 - (a) Unskilled industries.
 - (b) Mercantile establishments.
 - (c) Medium-skilled trades.
 - (d) Instability of workers in factories.

These facts show that the girl of 14 or 16 can not enter any but unskilled work. This makes a monotonous life, which causes drifting from one to another kind of work, thereby preventing proficiency in anything. The almost inevitable result is that the masses which enter unskilled work never leave it for a higher grade.

5. Women-employing industries in Worcester:

Seven hundred women and 138 minors were employed in mercantile industries, while 8,000 women and 1,000 minors were employed in manufacturing. Four industries employ 90 per cent of all the women employed in the city.

These are the machine-operating trades:

1. Textile industries.
2. Wire and metal goods.
3. Metal trades.

The other small per cent are engaged in dressmaking and millinery.

Summarizing these figures, we find the following results:

(a) The exodus of young girls from the schools is both very large and unnecessary.

(b) Most of the girls go into a small number of industries.

(c) The unskilled labor or "blind-alley" occupations claim most of these school delinquents. Their entrance into such employment closes the door to opportunity. Unskilled they enter, unskilled they remain.

These employments are further classified into groups:

1. Where little training is required (textile mills, paper industry, and metal trades).
2. More or less skill is required.
3. Where skill is demanded (dressmaking and millinery).

The problem of the city of Worcester, as shown by this survey, is to care for this 90 per cent of her girls in such a way that they may become productive personalities, useful citizens instead of mere automaton machines eking out a livelihood, and in turn sapping all the womanhood dormant in them, and inevitably unfit them for home life.

The solution is the training school which will enable each to either enter a high-grade industry or else elevate the lower grade. If nothing is considered save the effort to perform, work becomes irksome. But if the manner and skill of hand is considered it may become a joy. What has been done for individual places in a larger sense may be done for the State or Nation.

President Wilson, with his keen perception, due to his training and devotion to matters educational, and his extended acquaintance with the leaders in education in its every phase, would be admirably prepared to select a commission to make a Nation-wide report.

Personally, I am in most hearty accord with the recommendations of the committee to create this commission with power to investigate the needs and to report to this Congress at its earliest convenience the results of its finding, together with recommendations.

AGRICULTURAL TRAINING.

Fifty-three and seven-tenths per cent of population is rural; 58.5 per cent of children of school age are rural. Therefore 53.7 per cent of our population have the task of educating 58.5 per cent of the pupils. The urban, or 46.3 per cent, need educate but 41.3 per cent of the children. The burden is not measured by numbers, but rather by work. The illiteracy in the country is estimated to be twice as great as in towns, notwithstanding the vast foreign population drifting to centers. In this classification of rural and urban preparation all towns below 2,500 population are placed in the rural column.

The following figures from the department of education are suggestive of the superior advantages of the urban over the rural schools in school organization, and the less burdens to bear:

Urban and rural school population and school attendance.

	Total population.	Illiterate (10 years of age and over).	School population.	School enrollment.	Average daily attendance.	Aggregate attendance.	Days in annual session.	Aggregate amount paid teachers.

The Bureau of Education is active in the work, and has already done much with its limited means and authority at its disposal.

I desire to incorporate the following from one of the department's bulletins:

DIVISION OF RURAL EDUCATION IN THE BUREAU OF EDUCATION.

In the United States Bureau of Education a division of rural education was created November 1, 1911. This was made possible by a provision included in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill for the year ended June 30, 1912, approved on March 4, 1911. This congressional act provides the sum of $6,000 to be expended "for the investigation of rural education, industrial education, and school hygiene, including salaries."

During the one year of its existence the work of the division has been largely a study of the status of rural education in the United States, the results of which are included in Bureau of Education Bulletin, 1913, No. 8. This publication contains data relative to the rural population, illiteracy, school enrollment, attendance, and the one-teacher school; also a summary of the present status of the rural school teaching force, the supervision and the organizations for the management of school affairs. The information for the bulletin was obtained from State reports, from the Bureau of the Census, and from personal visits to rural schools by representatives of the bureau. The division also collected the material, and with the assistance of President Robert H. Wright, of the East Carolina Teachers' Training School, Greenville, N. C., prepared and published Bureau of Education Bulletin, 1913, No. 2, Training Courses for Rural Teachers. It also assisted in preparing for publication several other bulletins mentioned under the section on recent publications on rural education included later in this chapter.

The division has affiliated with it about 50 special collaborators, each appointed at a nominal salary, to cooperate in keeping it in touch with the best things done in rural education. These collaborators are all persons whose work is directly connected with rural education in State departments of education, in State normal schools, or in other similar positions. Several of them are making special studies for the division on various phases of rural education, the results of which will probably be published by the bureau.

In the appropriation bill approved August 23, 1912, the amount allotted for "rural education, industrial education, and school hygiene" was increased from $6,000 to $15,000.

The next most significant movement on behalf of the country schools was taken by the National Educational Association at its annual meeting in 1911, when the following committee was appointed to investigate and make a report upon the needs of our country schools, with recommendations for improvement:

E. T. Fairchild, president of New Hampshire College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, Durham, N. H., chairman.

L. H. Bailey, dean of the State College of Agriculture, Ithaca, N. Y.
Henry C. Morrison, State superintendent of public instruction, Concord, N. H.

A. C. Nelson, State superintendent of public instruction, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Edward C. Elliott, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
Miss Adelaide Steele Baylor, State Department of Education, Indianapolis, Ind.

T. H. Harris, State superintendent of public education, Baton Rouge, La.

John R. Kirk, president State Normal School, Kirksville, Mo.
Edward Hyatt, State superintendent of public instruction, Sacramento, Cal.

Luther L. Wright, State superintendent of public instruction, Lansing, Mich.

James Y. Joyner, State superintendent of public instruction, Raleigh, N. C.

Charles H. Keyes, president of Skidmore School of Arts, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and president of the National Council of Education. (Added to the committee by vote of the council.)

This committee set forth the following statement of facts:

Of the 12,000,000 rural school children less than 25 per cent are completing the work of the grades. The teaching body is immature and lacks proper training. Terms are too short. School buildings are poor, insanitary, and ill equipped. The school enrollment is constantly decreasing. The supervision is wholly inadequate. High-school privileges are denied to the great majority of these boys and girls. The strong, virile rural school of a generation ago has gone, and in its place is a primary school weak in numbers and lacking in efficiency. The country boy and girl of this strenuous and complex twentieth century are not afforded equal educational opportunities with the city children.

With this knowledge it seems unnecessary to enter upon an extensive investigation having as its aim the gathering of information relative to the present rural school situation. The committee on rural schools, therefore, will address itself to the problem of suggesting ways and means for the betterment of these schools and for awakening the public to a definite sense of the needs of the rural schools.

The committee's work was designed to cover the following heads:

I. ORGANIZATION.

- A. The unit of school organization.
- B. Consolidation.
- C. Classification.
- D. Minimum term.

II. ADMINISTRATION.

- A. Funds—source and application.
- B. Compulsory attendance.
- C. School plant.
- D. Libraries.
- E. Supervision.
- F. Statistics.

III. INSTRUCTION.

- A. Courses of study.
- B. Textbooks.
- C. Preparation of teachers.
- D. Training courses in high schools.
- E. Tenure of teachers.

IV. SOCIAL ELEMENTS.

- A. Cooperation—school as a social center.
- B. The home and the school.
- C. Organized games and plays.

V. SECONDARY EDUCATION.

- A. Free tuition.
- B. Consolidated township and county high schools.

Mr. Chairman, this is the most significant voluntary movement in the country, the most comprehensive yet undertaken to study the needs of the country and to suggest ways and means of improvement. These movements by voluntary associations are not confined to professional educators, but they extend to farmers' organizations, women's clubs, and various other cooperative associations for rural betterment.

STATE RURAL SCHOOL COMMISSIONS.

In addition to these purely voluntary efforts, many of the States are taking action through State commissions. Iowa is a good example. The commission of 21 members subdivided itself into 9 subcommittees, each to cover a different phase of the school situation in Iowa.

- A. Administration—State, county, and local.
- B. Rural schools.
- C. Graded schools.
- D. High schools.
- E. Industrial education.
- F. State aid.
- G. School as community center.
- H. Publicity.
- I. Teachers—training, etc.

The committee on rural schools report that they find—

The Iowa rural school shows unwarranted weakness. This is due to several causes rather than to any one. There is no definite purpose in the minds of patrons to improve the schools. They are meagerly equipped and in some instances very much neglected. There is a lack of definite standards of work on the part of teachers, and in many instances the schools are presided over by young teachers of little training or experience. Close supervision under the present system is an impossibility. The greater sources of weakness in our rural schools are a dearth of properly trained teachers, a cumbersome system of government, a lack of close supervision, and failure to apply a thorough business policy in handling them.

The committee makes eight recommendations, as follows:

1. We favor voluntary consolidation for Iowa schools with a minimum area of 16 sections, with State aid annually from $500 to $1,500, to be classified by the department of public instruction; the teaching of agriculture and domestic science to be required, and no consolidated school to have less than two departments.
2. We recommend that the rural independent districts be discontinued.
3. We recommend that rural schools be under the inspection and supervision of the department of public instruction.
4. We recommend one rural inspector, one grade inspector, and one high-school inspector, under the supervision of the department of public instruction.
5. We recommend that provisions be made to properly safeguard the health of rural school children.
6. We recommend that practical courses of study be adopted for the rural schools.
7. We recommend the enactment of a law providing a suitable and sane plan for the adoption of textbooks, which will protect the people.
8. We recommend that additional normal schools be established and that normal training be provided in every high school that can successfully carry on such a course.

This same committee made the following report covering the needs of the farm boys and girls for vocational training:

1. That the county educational board be empowered to employ two special supervisory teachers to have charge of the industrial work of the rural schools.
2. That some form of State aid be granted counties employing special teachers.
3. That State aid be given to township high schools when a satisfactory course in industrial work is offered.
4. That all State-aided schools be required to maintain courses in agriculture, domestic science, and manual training and be under the direct supervision of State inspectors.

On the matter of agricultural needs and possibilities in the education of our boys and girls on the farm the committee made the following recommendations:

1. An extension of normal training facilities to all high schools of the State which can properly qualify for it.

2. Legislation providing for a knowledge of the subject of agriculture on the part of those who are to teach.

3. Further summer-school facilities for the instruction in agriculture of teachers who are already in the service but not qualified to teach agriculture.

4. Courses of study which shall classify and outline the work in elementary agriculture and suggest methods of procedure which will enable the great mass of the teachers to apply effectively the teaching of agriculture along with the other essential branches in the general courses of study.

5. Further provision for training special teachers of agriculture for work as high-school and normal-school instructors.

In no part of the country has the need of agricultural training taken deeper hold than in the Southern States. Students of the history of ante bellum days will recall the insistent claim of many scientific writers that the southern half of our country was suffering most from the total dominance of cotton culture to the almost entire exclusion of other farm products. That country in the new South era is to-day teaching the Nation along lines of scientific agriculture. In at least a dozen States the "supervisors of rural schools" are heading the new work of agriculture. This movement is made possible by the great work of the Southern Education Board and the Peabody fund.

Activities on behalf of the boys and girls on the farm looking to keep them on the farm are directed by many organizations, official and unofficial. The Bureau of Plant Industry here in Washington, the farmers' cooperative demonstration work in the South, have been quite active in the stimulation of various agricultural clubs, whose purposes are given in the following statement:

1. To afford the rural teacher a simple and easy method of teaching practical agriculture in the school in the way it must be acquired to be of any real service, mainly by actual work upon the farm.

2. To prove that there is more in the soil than the farmer has ever gotten out of it; to inspire boys with a love of the land by showing them how they can get wealth out of it by tilling it in a better way, and thus be helpful to the family and the neighborhood.

3. To give the boys a definite, worthy purpose, and to stimulate a friendly rivalry among them.

The organization and methods of the girls' garden and canning clubs are similar to those of the boys' corn clubs. The usual crop raised is one-tenth of an acre of tomatoes. The girls cultivate the crop under the directions furnished by the Department of Agriculture. They preserve the tomatoes in glass or tin cans. The object of the work is—

1. To stimulate interest and wholesome cooperation among members of the family in the home.

2. To provide some means by which the girls may earn money at home and at the same time get the education and viewpoint necessary for the ideal farm life.

3. To encourage rural families to provide purer and better food at a lower cost and to utilize the surplus and otherwise waste products of the garden and orchard.

4. To furnish earnest teachers a plan for aiding their pupils and helping their communities.

In college circles it is not so long since agriculture had no standing whatever. Even the ridicule carried in the nickname "Ags" is still heard on the campus. No standing in scholarship was permitted. No entrance requirements of significance were published. To-day over 50 universities and technical colleges, the best in the country, offer courses to candidates for graduation in agriculture. In most of these institutions the courses rank with the courses given in the liberal arts departments. The entrance requirements range from one to four years' high-school work. One year is required by each of five States—Alabama, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Texas. Two years are required by five States—Connecticut, Kansas, Maryland, Oregon, and Virginia. Three years high school are required by Florida, Delaware, South Dakota, Tennessee, Utah, and West Virginia. Four years are required by 34 States. These agricultural colleges, most of which are State institutions, in 1912 catalogued 7,582 teachers, 906 of whom were women. These teachers were classed under the head of professors, assistants, instructors, extension workers, and experiment-station investigators. The total number of students enrolled was 93,000. Over 7,000 diplomas were granted with the bachelor of arts degree. Nine hundred and fifty-one degrees of master of arts, master of science, and doctor of philosophy. These degrees represent agriculture and home economics.

A glance over the courses offered for graduate study in these higher institutions of learning will indicate the advanced rank agricultural science is taking. No longer will the student of the chemistry of the soil be regarded with an apology. It is not saying too much to assert that the agriculturist of the near future will be regarded equal to any of the devotees of any of the professions. Already it is admitted that the requirements of ability to scientifically work the soil make greater demands upon the intellect than do the liberal professions.

The successful agriculturist must know the chemistry of the soil, what depletes it, how it is replenished, and how it is enriched; how can he compel the soil to yield to human wants and still increase its fertility. Glance at these subjects:

Agronomy, bacteriology, entomology, pomology, plant pathology, agricultural chemistry, agricultural engineering.

One institution, in announcing the range of its work, listed the following:

Farm crops; soils, including drainage, fertilizer, soil chemistry, and soil management; animal husbandry; dairy husbandry; experimental plant and animal breeding; poultry husbandry; bacteriology; plant pathology; agricultural chemistry, including animal nutrition, plant nutrition, and beet-sugar analysis; entomology; agricultural engineering, including rural architecture, farm machinery, and road building; horticulture; agricultural economics; farm accounting; agricultural education; agricultural journalism.

Another names the following subjects:

Farm crops; soil technology; drainage; animal husbandry; dairy husbandry; poultry husbandry; agricultural and dairy bacteriology; animal parasites and parasitology; plant physiology and pathology; agricultural chemistry; agricultural engineering; farm mechanics; horticulture; pomology; plant breeding; floriculture; rural art, including landscape gardening; nature study; rural economy; farm management; rural sociology; agricultural education.

My own great State university, at Columbus, modestly enumerates the following subjects:

Animal husbandry; the education, training, care, and management of the horse; dairy husbandry; animal nutrition; bacteriology; plant pathology; agricultural chemistry; economic entomology; farm equipment and agricultural engineering; rural economics; farm accounting and records; farm management.

AN OBJECT LESSON.

On the 30th of September of this year I, in company with a group of public-spirited men called at the famous — farm just outside of Wheeling, W. Va., owned by Mr. W. Oglebay, a member of the State board of regents. Here is one of the finest examples of what may be done by a man of brains and means it has ever been my lot to witness. The manner in which a farm of a thousand acres has been formed out of many smaller farms; the way worn-out farms have been replenished and made to yield abundantly; the heavy yield of alfalfa on the hilly portions in proof that the oft-repeated statement that alfalfa can not be grown upon such hills is groundless. The superior advantage of keeping high-grade stock, hackney horses, Guernsey cows, Shropshire sheep, hogs, and so forth; the insight displayed in the location of the various orchards to insure the advantage of shelter and protection; the growth of the small wood lots which dot the great farm; and the beautiful landscape gardening, both by fruit and flowers and shrubs—the wonderful plan that is unity in variety, in which nothing seems left undone to approach the perfection of life upon the farm—all combined, is a liberal education to any honest inquirer after the possibilities of modern agriculture.

One of the most encouraging phases in this campaign for intensive farming is the activity of great business organizations like railway corporations, speaking through their presidents, and banking associations, speaking through their representatives in annual meetings assembled.

For the past half decade the name of President Brown, of the New York Central lines, has become identified with the new era of farm production. It is nothing against his efforts to charge that he is not speaking on behalf of the producing farmer, but rather on behalf of the transporting railroad. Even were this statement true, his service is none the less valuable.

He has called attention to the possibilities of the soil when scientifically treated; how soil is being depleted by lack of scientific agricultural methods; how farms of virgin wealth are becoming poor, to-day returning a less yield than formerly. He has also called attention to the possibility of making over these declining farms, some of which are already abandoned, into veritable gardens of production. He is now establishing a second of the great farming stations in the State of New York, which will become an eye opener to the entire country interested in the problem of production.

Similar interest and activity have been displayed by James J. Hill, of the great Northwest. While this name will always be connected with railroading, it will also be identified with the possibilities of the soil.

Similar interest has been displayed by President Elliott, of the New Haven lines. His observations in the Northwest while at the head of the Northern Pacific have convinced him that the many New England farms which have been given up for richer soil in the great West can and will be reclaimed under scientific, intensive farming. This new era will be ushered in when the agriculturally trained man will apply his training to the farm. The close proximity to the world's greatest markets will induce the rejuvenation of the soil. Experimentally it is now well known that New York can rival any State in the production of apples.

Many denuded hills under proper care will be made to support the finest live stock, both in quality and quantity.

The organized interest of these men, whether transportation agent or banker, is discovering what certain sections of the country can do best. They assure the country that while the great Northwest will continue to produce wheat, it must and will find a secret by which the yield will be greatly augmented.

While the great Middle West will continue to be the corn belt, many of our investigators assert that the Southland, and especially Louisiana, will become the great corn country of the earth.

They also claim that in the southern belt along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts at least 5,000,000 acres are admirably adapted to small fruits, which to-day yield so small a proportion of their possible yield as to be almost negligible.

The striking information that science is revealing on the possibilities of the soil, through both the organized and the fugitive efforts of our people, has stimulated some men wonderfully in their devotion to this real constructive business of life. This remarkable activity of interest in the possibilities of the farm is due to an awakening of our democracy to its greatest needs. This conviction finds expression in the following avenues:

1. Extension work, where university assistance is given to the farmers at their own doors.

2. High schools, where an army of trained teachers are conveying fresh knowledge to the youth.

3. Cooperative farm associations, where the wide-awake of each community are emphasizing the value of improved methods to farmer and community.

4. Grange, representing the most important organized movement for generating public opinion in support of agriculture in the land.

5. Agricultural county and State associations—fairs where the latest in the interest to the farmer is on exhibition.

6. Farmers' institutes, which bring to the towns in the winter season experts from State and Nation to discuss before both farmer, wife, and family specific phases of farm life.

7. Women's clubs, which are enlisting the women of the town as well as of the country. What can be of more interest to the housewife of the city than a knowledge of home economics, based upon the farm?

8. Chautauquas, of which there are over 2,000, which supply the platform and audience for such topics of rural interest. Here is perhaps one of the chiefest of all the agents of publicity.

9. Kindred to the latter, the press publicity is closely allied.

10. All this created public opinion finally embodies itself in legislation by the State and Nation. Every State has taken a step. What should be done by the Nation?

When it appears for the welfare of the citizen, the Nation enacts sumptuary laws. When the rights of trade are infringed, the Nation, under the head of interstate-commerce power, regulates rates, forbids discriminations among shippers, and so forth. When it appears for the general welfare, the Nation defines a day by limiting the hours of labor, designates safety conditions for labor, provides against occupational diseases, enacts workmen's compensation laws, and even provides a minimum wage. For the same reason it proposes to enact laws regulating child labor, employment of women, and even suggests old-age pensions. The chief province of government is for justice, welfare, and liberty of the citizen. In the interest of the citizen it deals with the question of high cost of living which is not answered by tariff legislation. In the present legislation we have offered by the sponsors of the Underwood tariff bill the chief reason for its enactment the reduction of the high cost of living. If this statement is a sincere expression of the authors, the results of the legislation must be woefully disappointing. Meat on the free list is not the way to reduce the price to the consumer. The national way is to increase the production of meat.

One of the chief causes of high cost of living, aside from our decrease of production and our growing extravagance, is seen in the exodus from the farm to the city of the farmer's boy, who ought to be induced by a better system of education and a more attractive community life to remain on the farm and become a producer rather than a consumer. Every time a farmer's lad, who by education might have made a scientific agriculturist, leaves the farm for the city to make a mere clerk, a consumer of the product he could produce, you have an additional cause of high cost of living.

Placing farm products upon the free list will not do it. But make the farm life attractive. Make the soil more productive. Increase the output per acre, so that a small farmer with his small capital can own and till his land. Make it possible for these small farmers to profitably cultivate their small holdings, keep their families together, educate them in the way in which they can best pursue their future occupation with assurance of a balance between the outgo and income, and the high cost of living will not have its terrors.

The problem is not one of consumption so much as production. Legislation should attempt to facilitate production in the interest not only of the farmer but for the thousands in the commercial and industrial centers who must inevitably feel the stress of prices which will ultimately reach distress. The best antidote is to increase the ability of the small farmer, to augment the output of his small acres. Where it now produces but a modicum, induce him to enter the fields of discovery, to increase his yield twofold, fourfold, or tenfold. Here, together with his lessons of rational economy and his defense against foolish extravagance, is the solution of the high cost of living. It is within the province of education. It is an educational situation. It will be solved only by education.

The Illinois bankers' annual meeting reported on income, population, and condition of the State, which report indicated that the State had declined as an agricultural State. It recommended, among other things—

- (a) Better rural conditions to make farm life more inviting.
- (b) Improvement of schools, providing better plans for making the child's schooling respond to his after avocation.
- (c) Better roads.

These recommendations are in keeping with the newer ideas of the Government's functions.

Whatever act can have a civil reason assigned as its real purpose is within the sanction of legislation. A citizen has a right to work in unhealthy trades at unhealthy times or under unhealthy conditions, just as he has a right to consume unhealthy food and drink, provided by so doing he does not injure the public. If he is forbidden, it is not placed upon individual grounds, but for the general welfare.

The law would not forbid me as a railroad engineer working 15 hours a day, so far as I am personally concerned. But for the sake of the public, whose citizens I am carrying, 15 hours per day may cause frightful loss of life by wrecks induced by an overworked engineer. Here the law steps in and interferes with personal contracts.

So in the care of regulation of employment of women, so far as she is personally regarded, the law does not concern itself so much; but so far as an employment in fields dangerous, immoral, unhealthy, the State has a right to interfere for the sake of the public.

Upon the same basis of reasoning the Government has regulated night labor to a certain degree. For the same reason it is within the province of the Government to regulate life in tenement houses against vicious violations of the laws of health. On the same basis of reasoning the Government has a clear right to regulate racial relations.

It has already done some service. The Morrill Act, back in 1862, made the start. The 30,000 acres to each Congressman amounted to about $13,000,000 national aid to education. This was supplemented in 1887 by the Hatch Act, which added an annual appropriation of $15,000. In 1890 the second Morrill Act gave an additional $25,000 annually. In 1906 the Adams Act provided an additional $15,000 annually. The Nelson amendment, in 1907, provided $25,000 additional, making in all the munificent sum of $80,000 additional annual assistance of the work begun back in 1862.

The Government's right to do this will not be questioned seriously. Whether it ought to enlarge upon it is no question in my mind. Education is most certainly a suitable field for national concern. The Government in the past has been active in its relation to slavery. It will act as freely to-day against any form of peonage. It has in the past taken position on sumptuary laws. It is to-day aggressive in reducing the evils of the use of narcotics by similar laws.

It will in the future be more active on regulation of capital and labor to conserve the rights of both factors in the interest of the public. Employers' liability, workmen's compensation, social and industrial readjustment, are all prominent topics of legislation by this body. The numerous efforts made, both voluntary and legal, by city, county, and State are more or less fugitive. There is no approach to unity and no attempt to systematize. The one feature of our education hard to understand by the educated foreigner is our complete lack of a national system of education. Perhaps we shall never have such a system, for it is not at all certain we want it, not, most certainly, if it means to supersede our various State systems.

But there are some features of which the Nation should take cognizance. Whatever affects citizenship is a matter the Nation is interested in. Whatever affects the health of the citizen, the Nation takes notice. Whatever affects the rights and welfare of the citizen, the Nation becomes interested. The very end of government, as stated in the Constitution, is to establish justice, to promote the general welfare, and to secure the blessings of liberty to the people.

When the health of the citizen is in question, the Nation enacts the pure-food laws; exercises its police power in regulation of the quarantining of its subjects, for the good of the public. It also can supervise, if it so desires, certain elections, with some authority over the citizen. The Government also has a right to regulate, in a sense, the laws of marriage and divorce; while this entire subject is generally left to the State, it is of such general importance that Congress is free to exercise a controlling influence.

The law is free to enter upon the protection of the public from the evils of child labor. The real grounds are to conserve the child's time for the better employment of schooling. No action is taken on a single topic that does not find its reasons for it in the public weal.

National highway or road building is a theme which has from the beginning held the attention of our people as a whole. In Washington's day next to canal building "better roads" was of interest to the erstwhile surveyor boy. The history of the Cumberland Road, generally known as the National Pike, is familiar to all Members of this House. For the past decade no question has been more forcibly brought to the attention of State and Nation than the best method of road building. Just now one of the most important congresses held in the country is that in Detroit in the interest of a national system of good roads. While there will be a sharp difference on method, most people are agreed upon the importance and the assurance that the need will be met in a satisfactory manner. At least few will question the wisdom of making more easy the communication and transportation among our people.

In all this present legislation on the tariff-reform agitation, the chief reason assigned is to reduce the burden of the consumer, to reduce the cost of living. Some of us have insisted that the chief concern of the Government should be to insure the consumer the ability to purchase the needed article rather than to lose sight of the producer in an attempt to so legislate that an imaginary benefit will come to the consumer in the way of lower prices. Low price is not a boon to the consumer if he does not possess the wherewithal with which to buy. However, cost of living is a subject of legislation. The Government should investigate into the causes of ascending prices. In the face of the continued increasing price of meats, due not to a tariff—and free meats will not lower the price—but to a disturbance between the amount demanded and the amount supplied, the former increasing while the latter is decreasing, what is the plain duty of the Government, acting within its domain in relation to the high cost of living?

The same reports which tell us of the decreasing production of meat and the subsequent increase of prices also tell us that millions of acres in New England and the Atlantic States are available for stock raising.

The finely watered and well-sheltered pasture sections of the mountains stretching from the north into the south country, comprising the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, the Virginias, the Carolinas, Tennessee, and Georgia, are ready to support millions of sheep, cattle, and hogs in close proximity to the great markets of this eastern section. These millions of heads of live stock would give added enthusiasm to the agriculturist in the production of the needed corn, oats, wheat, alfalfa, and other farm products, which would relieve the price of meats, dependent upon the big western rancher thousands of miles from the consumer. If high cost of living is a legitimate subject of legislation, why does not the Government enter upon a constructive policy, looking not for a foreign market in which to buy, but rather inducing a development of our home resources, to increase our home production and thus reduce the cost to the consumer by increasing the supply of the producer? Why does not the Government set out upon an investigation of this problem?

It is purely a matter of education. The greatest farming lands under the sun are ours. But instead of their increasing in production per acre they are decreasing, and at the time when our demands are increasing. This can be changed only by education.

We have the finest mountain ranges, well watered, ready for abundant stock raising. But in the face of all this, we are declining in this enterprise at the very time when meats are soon to become prohibitive in price, due not to tariffs but lack of wisdom in keeping the supply apace with demand. This policy can only be changed by education.

What is the most important problem of production?

In the face of phenomenal growth of population, and a consequent increase of demand upon production, our source of supply—the acreage of the country—remains stationary. What is the problem? How to make the acre produce beyond what it now does.

This can not be done by our boys and girls living in the rut of our fathers. The farmer is not the man who holds the plow and drives the team. He is the thinker, the student of production, distribution, and consumption. The farm must become something more than a workshop. It is now a laboratory. Its chief labor is not of the hand, but of the head as well. It must not remain the place simply to work, eat, and sleep. It must be the unit of the social and industrial interests of a community and, in a still larger sense, the State.

When this position of the farmer is recognized by our legislators, keeping the boy or girl upon the farm will no longer be a problem. The frightful drift from country to city, with all its consequences, will be reversed. The boy and girl as to the "manor born" will see not only his interests but his joy and pleasure on the farm. Our people will be producers as well as distributors and consumers. After all, it is a matter of education.

If the country is warranted in its interests in the multiform classes of legislation involved in the past activities of the Government in behalf of a better citizenship, why should it not investigate the real source of the cure? A commission of nine distinguished educators and citizens such as President Wilson, so well qualified for the purpose, would appoint, could set the agencies at work covering such fields as in their judgment, in conjunction with that of the President, should be covered, and report their findings to the President, who would in turn report to this body. Such a commission would render the country a service difficult to estimate.

All the work heretofore done, however well done, has been purely voluntary, by private enterprises or public-spirited and professional organizations. They have been without official stamp, fugitive and various in character; their efforts have been attenuated, detached parts of no possible whole, no unity of effort in any sense, and at best are simply commendatory. What our country now needs most is to unify these reports, classify the recommendations, proceed as upon an educational platform to define the needs and suggest the remedy. I am satisfied there is no greater field of useful investigation than vocational needs, agriculture, and industrial training, and I express the hope that no serious objection may be raised to the proposition that this first step be taken, so that after this commission makes its report this Congress may thence proceed in legislation on the lines suggested by previous attempts to care for these great and important factors in our national life.

Mr. TAYLOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I had some remarks I would like to have made in regard to vocational education. I would like to have permission to extend them in the Record if possible.

SENATOR TILLMAN'S RETROSPECT OF 18 YEARS (S. DOC. NO. 210).

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, a few days ago I asked unanimous consent for the publication of Hon. Charles Francis Adams's retrospect of his life, called "Tis Sixty Years Since." Senators who have not read it will enjoy it, I know, and find it most profitable reading.

I am going to indulge in something of the same kind for myself, and I ask unanimous consent to have published in the RECORD and also as a public document an article I prepared 18 years ago for the New York World, giving my impressions and the then beliefs about Wall Street and what is called "the money power."

I am asking for its republication because so much that was mere surmise and prophecy has come true, that I feel it very appropriate for me to reproduce it. I shall incorporate in it, if the Senate will permit, statistics and facts to make the picture a photograph of present conditions, to be compared with conditions which existed in 1896—something on the order of "before and after taking"; or TILLMAN on conditions in 1896 and those conditions now, brought down to date.

The growth of wealth in New York has been marvelous, and all thoughtful men must realize that the processes by which this wealth has been taken from the producers and transferred to the pockets of those Wall Street sharks have been both morally and legally wrong. The unscrupulous methods which have been used are nothing but robbery, pure and simple.

Charles Francis Adams's retrospect is for 60 years; mine for only 18.

When I came to the Senate 18 years ago I was looked upon as an ultra radical and semi-anarchist, and the plutocratic press have never ceased to hold the prejudice they then imbibed against me, though of recent years they have become more liberal—some of them even generous—in their comments about my personal characteristics.

One point that will strike everybody—and it is a most important one—is that the income tax which the Supreme Court then declared unconstitutional has just been enacted into law, the Constitution having been amended so as to make it lawful for Congress to do it.

We have had a great howl in the Senate about the inequality and injustice of the income tax. Some eastern Senators have lamented the wrong done to their constituents, the well-groomed and well-fed rich men and millionaires, who will have to contribute to the expenses of running the Government because of this tax. They have spoken about the injury done their "people"—"my people" collectively—seemingly unconscious of the fact, which is very patent to anyone, that while the well to do in New England and the Middle States will bear most of the burden of the income tax, these very men have been robbing their fellow citizens, who are workingmen, and keeping them poor. These rich men have systematically milked the poor man's cow in the East just as constantly as they have milked the farmer's cow in the West and South, but they have been shrewd enough to make them believe the contrary. They have appealed to the poorer classes to vote with them to keep the Democrats out of power, and have succeeded until the last election.

I do not believe that these poor men can be longer bamboozled into voting against our Democratic President and his policies by any such claptrap or illogical appeals in future. The time is coming very rapidly when the poor men everywhere will line up at the ballot box against wrong and oppression without regard to party, and a demand for laws which will secure equality of opportunity with equality of burden will be made in thunder tones.

The Democratic platform at Chicago, instead of declaring for a revision of the Constitution, attacked the Supreme Court, asserting that it needed reforming more than the Constitution. But whatever may be the opinion now on that subject—for men will differ—we have just enacted an income-tax law graduated as it should be and cumulative; and the enormous fortunes which have been created by reason of Republican favoritism and class legislation are going to bear their just share of the burden of maintaining this Government. I predict this is only a beginning. An inheritance tax will follow soon.

It is peculiarly gratifying to me to have lived long enough to see this consummation; and I congratulate my brother Democrats throughout the United States on the victory for the people which has at last come. I did my share of the fighting while I had strength and health. I am enjoying to the limit of my ability the victory which we won; and, like an old soldier fallen on the battle field, ill, though not yet dead, I love to think I can hear the shouts of victory; and want to raise one myself—a regular war whoop!

But we have only just begun to undo the devilry which has been perpetrated by the Republican Party during and since the war. Let us continue the good work until we enact laws which will insure the country against manufactured panics, such as was produced in 1907, and against the robberies of trusts and monopolies. The Republicans have heretofore been shrewd enough to play one half of the working people and farmers against the other half under the plea of protecting American labor. They have preached this lie from every stump, while at the same time they were importing "pauper labor" from Europe by the millions to take the places of the American workingman and his family. The European laborer was called a pauper as long as he was on the other side of the Atlantic and held up as a scarecrow. To admit his goods to our markets was almost a sin against the Holy Ghost. But he became a pet as soon as he landed on this side and was turned into a Republican voter, giving the protected interests more Congressmen at Washington and more opportunity to rob the producers.

The tariff law, which we have just enacted, will have demonstrated, before the next general election, whether there is any foundation in the prediction made on the floor of the Senate about the ruinous consequences which would follow its enactment. With free sugar and free wool the cost of living is bound to come down, and such falsehoods will no longer influence the men who have ballots to protect themselves. Heretofore the ballots have been cast often directly against their own interests, and in favor of the plutocrats who had debauched the Government at Washington, causing laws to be enacted to make their wealth increase while the poor were growing poorer every day.

The "silver craze," as it was called in derision, has quieted down. Whether or not it was a "craze" at all and whether the world will not be compelled to remonetize silver only time can tell. The "goldbugs" promised all sorts of blessings to the country if the gold standard was maintained. But somehow the high cost of living continues to climb, the poor people are getting more and more restless, and many are becoming angry. Some of them are almost desperate and hopeless of any relief.

I do not know myself what is wrong with the world, but I do know this: The unrest is growing daily and socialists multiplying apace, and Congress should set itself honestly and earnestly to the task of righting things and furnishing relief. Charles Francis Adams's address will throw a great flood of light from the viewpoint of that distinguished publicist and patriot now verging on 80 years.

The essential parts of the Democratic platform of 1896 are going to be enacted into law sooner or later, I firmly believe.

The people have chosen a wise and patriotic leader, who will neither betray nor sell them out. Woodrow Wilson is "making good" every day of his life and will go down in American history as one of the greatest of our Presidents. Let all laggard Democrats, if there be any, buckle on their armor and fall into line under his leadership; and let us move forward toward the restoration of our Republic, to Lincoln's grand and glorious ideal, "a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people."

THE VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina that the matter referred to by him be published in the RECORD and also as a public document? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. (S. Doc. No. 210.)

The matter referred to follows:

[From the New York World, Sunday, March 1, 1896.]

"TILLMAN'S BLAST—THE FARMER ICONOCLAST AMONG WALL STREET MONEY KINGS—HIS PARABLE OF THE COW—FED ON FRUITFUL FARMS OF THE COUNTRY, BUT MILKED ONLY BY EASTERN SPECULATORS—TWO CARTOONS OF HIS OWN DESIGN—THE KIND OF ARGUMENT WHICH MADE TILLMAN FIRST GOVERNOR AND THEN SENATOR FROM SOUTH CAROLINA—CLEVELAND AND THE 'MONEY POWER'—ELECTED AS A PROTEST AGAINST GOVERNMENTAL PARASITES, BUT HAS ADDED TO THEIR POWER.

"A STRANGE FIGURE APPEARED IN WALL STREET ON MONDAY MORNING AND WANDERED WITH THE CROWDS THAT ROARED BETWEEN THE TOWERING BUILDINGS—A TALL, STRONG MAN WITH BROWN, SHAVEN FACE, NAPOLEONIC FEATURES, AND A SINGLE FIERCE EYE. THE BLACK SLOUCH HAT WAS PULLED DOWN IN FRONT AND TURNED UP BEHIND. THERE NEVER WAS A MORE STRIKING FIGURE SEEN IN THE CITADEL OF THE MILLIONAIRES, NOR ONE OF DEEPER SIGNIFICANCE. AS HE STOOD IN FRONT OF THE SUBTREASURY, GRIMLY EYEING THE OFFICE OF J. PIERPONT MORGAN, A FEW MEN TURNED AROUND TO LOOK A SECOND TIME AT THE DARK, ALMOST SAVAGE COUNTERTEANCE. BUT NONE IN THAT VAST, RESTLESS MULTITUDE SEEMED TO RECOGNIZE SENATOR BENJAMIN RYAN TILLMAN, WHO HAD COME TO NEW YORK TO WRITE UP WALL STREET FOR THE WORLD.

"SO THAT'S WHERE MORGAN LIVES, YONDER!"

"THE ONE EYE BURNED WITH A SUDDEN ENTHUSIASM. THE VOICE WAS SHRIILL AND HARSH. THEN THE SENATOR TURNED AND GAZED AT TRINITY CHURCH, STANDING LIKE A BENEDICTION AT THE TOP OF THE STREET.

"HOW MUCH DID YOU SAY TRINITY CHURCH HAS ACCUMULATED?"

"MORE THAN A HUNDRED MILLIONS."

"AND SO MUCH POVERTY! SO MUCH SUFFERING! IT'S VERY STRANGE."

"WITH A SIGH THE SENATOR STRODE ACROSS TO THE STOCK EXCHANGE, CLIMBED UP TO THE GALLERY, AND PEERED DOWN AT THE SWIRLING, SHRIEKING SPECULATORS ON THE MAIN FLOOR. THE LINES IN HIS FACE DEEPENED.

"'I HAVE BEEN HERE BEFORE,' HE MUTTERED. 'I CAME AS GOVERNOR OF SOUTH CAROLINA TO SELL THE BONDS OF MY STATE. I KNOW WHAT A HORDE OF WOLVES THEY ARE. THESE ARE THE MEN WHO HAVE THE NATION BY THE THROAT.'

"SO FOR TWO DAYS SENATOR TILLMAN WENT ABOUT IN THE STRONGHOLDS OF THE MONEY KINGS OF AMERICA SEARCHING FOR FACTS.

"'THERE ISN'T A DROP OF PATRIOTIC BLOOD IN THIS CROWD,' HE SAID. 'AND YET IT WRITES THE LAWS AND CONTROLS THE POLICY OF THE COUNTRY. NOTHING BUT A REVOLUTION CAN OVERTHROW SENATOR TILLMAN'S ALLEGORICAL COW.

This cartoon, designed by Senator Tillman, shows his idea of the present American situation. The cow, symbolical of national resources, is feeding on the produce of the farmers of the West and South, while her golden milk is all drawn by the "sharpers," gamblers, and speculators in Wall Street.

SENATOR TILLMAN'S ALLEGORICAL COW No. 2.

In this cartoon Senator Tillman shows the result of the attempt of the farmers to turn the big cow around, to let her feed on income tax in the East while they should milk her in the West and South. But the cow, as Senator Tillman draws her, was not a reversible cow. As soon as she tried to feed on income tax the Supreme Court seized her by the throat as a reminder that she must do her eating exclusively in the agricultural regions. The farmers in the West are disappointed and get no income-tax milk.

THE MONEY POWER. WE MUST TRY THE BALLOT BOX FIRST, AND THEN IF WE FAIL—BUT I HAVE SAID IT ON THE FLOOR OF THE SENATE. THE AMERICAN SPIRIT IS NOT YET DEAD, THANK GOD, AND YOU FELLOWS IN NEW YORK WILL SOON HEAR FROM THE SOUTH AND THE WEST.

"AND PRESENTLY THE SENATOR SAT DOWN IN DELMONICO'S TO SEE THE YOUNG AND OLD BUCKS EAT AND DRINK THE WEALTH CREATED BY THE TOILERS. WHEREAT HE RETURNED TO HIS HOTEL AND WROTE WHAT HE HAD TO SAY.

"THESE ARE THE VIEWS WHICH TILLMAN HOLDS. THEY HAVE MADE HIM GOVERNOR OF SOUTH CAROLINA AND UNITED STATES SENATOR—THE IDOL OF THE CAROLINA FARMERS. THE WORLD HAS OBTAINED AND NOW PUBLISHES HIS OPINIONS, BUT DOES NOT INDORSE THEM.

"SENATOR TILLMAN'S VIEWS—HIS VISIT TO WALL STREET AND HIS OPINION OF ITS POWER IN THE WHOLE COUNTRY.

"Wall Street is a term in very common use, and most people have an essentially clear idea as to its meaning. As understood by the masses, it stands for what has come to be known as the money power, the force exerted by aggregated capital.

"There is at this time a double interest attaching to the term 'Wall Street' by reason of the fact that everything of a political nature indicates that the struggle for the mastery of this country—whether the people shall govern it or whether money shall govern it—is approaching a climax.

"The financial question and its settlement is now the uppermost one in the minds of men. Interested persons may attempt to push it aside and belittle it and to substitute other issues for it, but in the coming presidential election it must be the issue.

"Feeling thus, and having had cause recently to give expression to my ideas and opinions in the Senate in no uncertain terms and no uncertain manner, I have thought it well to ask the use of the columns of America's greatest newspaper with a view to presenting phases of the question with more clearness than was possible on that occasion.

"With that purpose in mind I have devoted during the past week a couple of days to the gathering of some facts by a personal visit to New York and to Wall Street. It so happened that during my term as governor of South Carolina I had the opportunity while negotiating for refunding our State debt to study the methods employed by those who manipulate and control the complex machinery by means of which a few men, not exceeding 500, have laid the industries, the politics, and, in fact, the Government of this country under tribute and are gathering for themselves wealth beyond computation in a period of time so short as to stagger belief.

"For the reader unfamiliar with New York City it is well to give a brief description as to what Wall Street, taken as a district of New York City, really is to the eye. When Manhattan Island, on which New York stands, was first settled by the Dutch, they chose to locate on its extreme southern point, where meet the East and the Hudson Rivers. A town grew up, composed of a network of irregular, crooked streets, without seeming order, and all very narrow.

"A few hundred yards up Broadway from Battery Park, where the historic Castle Garden, now transformed into a public aquarium, still stands, is Trinity Church. In the small graveyard surrounding it repose the bones of Alexander Hamilton, Capt. Lawrence, of 'Don't give up the ship!' memory, and other great historic characters.

"When a note is struck on Trinity's chimes it is carried into every office and institution in the Wall Street district, for that district is so small that from Trinity's spire it appears to lie directly beneath. The office of Russell Sage looks right out over the old burying ground, and a dingy office it is, in a dingy building, where this, one of the great money kings of America, sits and cuts his coupons and calls his high-rate loans. Casting their shadows on Trinity when the morning sun rises in the east stand the great office buildings, running over 20 stories in height in some cases, in which some of the great trust companies and banks have invested portions of their enormous surplus and in which they have their homes.

"Directly in front of Trinity's bronze portals—the gift of an Astor—opens Wall Street proper, a narrow, asphalted thoroughfare, less than one-third of a mile long and banked on either side with massive stone structures, some of great height. One of these is the Stock Exchange, which also has entrances on Broad Street and New Street, a block or two of which streets may be included in the Wall Street district, as can a block or two of Nassau Street, where a large number of the richest banks and trust companies in the land have their headquarters.

"Just across from the New Street entrance to the Stock Exchange stands the Consolidated Exchange, where a stock-gambling game of the same character is carried on, but on a rather smaller scale. Within easy gunshot of both, were it not for the obstruction that the buildings offer, are the Produce Exchange and the Cotton Exchange, where the products of the country, representing the toil of millions of farmers and other workers, are tossed up or down in prices according to the whims or interests of the greedy gamblers.

"Strange to say, the most insignificant of all the structures on Wall Street proper—or, at least, the lowest and one which would be the most insignificant were it not for its massiveness—is the subtreasury of the United States, at Wall and Broad Streets. In front of it stands the bronze figure of Washington, on the very spot where he took the oath of office when sworn in as the first President of the United States.

"Just across the way is the office of Morgan & Co. The office of the Sugar Trust is down the street a few hundred feet, just beyond the customhouse. In the immediate vicinity of the subtreasury are to be found the offices of the largest private banking houses of this country, the representatives of the foreign houses, and the headquarters of the bullion dealers.

"So much by way of explanation as to localities. I propose now briefly to outline the methods by which the millions of honest toilers throughout this country are laid under tribute and their earnings absorbed by this devilish generally known as Wall Street.

"It has been said that if anything is more timid than $1,000,000 it is $2,000,000, and sad experience has shown that if there is anything more greedy and tyrannical, more insatiate and remorseless, than $50,000,000 it is $100,000,000. Enough is an unknown word in the vocabulary of those who own this much capital. Their cry is 'More! Ever more!'

"The great power and influence of Wall Street, which has doubled and quadrupled and become more and more appalling, was laid during the war, when by the establishment of the national banks and the control of legislation in their interest, together with the speculations in gold and national securities, a few hundred men, utterly lacking in patriotism and without any regard for the public welfare, seized the Government by the throat and threatened it with bankruptcy and paralysis if their demands were not granted.

"Enormous fortunes multiplied. The owner of a million soon found himself possessed of many millions. Money bred money by reason of the violent fluctuations in the national credit as the fortunes of war changed on the battle fields of the South.

"The greenbacks, which were the salvation of the Union, were speculated in daily. The National Treasury, under stress of war, was forced to exchange bonds for them, and as soon as the war terminated the schemers set about securing legislation, under the pretense of strengthening the public credit, looking to the payment of the bonds in coin.

"This did not satisfy them, however. In a brief time the demonetization of silver followed, and ever since the fell purpose of those who have conspired together has been to force payment in gold.

"The national banks have received interest from the Government on the bonds. They have received interest from the people on the notes based on those bonds. Thus the industries of the country have been laid under double tribute for the benefit of these pets. No wonder they have grown rich enough to buy steel yachts while the poor are sweating for a bare living.

"The banking business of New York is concentrated in the New York Clearing House, which is simply a trades-union of all the banks, and has palatial quarters within a stone's throw of Wall Street. These 66 banks (63 banks and trust companies in 1912) have aggregate capital of about $61,000,000 ($179,619,000 in 1912), and in addition they have a surplus and accumulated profit of $73,000,000 ($300,145,700 in 1912). They hold on deposit from customers about $490,000,000 ($1,788,619,000 in 1912). They have loaned out at interest about $400,000,000 ($1,946,186,000 in 1913). Their cash on hand consists of about $64,000,000 ($336,335,000 in 1912) in gold and $87,000,000 ($78,044,000 in 1912) in paper money. Their holdings of silver are quite insignificant, for it is an understood practice among them never to offer silver money or silver certificates one to another in payment of balances. The New York Subtreasury is a member of the New York Clearing House, and is equally careful in boycotting silver and never offers it in daily settlements with banks. This notwithstanding the fact that all our Government obligations are payable in coin, silver as well as gold.

"The aggregate bank clearings in exchanges of checks for 1895 was $30,000,000,000 ($100,743,967,000 in 1912) in New York City alone. In all the other clearing houses in the country the aggregate for the same time was $23,500,000,000 ($74,170,264,000 in 1912). New York does more money exchanging than all the rest of the country, and the man who handles money takes care that plenty of it sticks to his fingers, and the New York bankers are no exception. The Chemical Bank has for years paid 150 per cent annually on its capital, and another bank has paid 100 per cent, and the average of all is a very high one.

"In 1895 the New York Stock Exchange, which is an unchartered body—a mere club, in fact—and entirely independent of the obligations of a corporation to State and Federal law, bought and sold 66,440,576 shares of stock (131,128,425 in 1912), of an average par value of about $6,000,000,000 ($11,562,129,835 in 1912). In addition $500,000,000 ($675,213,500 bonds of all kinds in 1912) of railroad and State bonds were sold and about $16,000,000 of Government bonds.

"The two latter classes of securities are largely dealt in over the counters of banking houses, so the figures do not represent all transactions. Besides, there is another exchange within the Wall Street precinct actively engaged in the same line of manipulation. There are now listed on the New York Stock Exchange a par value of $4,067,210,334 in stocks and $5,122,092,469 in bonds of various classes. In 1895 about $500,000,000 in new issues of securities were placed or sold. Of these, $125,000,000 were purchased abroad and $375,000,000 were purchased or placed here. This includes the Morgan Government-bond syndicate issue of February, 1895. Present par value of stocks and bonds listed not obtainable.

"But this is only one phase of the matter. It is only one of the many schemes that have been invented and carried to success by the harpies who frequent the gambling dens known as the stock exchanges. The products of labor throughout the country have been manipulated from Wall Street as a center so that those who produce the wealth receive as little as possible, while the men represented in and by Wall Street have continued to amass wealth at an unexampled rate. Speculation drives prices down when farmers have to sell and drives prices up after the farmers' products have passed into other hands.

"Cotton, wheat, and other staples have been governed in prices by futures and not by the natural law of supply and demand. Prices have been raised or depressed as this syndicate of bankers and brokers have sold the market up or down. There are now several hundred industrial trusts, the principal ones being listed in Wall Street—all founded on the simple principle of founding a monopoly, minimizing the cost of production, and forcing the prices to the consumers to the highest possible point.

"An illustration or two:

"The American Sugar Refining Co. is a New Jersey corporation, intended to monopolize the entire sugar trade of the country, which it most effectually does. It has an outstanding stock issue of $75,000,000. This is supposed to represent the value of their several refineries and tools of trade. It really represents the amount of money on which the sugar barons desire the American people to pay tribute. The Havemeyers and others engaged in the sugar-refining industry in 1887 turned their properties into the Sugar Refineries Co. and took stock in the concern to the extent of two or three times the actual value of their plant.

"In other words, according to competent experts, an appraisal of the properties comprising the present company would show an actual value of about $25,000,000. The trust, in order to pay its princely dividends of 1 per cent per month, is extorting from the masses a tribute which would be wholly unnecessary if it were working on an honest basis. Even now it is claimed in Wall Street that the trust has invested in cash no less than $11,000,000 in raw sugars. The management hold their sessions in secret, and no one but the Havemeyers and their intimates are permitted to know anything as to the profits, investments, or anything else to which stockholders are justly entitled.

"Even more outrageous is that great combination of capital known as the Coal Trust.

"The entire hard-coal district is comprised within a very limited area. That area is traversed by the lines of 11 railroads, known as 'the coalers.' They have formed a combine and control absolutely the entire matter of coal consumption. Many of them own large areas of coal lands and are miners as well as transporters. There are a large number of private miners, but they are entirely under control of the roads embracing the coal combine, since they can get no transit to market or tidewater except over these roads.

"Once each month the sales agents of these roads meet and fix upon the output of coal for the coming month and the price at which it shall be sold. This combine includes several roads now in the hands of receivers, and therefore under the control of the United States courts.

"These roads enter into the agreements and are as greedy for their share of the coal output as any of the others. The output and price is fixed by the weather and the demands of trade, and is generally about as much as the roads think they can squeeze out of the public. The consumption is about 40,000,000 tons a year, so that a rate of only 10 cents a ton means an extra $4,000,000 a year in the pockets of the coal barons. A dollar means $4,000,000 a year.

"A private mine owner is compelled to turn over his coal to the railroad company at their price as soon as it comes from his pit. Any attempt on his part to send it to market and sell it at his own price would be met by a refusal to give him cars in which to transport it.

"The farmers of the land, representing many millions of people, after long agitation and enormous petitions, have sought in vain to get Congress to stop this nefarious traffic. The cotton, produce, and other exchanges, whose members number less hundreds than there are millions of farmers and persons dependent on farmers, have outweighed in the councils of the Nation at Washington the cry for relief that has come from the sufferers.

"Yet there are statutes which make it obligatory upon the Attorney General of the United States to protect the people against these unjust combinations. How many suits has he brought? Not one.

"What further proofs do we need that the Government at Washington is absolutely controlled by the money power of Wall Street, and that the President, the Cabinet officers, the Senators—for many of whom seats are purchased—the Congressmen, and the courts are the tools and agents of the octopus which has its tentacles fastened upon the people throughout this vast country, sucking their substance year in and year out.

"Following close on the heels of the demonetization of silver came the resumption of specie payments, entailing an enormous contraction of the circulating medium. These two causes have steadily hammered prices down, until to-day they are lower than at any time within the last three centuries. The masses of the producers throughout the country, the men who create its wealth, are being rapidly pauperized. Farmers who have struggled to obtain homes are driven to the most desperate straits to keep from losing them, or have already lost them, while these financial vampires, who produce nothing, are reveling in wealth undreamed of in any past age of the world's history.

"We are rapidly coming to be a country in which what should be a large, well-to-do, contented class of yeomen, such as must ever be the strength of a nation, are hopelessly staggering under burdens of debt, with no prospect of relief—slaves bound to the soil by mortgages.

"The growth and development of the United States since the war has been the wonder of the world. One of the most remarkable things in connection with that development has been the expansion in railroad building.

"Who owns these roads, and in whose interests are they run? Built, as many of them were originally, by the aggregation of capital in small amounts from genuine stockholders, they have been absorbed in a manner almost phenomenal, until to-day it is safe to say that three-fourths of the railroad mileage of the country is owned and controlled by a few score of men, most of whom have their offices on Wall Street.

"How could such things happen, will be asked? They simply stole them; that is all.

"The railroads of the land are now represented by a capital stock of $5,150,000,000 ($8,582,463,256 in 1911), a funded or bond debt of $5,700,000,000 ($10,989,608,551 in 1911), and a floating debt of nearly $400,000,000. The gross earnings per year is now about $1,100,000,000 ($2,848,468,965 in 1911), leaving, after paying operating expenses, net earnings of about $325,000,000 ($903,219,137 in 1911). This is divided into interests on bonds of about $235,000,000 per year ($377,973,479 in 1911), and dividends on stock of about $85,000,000 ($316,402,684 in 1911). The passengers carried reach nearly 600,000,000 a year (1,019,658,605 in 1911), and the freight traffic is nearly 700,000,000 (1,817,562,049 in 1911) tons a year.

"Every cent of the enormous income from this leading industry of the country comes directly from the people. An examination would show that the money honestly expended in the production of all railroads and their equipments is but a tithe of the capital nominally invested in them; the rest is water, pure and simple; but it figures as 'invested capital,' as 'vested interests,' upon which the capitalists claim the protection of the courts and the whole Government machinery, and always get it.

"No better illustration of the power exercised by the monopolists is needed than the history of the West Shore enterprise of New York State. The Vanderbilts and their cohorts, up to the time the West Shore road was started, held the merchants and the agriculturists in an iron grasp, dictating rates and conditions for the handling of traffic with absolute despotism. The prospect of a competitive line reaching from New York to the Lakes put the New York Central people on their mettle, and from the very inception of the former, measures were taken to crush it out.

"After the new line had been completed every obstacle possible was thrown in the way, and the road finally went into bankruptcy, a condition which had been regarded as inevitable by everyone who at the time was acquainted with the tactics of the Vanderbilts. When the West Shore became hopelessly involved, the Vanderbilts, through Mr. J. P. Morgan, gobbled it up at their own price.

"Those who had put money into it were crowded out, all competition was crushed, and the business interests of the State placed under the Vanderbilt control as completely as ever. The Vanderbilts and their friends were the only ones who profited by the deal, which is only one of a hundred carried through successfully, despite public sentiment, and without interference from the courts and judges whose duty it was to interfere.

"Take another case that is local to New York City:

"For years New York City pleaded for rapid-transit facilities, and two companies were created to supply them, one taking the east and one the west side of the city. The Metropolitan road ran up Sixth Avenue and the New York Co. took the Third Avenue route. Each issued stock to the amount of $6,500,000, together with a small lot of bonds. This amount was put in cash in the roads.

"Wall Street saw the possibilities of profit in rapid transit, and proceeded to take advantage of it. The first step was to consolidate the two roads, not by adding the two capitals together, making $13,000,000, but by creating a new company, called the Manhattan, merely to take the lease of the other two roads.

"This lease had such large prospective earning capacity that it was capitalized at $13,000,000, making a total of $26,000,000, of which one-half was clear water or wind. It represented no investment in the property, and was merely so much stock printed to order, to be unloaded on an innocent public.

"For months before the amalgamation of the roads they were the center of a cyclone of vilification and abuse until the stocks were pounded down to 17 cents on the dollar. Once the property had passed into Jay Gould's hands it was manipulated upward until it reached 175, and then in a day, because of a quarrel between Cyrus W. Field and the Gould interest, it fell 20 points.

"It has been a favorite gambling stock since then, being specially useful in cases where deals were made with local politicians, they being let in with points on the market in return for the granting of public privileges.

"It can not be gainsaid that Congress has legislated steadily in the interest of the corporations and to curtail and restrict the power of the States in controlling the railroads and protecting the small investors and shippers. The machinery of the Federal courts has been the main engine in the robbery and ruin. During the past 30 years, with very few exceptions—and I speak of the exceptions to the honor of the few judges who have withstood the almost overpowering temptations with which they have been beset—the decisions of the Supreme and Circuit Courts have been uniformly against the people and in furtherance of the aims of those who have stolen, under forms of law, the larger portion of this railroad property from its original owners.

"The reason why the Federal judiciary has been thus antagonistic to the best interests of the country and to justice is that the judges are almost uniformly selected from among corporation attorneys, and I have no doubt their names have been frequently suggested or dictated to the President for appointment by the corporations.

"In addition to this, the raw products hauled to market, together with the manufactured products transported to the interior in exchange, have had to pay freight far in excess of what is reasonable, in order to yield a fair dividend on the capital originally invested. This in spite of the fact that the interstate-commerce law was passed by Congress essentially with a view to the control of the extortions of railroads in handling freight and to prevent discriminations and rebates.

"The United States Treasury is run as though it were a private corporation. The Secretary of the Treasury goes to New York when called upon by his masters to receive instructions. His deputies are constant visitors at the offices of the men who control the Treasury from this city.

"It is notorious—at least, it was generally reported in the newspapers—that Mr. Cleveland, in the early part of 1893, said that Wall Street had the country by the throat. We would have naturally looked to a man who appreciated that fact, and who sought to loosen Wall Street's grip on the country's throat, to have selected other advisers than men who are the leaders and directors in Wall Street.

"But he coolly and deliberately opened the doors of the Treasury and bid those leaders in Wall Street enter and work their own sweet will.

"There have already been issued $262,000,000 of bonds to add to the burdens of the already desperate taxpayers, and the end is not yet. Still, we are told that the financial question will not be an issue in the next campaign.

"The best illustration of the existing conditions, and one which will appeal directly to every farmer in the United States, is a picture which I will draw. The idea, however, is not original with me.

"Spread the map of the United States before you. Let us consider, for purpose of illustration, that there is an enormous milch cow, so large that she can reach halfway across the continent. Suppose her mouth to be in the Mississippi Valley, and see the myriad wagons and freight trains of that granary of the world in motion to transport into her capacious maw all the surplus products of the farms of the South and West.

"It is a never-ending stream, and the sturdy toilers in the field, with brawny arms and sun-browned, toil-stained faces, push forward with the products of their labor to satisfy her omnivorous appetite.

"So much food should produce some milk. But where is her udder? Stretch one of her legs back in the usual attitude for milking, so that it will rest in New England. The other hind leg will rest in New Jersey.

"The bag hangs over Manhattan Island. See the streams of rich, golden milk drawn from the udder of that great cow. The farmers feed and ever feed. The milk streams into the receptacles of the capitalists—the bankers, brokers, and speculators of Wall Street.

"How much longer, O benighted sons of toil, will you feed that cow? You are getting no milk. How much longer will you vote like dumb, driven cattle without considering why you vote or for whom you vote?

"Let us reverse this picture. The last Congress, after a bitter struggle, passed an income-tax measure. The idea was to have wealth bear some proportionate share of the burdens of government. From those who had much it was intended to take just a little.

"Congress turned the great milch cow around and placed her head in New York and her udder at Washington. What happened? The Supreme Court of the United States took the cow by the throat, choked it to death, and the poor farmers standing at gaze have not yet recovered from their amazement.

"No milk!

"How much longer will the farmers submit to have the Supreme Court, which has become the tool and instrument of the oppressors, make the few more wealthy and the millions poorer?

"When will the American people have enough?

"BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN."

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House bill 7898, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. BACON. I ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will not consent before that is taken up to act on House bill 7384, to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the Italian Government for the killing of Angelo Albano, an Italian subject. The bill was reported yesterday from the Committee on Foreign Relations. It makes provision for the payment of an amount agreed upon between the United States Government and the Italian Government to compensate for the killing of an Italian in Florida by a mob. The two Governments have agreed upon the amount and the Italian Government does not understand why it is that the money can not be paid. It was reported yesterday and is now on the calendar. The bill has already passed the House.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to consent to anything the Senator from Georgia wants, but I can say to the Senator that that bill will take considerable debate.

Mr. BACON. It is not liable to lead to any debate at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. There will be an amendment offered to it.

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. OVERMAN. There will.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I call attention to the claims of certain American citizens growing out of injuries to Americans on the border between this country and Mexico resulting from battles near the line. These claims are as meritorious as this Italian claim and should have equal consideration.

Mr. BACON. Did these Mexican claims pass the House?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; but they have been favorably reported by the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, if I am correctly informed, and they have passed the Senate on a former occasion.

Mr. OVERMAN. Those claims will be offered as an amendment to that bill.

Mr. BACON. This is an international matter and the two Governments have agreed upon the amount.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no reason why the Senator should not wait and call up the bill after the appropriation bill has been disposed of.

Mr. BACON. I will state very frankly to the Senator what I want to do is to have the amount placed on the pending deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then the Senator can offer it as an amendment.

Mr. BACON. I suppose I could offer it, but necessarily it would go out on a point of order. I may say that it has already passed the House and no doubt it will pass the Senate. It is a very small matter, but delay is likely to produce a little friction between the Governments. The amount has been agreed upon between the two Governments, and it seems to me it would be very proper to make an exception in a case of this kind.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope the Senator will not insist on it now. I shall press the consideration of the appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7898, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7898) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the formal reading of the bill, and that it be read for action on the amendments of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with, and the bill will be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 1, after line 7, to insert:

BOTANIC GARDEN.

For assistants and laborers, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, $630.21.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 2, to insert:

For procuring manure, soil, tools, fuel, purchasing trees, shrubs, plants, and seeds; and for services, materials, and miscellaneous supplies, and contingent expenses in connection with repairs and improvements to Botanic Gardens, under direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, $276.44.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 5, to insert:

For general repairs to buildings, heating apparatus, painting, glazing, repairs to footwalks and roadways, general repairs to packing sheds, storerooms, and stables, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library, $324.44.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Civil Service Commission," on page 2, line 13, after the word "examinations," to strike out "$30,000" and insert "$25,000"; in line 16, after the word "commission," to strike out "$9,000" and insert "$4,000"; and in line 17, after the words "in all," to strike out "$39,000" and insert "$29,000"; so as to make the clause read:

Examination of fourth-class postmasters: For necessary additional office employees, printing, stationery, travel, contingent, and other necessary expenses of examinations, $25,000; field examiners at the rate of $1,500 per annum each, for work in connection with members of local boards and other necessary work as directed by the commission, $4,000; in all, $29,000, to be available during the fiscal year 1914.

Mr. BRISTOW. As to the field examiners at the rate of $1,500 per annum, let me inquire what is the nature of the field examination?

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to be frank with the Senator, and I was just about to make an explanation. I move to add, after the words "nineteen hundred and fourteen," in line 18, at the end of the paragraph, the words "Provided, That hereafter," and to transpose section 4, on page 70, the last page of the bill, so as to come in after "That," so as to read:

Provided, That hereafter any deputy collector of internal revenue or deputy marshal—

And so forth.

If the Senator from Kansas will look at the last page of the bill he will see where this amendment appears and why, if it is adopted, the amendment already read should be adopted. If that amendment is not adopted, I will ask to restore the amount stricken out by the committee. In order to have them considered together I move this amendment to the amendment of the committee. Let the Secretary read it so that all may understand it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think the Senator from North Carolina misunderstood me. I was inquiring about the item for the examination of fourth-class postmasters under the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. OVERMAN. It includes not only fourth-class postmasters, but examinations as to deputy collectors and deputy marshals.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why should not those examinations be made by the Civil Service Commission? It is my understanding that fourth-class postmasters' examinations are conducted by the Civil Service Commission now.

Mr. OVERMAN. They are.

Mr. BRISTOW. This is an additional appropriation for the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. I understand it now. I did not understand it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 18, after the words "nineteen hundred and fourteen," add a colon and the following:

Provided, That hereafter any deputy collector of internal revenue or deputy marshal who may be required by law or existing regulations to execute a bond to the collector of internal revenue or United States marshal to secure faithful performance of official duty may be appointed by the said collector or marshal, who may require such bond without regard to the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883, and amendments thereto, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance thereof, and the officer requiring said bond shall have power to revoke the appointment of any subordinate officer or employee and appoint his successor at his discretion without regard to the act, amendments, rules, or regulations aforesaid.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I raise a point of order on that amendment. It is substantive legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that it is germane to an appropriation bill for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the civil-service law.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to be heard briefly on that. This is a very material modification of the civil-service law. It does not have to do with appropriations save in the most indirect way. Let us notice this provision:

Any deputy collector of internal revenue or deputy marshal who may be required by law or existing regulations to execute a bond to the collector of internal revenue or United States marshal to secure faithful performance of official duty may be appointed by the said collector or marshal, who may require such bond without regard to the provisions of an act of Congress entitled—

And so forth.

It refers to the appointment and discharge of employees of the Government. It has no proper connection with appropriations.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is a decrease of the appropriation. If the amendment to the amendment is not adopted, then I will ask to restore the estimate asked for by the commission. We have decreased the appropriation for both in this amendment. In other words, if the amendment is adopted they will not need the amount of money estimated; but if the amendment is adopted it decreases the appropriation, and that makes it in order.

Mr. BURTON. How much does it decrease the appropriation?

Mr. OVERMAN. Ten thousand dollars.

Mr. BURTON. How does it decrease it?

Mr. OVERMAN. It decreases it by reducing the amount estimated.

Mr. BURTON. It is arbitrarily cut down.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is cut down because it will not be needed if the amendment to the amendment is adopted.

Mr. BURTON. How is any estimate arrived at by which $10,000 will be saved?

Mr. OVERMAN. There is an estimate of $40,000 to hold these field examinations, including fourth-class postmasters and others. Therefore, if these are taken out of the civil service, there will be $10,000 saved, and the committee decreased the estimate by $10,000, which decrease should stand if the amendment to the amendment is adopted.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, it seems to me this is clearly an attempt to make a very material modification in the civil-service law and in the service of those two branches of the public service—internal revenue and United States marshals. The fact is these examinations for deputy United States marshals and deputy collectors of internal revenue are held at times when there are examinations of other officers who are not removed from civil service.

Ten thousand dollars is a most extravagant estimate of the amount that would be saved; but whether that is so or not, it is not the saving of the $10,000 that this amendment aims at. It is to remove these men from the civil service, where they have been for years past.

The argument in favor of this is that these men—deputy collectors of internal revenue and deputy marshals—have a special and peculiar responsibility to their superiors. But the question arises, To whom are these men responsible—the Government of the United States or their immediate superiors? Which are we to seek, efficiency and competency in the office or subserviency to the United States marshal and the internal-revenue collector?

I regard this as one of the most dangerous attacks upon the merit system which has been attempted for a long while.

We can afford, Mr. President, to take no backward step in maintaining a high standard in these positions. In many of the offices of the collector of internal revenue there are subordinates now acting who were appointed under one or the other administrations of Grover Cleveland, who are presumably Democrats. There is abundant opportunity to remove them if they are incompetent, if they are inharmonious with their superiors; but this amendment proposes at one fell swoop to take them out of the merit system and make them subject to the spoils system.

I desire to enter my emphatic protest against this change under the guise of an amendment that will, it is said, save $10,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the Chair has already ruled on the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not for the Chair to express any opinion as to the advisability or inadvisability of legislation, but it is for the Chair to rule whether an amendment is germane or not. The Chair rules that it is germane, on the statement of the Senator from North Carolina that the reduction in the appropriation makes it necessary to eliminate from examination by the Civil Service Commission the officers named in the proviso. As to the advisability of its adoption the Chair has no right to an opinion and expresses none, but the Chair does rule that the amendment is germane to the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I may be mistaken, but I understood the point of order raised by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] was not whether the amendment was germane, but whether it was legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. BURTON. That is true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a rule of the Senate to the effect—and the Chair has already once ruled upon the question since the present occupant has been here—that the burden rests upon the Chair of determining whether an amendment is germane. Whether it is relevant is a question for the Senate to settle. The Chair does not know the difference between the two words.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I make the point of order not that the amendment is not germane, not that it is not relevant, but that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill and in contravention of the rule of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair states to the Senator from Connecticut that the opinion of the Chair is that the point of order raised by the Senator from Connecticut is identical with the point of order raised by the Senator from Ohio. Rule XVI, paragraph 3, provides:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It appears, I think, that it is mandatory to submit the question of relevancy to the Senate, if it has been raised, but the question of relevancy not being raised, and the other portion of the rule being distinctly differentiated from the question of relevancy, the point of order raised is as to whether general legislation is in order upon an appropriation bill, and on that I would like a ruling of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the ruling has already been made. In the opinion of the Chair this amendment is germane to the pending bill, and is therefore not general legislation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the Chair has just read to the Senate the rule, which states that the question of whether or not an amendment is germane shall be submitted by the Chair to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the Chair did not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And the Chair has also read a rule, a part of which says that general legislation shall not be in order on an appropriation bill. That question of order not now being raised, I claim that it has nothing whatever to do with the question of relevancy or with the question of germaneness, and when the Chair states that he has already ruled upon that question, I respectfully beg leave to differ with the Chair. The Chair has not ruled whether general legislation is in order upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] seemed to argue that this amendment is in order because it diminishes an appropriation. That is a rule of the other House, but while I may be ignorant of it I am not familiar with any rule of the Senate to that effect. The question has been very much discussed in the other House as to what was the scope of the provision that amendments were in order which diminish expenses or appropriations. I take it it is not intended to revolutionize the whole system of legislation. Why, the Senator from North Carolina will realize that we could abolish and repeal the whole civil-service law on the theory that it would save a thousand dollars in the expenses. You could bring in a provision for repeal on an appropriation bill; you could tack onto an appropriation bill a proposition that was of supreme importance.

Mr. OVERMAN. If it would save a million dollars to the country, and Congress decided that it would save a million dollars, could it not in any appropriation bill strike out the million-dollar appropriation and wipe out the system?

Mr. BURTON. No. If it is a matter of merit enough so that it will save a million dollars or accomplish any other important purpose, why not bring it in as you would any other legislation, and let us have a fair chance to discuss it as an independent proposition?

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the ruling of the Chair has already been made.

Mr. BURTON. The ruling of the Chair has already been made. The VICE PRESIDENT. The ruling of the Chair has been made. It is not general legislation, and the amendment is germane.

Mr. BURTON. Most respectfully I appeal from the decision of the Chair, and on that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair on the table.

Mr. PENROSE. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the appeal from the decision of the Chair be laid on the table?

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. That Senator is absent. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. KERN (when his name was called). On account of the absence of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY], with whom I am paired, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when Mr. LODGE's name was called). I desire to state, and to have this statement stand for the day, that my colleague [Mr. LODGE] is absent from the Senate on account of illness. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. GRONNA (when Mr. McCUMBER's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. McCUMBER] is necessarily absent on important business.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

While I am on my feet I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. STONE] is necessarily absent for reasons which I stated yesterday. If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea." In his absence he is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who is absent. Under the terms of that pair I am not at liberty to vote unless my vote be necessary to make a quorum upon a question pending before the Senate. Were I at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES (when the name of Mr. TOWNSEND was called). I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent on official business. I make this announcement for the day. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. TILLMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently a little while ago, and desire to withdraw my vote because I have a pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON], who is absent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have a pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. I therefore withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. LEA. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and vote "yea."

Mr. KERN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WEEKS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is unavoidably absent on account of business.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if there is no quorum voting, I shall exercise my right to vote under my pair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum has voted.

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 15, as follows:

So the motion of Mr. OVERMAN to lay the appeal from the decision of the Chair on the table was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs upon the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, before that amendment is adopted I want to make an observation. I can not understand why the majority in control of this legislation are not willing to leave it to the President of the United States to exempt officers from the civil-service rules. They have the Presidency, and control the executive branch of the Government. The President has the authority under the law to make exemptions from the civil service if he thinks that in the administration of the internal-revenue service such officers ought to be exempted. It is proposed here by legislation—and with due respect to the Senate and the Chair, I think in violation of the rules of this body—to exempt certain employees and mutilate the civil-service law. It is a deliberate attempt to cripple the civil service of the United States for partisan purposes, and for nothing else; it is an effort to get into the Public Treasury for pillage and spoils. This proposition is not in the interest of the public service; it is in the interest of political organizations that want to use public offices to promote political campaigns, and for nothing else. It is an outrage upon the civil service of the United States.

ing else; it is an effort to get into the Public Treasury for pillage and spoils. This proposition is not in the interest of the public service; it is in the interest of political organizations that want to use public offices to promote political campaigns, and for nothing else. It is an outrage upon the civil service of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in relation to this matter, I desire to put in the Record some opinions of Mr. Bonaparte and Mr. Wickersham, former Republican Attorneys General of the United States. There has been a long line of decisions of the Department of Justice to the effect that both deputy marshals and deputy collectors are to be differentiated from all other civil-service employees, and that differentiation has been made. It is said that those officers have no specified term. I desire to publish the opinions of the Attorneys General and ask permission to publish them in the Record.

A collector of internal revenue, I suggest to the Senator from Kansas, who gives to the Government a bond for $500,000 for the performance of his duty, must have certain deputies to carry out the law. The question is, Shall he have the right to appoint those deputies, who by the law are required to give a bond not to the Government but a bond to him? The collector is responsible.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me ask the Senator if a postmaster does not have to depend upon different employees in the postal department to handle the cash for which he is responsible under his bond?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; but he has them right under his eye. When, however, a marshal sends a man to break up a counterfeiting camp he wants a man upon whom he can rely, and not some school-teacher who has passed a civil-service examination.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; that is the argument against the civil-service law.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all. I am as much in favor as is the Senator of the civil-service law as contended for by Pendleton and Blaine and such men; but when men have to go out sometimes and perform dangerous service, such as sheriffs have to perform, I do not think they ought to be under the regulations of the civil service; Mr. Blaine said so, and said that the law should never be carried to that extent. Mr. Pendleton, in his great speech upon the civil service, said it would never be carried to that extent. It is only by rules and regulations and Executive orders that it has been carried to an extent never contemplated or intended by the authors of the bill or by the men who voted for it and advocated it upon the floor of the Senate and of the other House.

Mr. BRISTOW. But the Congress gave the President the authority to extend the civil-service regulations, and Presidents of the United States for 25 years, in the exercise of that authority, have covered thousands of Federal employees into the civil service. Any President can revoke any order of his predecessor; it is open to the President of the United States now to exempt any man from the civil service if, in his judgment, he believes that the Government will be better served by such exemption; but the Congress now do not propose to leave it to the Executive. The majority in this Chamber evidently mistrust or distrust their own Executive, because they fear he will turn over these offices to be preyed upon by political spoilsmen, and, fearing that, they propose to take from him—to take from under his jurisdiction—the authority which he now has under the law, and so it is proposed to turn over to the political spoilsmen the offices.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is just an opinion of the Senator from Kansas. Mr. President, I want to read just the syllabus of this opinion. I am not going to read the whole thing. This is by Mr. Wickersham:

The term of office of deputy collectors of internal revenue expires automatically upon the appointment of a successor to their own collector, and this limitation of tenure is not affected by section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 555).

In order to continue in office after the appointment of a successor to their own collector, deputy collectors must be affirmatively reappointed and recommissioned.

So they are not really in the civil service, according to the opinion of your own Attorney General.

I want to read just one section from another opinion by Mr. Wickersham along this line as to deputy marshals.

Section 3149, in connection with the original common law (2 Ops. Atty. Gen., 410; 3 Comp. Dec., 648), has always been construed both by administrative officers and legal authorities as defining the length of tenure of the deputy collectors. It makes the term of the deputies coincident by definition with the term of the collector by whom they are appointed, with the qualification that they continue in office until the appointment of a successor collector. And this is so notwithstanding the provisions of the civil-service act of 1883 (22 Stat., 403).

Going on to name the authorities:

The two opinions of Judge Jackson, Piddle v. Thompson (82 Fed., 186) and Butler v. White (83 Fed., 578), which are contrary to these cases on some points, are not contrary on this main question concerning the duration of the term of office. They deal chiefly with the power of removal.

In view of these authorities and of the uninterrupted administrative practice, it must be considered as settled that, even since the civil-service act, the term of office of these deputy collectors expires automatically upon the appointment of a successor to their own collector.

I want the whole opinion put in the RECORD, Mr. President, so that anybody can see what it means and what has been decided by the department itself. I ask permission to print both of these opinions in full.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DEPUTY COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE—TENURE OF OFFICE.

The term of office of deputy collectors of internal revenue expires automatically upon the appointment of a successor to their own collector, and this limitation of tenure is not affected by section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 555).

In order to continue in office after the appointment of a successor to their own collector, deputy collectors must be affirmatively reappointed and recommissioned.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
January 3, 1913.

SIR: I have the honor to reply to your note of November 6, 1912, requesting my opinion on the question stated in a letter dated November 6, 1912, addressed to you by the United States Civil Service Commission. This question is as follows:

"What is the effect of the provision of section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 555), upon the provision of section 3149, Revised Statutes, as interpreted by the Attorney General in the matter of the termination or vacation of the office of deputy collector of internal revenue?"

Section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912, reads, so far as is now material, as follows:

"That no person in the classified civil service of the United States shall be removed therefrom except for such cause as will promote the efficiency of said service and for reasons given in writing, and the person whose removal is sought shall have notice of the same and of any charges preferred against him, and be furnished with a copy thereof, and also be allowed a reasonable time for personally answering the same in writing; and affidavits in support thereof; but no examination of witnesses nor any trial or hearing shall be required except in the discretion of the officer making the removal; and copies of charges, notice of hearing, answer, reasons for removal, and of the order of removal shall be made a part of the records of the proper department or office, as shall also the reasons for reduction in rank or compensation; and copies of the same shall be furnished to the person affected upon request, and the Civil Service Commission also shall, upon request, be furnished copies of the same."

Section 3149, Revised Statutes, as amended, reads, so far as is material, as follows:

"In case of a vacancy occurring in the office of collector, the deputies of such collector shall continue to act until his successor is appointed."

I am of opinion that the said section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (the postal appropriation act), does not prevent the vacation of the offices of the deputy collectors, as implied by the said section 3149, Revised Statutes.

Section 3149, in connection with the original common law (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 410; 3 Comp. Dec., 648), has always been construed both by administrative officers and legal authorities as defining the length of tenure of the deputy collectors. It makes the term of the deputies coincident by definition with the term of the collector by whom they are appointed, with the qualification that they continue in office until the appointment of a successor collector. And this is so notwithstanding the provisions of the civil-service act of 1883 (22 Stat., 403; 2 Comp. Dec., 648, 653; 26 Op., 363; 17 Comp. Dec., 362; Taylor v. Bercheval, 82 Fed., 497; Dudley v. James, 83 Fed., 345; Carr v. Gordon, 82 Fed., 373; Fleming v. Stahl, 83 Fed., 940). The two opinions of Judge Jackson (Priddle v. Thompson, 82 Fed., 186, and Butler v. White, 83 Fed., 578) which are contrary to these cases on some points are not contrary on this main question concerning the duration of the term of office. They deal chiefly with the power of removal.

In view of these authorities and of the uninterrupted administrative practice, it must be considered as settled that, even since the civil-service act, the term of office of these deputy collectors expires automatically upon the appointment of a successor to their own collector. In order to continue in office after that time they must be affirmatively reappointed and recommissioned.

This being so, it is apparent that the provision in section 6 of the postal appropriation act of 1912 does not affect the situation, for that act deals only with "removals," which are, of course, quite distinct from automatic terminations by law of terms of office. (Parsons v. United States, 167 U. S., 324, 342.) The distinction is clearly brought out by Revised Statutes, section 3148, which deals with the removal of the deputies in advance of the expiration of their terms referred to by Revised Statutes, section 3149.

I am of opinion, therefore, as above stated, that section 6 of the post-office appropriation act of August 24, 1912, does not repeal the existing limitation upon the tenure of these deputy collectors.

Respectfully,

GEORGE W. WICKERSHAM.

The PRESIDENT.

(T. D. 1827.)

TERMINATION OR VACATION OF OFFICE OF DEPUTY COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE—OPINION OF ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Status of deputy collectors of internal revenue not affected by section 6 of "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes."

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1913.

The appended opinion of the honorable Attorney General is published for the information of internal-revenue officers and others concerned.

ROYAL E. CABELL, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, January 3, 1913.

SIR: I have the honor to reply to your note of November 6, 1912, requesting my opinion on the question stated in a letter dated November 6, 1912, addressed to you by the United States Civil Service Commission.

This question is as follows:

"What is the effect of the provision of section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 555), upon the provision of section 3149, Revised Statutes, as interpreted by the Attorney General in the matter of the termination or vacation of the office of deputy collector of internal revenue?"

Section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912, reads, so far as is now material, as follows:

"That no person in the classified civil service of the United States shall be removed therefrom except for such cause as will promote the efficiency of said service and for reasons given in writing, and the person whose removal is sought shall have notice of the same and of any charges preferred against him, and be furnished with a copy thereof, and also be allowed a reasonable time for personally answering the same in writing; and affidavits in support thereof; but no examination of witnesses nor any trial or hearing shall be required except in the discretion of the officer making the removal; and copies of charges, notice of hearing, answer, reasons for removal, and of the order of removal shall be made a part of the records of the proper department or office, as shall also the reasons for reduction in rank or compensation; and copies of the same shall be furnished to the person affected upon request, and the Civil Service Commission also shall, upon request, be furnished copies of the same."

Section 3149, Revised Statutes, as amended reads, so far as is material, as follows:

"In case of a vacancy occurring in the office of collector, the deputies of such collector shall continue to act until his successor is appointed."

I am of opinion that the said section 6 of the act of August 24, 1912 (the postal appropriation act), does not prevent the vacation of the offices of the deputy collectors, as implied by the said section 3149, Revised Statutes.

Section 3149, in connection with the original common law (2 Op. Atty. Gen., 410; 3 Comp. Dec., 648), has always been construed both by administrative officers and legal authorities as defining the length of tenure of the deputy collectors. It makes the term of the deputies coincident by definition with the term of the collector by whom they are appointed, with the qualification that they continue in office until the appointment of a successor collector. And this is so notwithstanding the provisions of the civil-service act of 1883 (22 Stat., 403; 26 Op., 363; 17 Comp. Dec., 362; Taylor v. Bercheval, 82 Fed., 497; Dudley v. James, 83 Fed., 345; Carr v. Gordon, 82 Fed., 373; Fleming v. Stahl, 83 Fed., 940). The two opinions of Judge Jackson (Priddle v. Thompson, 82 Fed., 186, and Butler v. White, 83 Fed., 578), which are contrary to these cases on some points, are not contrary on this main question concerning the duration of the term of office. They deal chiefly with the power of removal.

In view of these authorities and of the uninterrupted administrative practice, it must be considered as settled that, even since the civil-service act, the term of office of these deputy collectors expires automatically upon the appointment of a successor to their own collector. In order to continue in office after that time they must be affirmatively reappointed and recommissioned.

This being so, it is apparent that the provision in section 6 of the postal appropriation act of 1912 does not affect the situation, for that act deals only with "removals," which are, of course, quite distinct from automatic terminations by law of terms of office. Parsons v. United States (167 U. S., 324, p. 342). The distinction is clearly brought out by Revised Statutes, section 3148, which deals with the removal of the deputies in advance of the expiration of their terms referred to by Revised Statutes, section 3149.

I am of opinion, therefore, as above stated, that section 6 of the Post Office appropriation act of August 24, 1912, does not repeal the existing limitation upon the tenure of these deputy collectors.

Respectfully,

GEORGE W. WICKERSHAM,
Attorney General.

The PRESIDENT.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question. When you found things coming your way, why did you limit your bounty to such deputies as are required to give bond? Why did you not include all deputies?

There is no reason why those who are not required to execute a bond should be omitted. My judgment is that all of the deputies who serve under a principal and who are to come in with him, should be upon an equal footing.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think all the deputy collectors do give bond.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Deputy marshals do not, in a great many cases.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should be in favor of that.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question. If it could be shown that by dispensing with examinations or otherwise money could be saved, would it not be possible to repeal every section of the civil-service law in this manner?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think Congress might do it if it wanted to do it.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the Senator think it could be done in an appropriation bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think if we wanted to strike out a million-dollar appropriation, if Congress desired to do so, and thereby practically repeal the law, we could do it.

Mr. WEEKS. Let me ask the Senator one more question, and that is if he does not think it is bad policy to repeal or enact great pieces of legislation in an appropriation bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. We do not undertake to repeal the civil-service law in any way. Certain deputies, deputy marshals, and deputy collectors were put under the civil service by an Executive order. That did not repeal the law in any way. The law is still upon the books. There is no line, there is no letter, there is no comma, there is nothing that is repealed or stricken out of the law.

Mr. WEEKS. I will say to the Senator that there is a decided suspicion that, step by step, the party now in power is going to modify or repeal the civil-service law.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all; I deny that, Mr. President. I do not propose to go into a discussion of that subject, but I do not think anybody has any idea of doing that. I think the Senator will agree with me, however, that a deputy collector who gives a bond to the Government for the faithful performance of his duty ought to have a right to select his own deputies.

Mr. WEEKS. There may be no ground for the suspicion which exists, but I will call the Senator's attention to the fact that ministers to foreign courts, who have been selected as such because of their service as secretaries, who have been selected because it was generally understood, though not perhaps part of the law, that they would be retained in the service, have been replaced with others who belong to the dominant party, and that policy, which many believe was an excellent one, in connection with our foreign service, has been entirely destroyed by this administration. That is one of the reasons why the suspicion prevails that this administration proposes to repeal, step by step, every paragraph of the civil-service law.

Mr. JAMES. Let us have a vote, Mr. President.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have no doubt but that the Senator from North Carolina means what he says when he says that he is opposed to repealing the civil-service law. There can be no doubt, however, but that the particular proposition now before the Senate takes out of the civil service quite a large number of employees and makes them subject to appointment under the old spoils system. So, to that extent at least, this amendment will take out from under the civil-service law all the deputy marshals and all the deputy United States collectors that we have in the country.

I think that is a fair statement of the effect of the amendment. If that is not right, I should like to be corrected by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is correct about that as to all deputy collectors who give bonds.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that includes all of them; does it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether it does or not. I think that is not the case as to all of them. As the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] says, there are many who do not give bonds.

Mr. NORRIS. The argument the Senator from North Carolina makes, that these men are under the control of a collector and give bond to the collector, and that they ought to be subject to removal and appointment by him, is an argument which, to a greater or a less degree, will apply to practically all the employees in the United States who are under the civil service. In every post office in the United States where the employees, clerks, or deputy postmasters are under civil service they are under the control of the postmaster, who is, if it is a presidential office, a political appointee. There might arise cases, and there do arise cases, where that very question is raised, and has been raised on the floor of Congress in the payment of defalcations that have been made by such employees when the principal was not to blame. But the law provides that every one of these appointees may be removed if he disregards the proper instructions of his superior officer, or in any other way violates the law, or fails in the performance of his duty.

A postmaster, especially in a large city, can not personally supervise the various employees in his office, and it is the same in every other department of government. For all practical purposes he is just as far removed from him, as far as his official duty is concerned, as a collector is removed from a deputy collector when he is a thousand miles away.

What will be the effect of this amendment? It places upon the political partisan pie counter every office of deputy in the Internal Revenue Department and every office of deputy marshal in the Department of Justice. Does the Senator think that because these offices are taken out from the operation of the civil-service law we are going to get better deputies?

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, certainly; I am sure of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us see whether we will or not. I do not believe we will get as good deputies.

The collector of internal revenue in each district, being himself a subject of political appointment, will appoint the men recommended by the men who made him. That will be true in the other department as to the deputy marshals. The marshals are themselves political appointees, and in appointing their subordinates they will act upon partisan political representations. So the amendment puts all of these officers, every one of them, as much on the political bargain counter as though you removed all of the civil-service law as it pertains to the Post Office Department, for instance.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. KERN. I wish to inquire if the Senator from Nebraska knows how many of the gentlemen who will be affected by this amendment were appointed as a reward for their services to the Republican Party?

Mr. NORRIS. I can not give the answer, but I presume there are quite a good many.

Mr. KERN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. There are also quite a good many who were appointed as a reward for their services to the Democratic Party.

Mr. KERN. When these men who were appointed as a reward for their services to the Republican Party were by Executive order still further rewarded for their services to the Republican Party by being given life positions without regard to their merit, was there any protest on the part of the Senator or any of the civil-service reformers of the country?

Mr. NORRIS. Not that I know of; but that is true of every order that has ever been made in the extension of the civil service, both by Democratic Presidents and by Republican Presidents.

I think the Senator reaches a point that is a debatable proposition. I admit that there is some merit in it. I am not myself in favor of putting men under the civil service without providing for an examination. I would stand with the Senator on that proposition. I am not speaking for any appointees who are connected in any way with any political organization with which I have had anything to do.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. NORRIS. In just a moment I will yield to the Senator.

These different departments come under the civil service, as long as the President makes these orders, by degrees. When he covers into the civil service a large number of employees, the probability is that the most of those he covers in are members of his own political party.

It may be said that the President is moved by improper motives when he makes that kind of an order. I do not claim that. It may be that some of these orders have been made in that way. But I believe that President Cleveland and President Roosevelt and even President Taft, who never had any use for me, were moved by patriotic motives in more instances than they were moved by any other.

The fact that the President puts all of these political appointees into these positions is, in a way, objectionable, and I concede that point in every order that has ever been made. But in some way, if we are ever going to get men in the civil service, we must have a beginning. If it is wrong that they should be put in without an examination, then we ought to provide by law that an examination should be held.

I had a great deal of sympathy with the order of President Wilson when he set aside the order made by President Taft in regard to the fourth-class postmasters and decided that they should be examined before they were entitled to permanent life tenure.

I yield now to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator think that a civil-service examination would be a proper test for a United States Senator?

Mr. NORRIS. I would not deny that we might have an improvement in some cases, probably, if we had men selected in that way.

Mr. REED. That might be true.

Mr. NORRIS. But I will say to the Senator, in all seriousness, that I do not suppose that would be practical.

Mr. REED. That may be true; and the Senator might or might not have qualified.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I probably would have failed. I am willing to admit that, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. REED. I am not prepared to say. I think the Senator would have qualified. The reason I asked the question was to point to the fact that there are certain offices and certain positions for which no civil-service examination can furnish any test.

Mr. NORRIS. I will concede that.

Mr. REED. Just what kind of a civil-service examination would the Senator prescribe for a man who was called upon to go out into the mountain regions, let us say, of Arkansas or North Georgia, and run down an illicit still? Just what kind of examination would you have in arithmetic or geometry or trigonometry? The truth is that what you need is a man of courage and cunning and one who can shoot straight.

Mr. NORRIS. If that is what the Senator wants, he can very easily get it in an examination by furnishing them cartridges and a good revolver and seeing what they can do.

Mr. REED. When you had examined him in regard to his shooting you would not know whether he had the necessary nerve to follow up a man who was shooting at him.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator, I presume, could provide some means by which to test his nerve.

Mr. REED. Just what test would the Senator provide as to a man's nerve, for instance?

Mr. NORRIS. I would come very much nearer providing a test for a man's nerve than to decide it on this basis: "Did you support Mr. John Doe for Congressman? If you are appointed, will you always vote the Democratic ticket straight? Will you go out into the country here, if it is a Republican administration, and go all over this congressional district, and see that you turn up all the votes you can for the Republican candidate; or, if it is in a Democratic administration, that you will help the Democratic Party?" Is that a test of a man's nerve, or his marksmanship, or his arithmetic?

Mr. REED. No.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the kind of test we are going to have if we adopt this amendment.

Mr. REED. The Senator now proceeds to set up arbitrarily a test of his own.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. REED. If the Senator himself were called upon to make a recommendation for a United States marshal in his district, would he recommend a man for the base and ignoble reasons he has just described?

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator—

Mr. REED. Would you do it?

Mr. NORRIS. I am going to answer the Senator, and I think the Senator ought to permit me to answer in my own way. I have the floor.

Mr. REED. Certainly; I could not be other than courteous to my friend.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not claim to be in any way superior to the balance of humanity. The Senator himself and myself, if we were going to name the deputy United States marshal in our respective districts, would see that first of all he must be somebody who is loyal to us and to our party, if we were party men. I concede that the Senator would try to get a man whom he thought to be all right. He would not know him, though he would have recommendations come in from various men all over his State or his district, and they would state that this man ought to be appointed. The principal argument they would make every time would be, if it was the Senator's case, that he has always been loyal to the Democratic Party.

Mr. REED. The Senator is mistaken. We have a higher class of politics in Missouri than they have in Nebraska if that is the theory they act on there.

Mr. NORRIS. They have acted on that theory in Missouri, and they have acted on that theory in every State of the Union, and every one who has had any acquaintance with politics knows it.

Mr. REED. Let me tell the Senator what I would do and what would be done, I think, by most of the Senators here if they came to them for recommendations. They would undoubtedly in almost every instance find a man from their own party. That much would I grant freely. But in the Republican Party or in the Democratic Party there are always plenty of men abundantly qualified to fill any position. Whenever we get a position in this country that can not be filled by some Republican or by some Democrat we had better abolish it, because that particular Republican or Democrat might die, and we would be in a desperate situation.

But, having settled that one question, I would think, under my oath of office and my duty as a man, and so would the Senator from Nebraska think, that it was my duty to recommend a man fully and abundantly qualified for the position. I would find some man in my State for deputy marshal who had the nerve and had shown the nerve in the actual tests of life, who had intelligence and had demonstrated that intelligence, who had the honesty and had proven it to his neighbors and friends, and I would give that man my recommendation. But your system would permit an anemic schoolmaster, who would not know how to make an arrest or have the nerve to make one, to be promoted over a man of iron nerve, of superb courage, and of splendid intelligence and capacity. You have filled many departments of the Government with absolutely inefficient men, who could not obtain a job and hold it in any responsible place in this country.

Mr. NORRIS. The argument the Senator has just made, if carried out to its logical conclusion, will wipe off from the statute books every law that we have in regard to civil service.

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President, I want to correct the Senator. There are a great number of positions that are purely mechanical in their nature—that is, in this sense. There are certain fixed duties to perform, and when they are performed with intelligence that is all that is necessary. But then there is another large field requiring discretion, the exercise of independent judgment, and that calls into play qualities of heart and of mind that can never be demonstrated by a schoolmaster's examination.

In that great latter class are Members of the House and Senators, and Presidents preeminently. Beneath them are men who must exercise a wide discretion, when you come to those classes, and great discretion must be exercised. We recognize it. The Cabinet officers are not picked by civil-service examinations. Ministers to foreign countries are not picked by civil-service examinations. The marshals themselves are not picked by civil-service examinations. The postmasters in important cities are not picked by civil-service examinations, because their positions are not merely clerical, they are not merely routine. They call into play the native qualities of the man, and there is only one examination which can ever be held to determine that, and that is in the great school of examination known as the world, where in public life and in every-day conduct you must demonstrate your ability in a competitive examination with your fellows, where genius wins supremacy and where the inefficient go down. So this class of office we are now discussing involves discretion, involves those native qualities; it is not routine work, it requires skill of the highest character.

What man would propose to make a chief of the detective service of a great city a man selected by a civil-service examination upon questions written by a man who could not catch a thief if he was surrounded by a hundred pickpockets? Who is there would make chief of police of New York City a man selected by a civil-service examination and expect any real results? What man is there would have the general of an army selected by a civil-service examination on questions written out by a board of civilians who could not correctly give the order, Shoulder arms? It is because you carry this system to an absurdity and go beyond its legitimate bounds that men properly protest.

Now, when you come to a letter carrier, it is all right. When you come to an ordinary clerk, it is all right. When you come to those things where discretion is not necessary, where the native natural abilities of man are not necessarily called in question, then civil service is proper.

But I appeal to the Senator, who has always been a fair man here and elsewhere, if there is not a great reason why a man who is put in the responsible position of running down criminals, of detecting violators of the law, of bringing them to justice, should be put in a class where the head of the office has the right to pick from the body of the people of his State and find men who are qualified.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I repeat that, in my judgment, the Senator's argument would obliterate the civil service. No one has claimed that the civil-service system ought to cover the Presidency of the United States or the general of the Army. Yet there is not a man or a woman in this country to-day in the civil service but what in his or her official capacity must exercise in a great many instances some discretion. Here are the two systems: One is that a man shall be picked for these important places without regard to his political affiliations; the other is that he shall be picked principally on account of his political affiliations.

The Civil Service Commission can make more of an examination than the Senator from Missouri can. They have time to devote to it. They can provide tests for a man's courage the same as the Senator from Missouri would provide tests for a man's courage if he were going to appoint a man to a deputyship. He would have to make some inquiry and some investigation, the only difference being that when he or any other Member of the Senate investigates he is moved by partisan considerations rather than by the good of the service. The theory, at least, of the law is that the Civil Service Commission shall not be moved by anything that is in any way partisan and shall be controlled entirely on account of and by the general fitness of the applicant for the position.

If the Senator or I or any other man were going to appoint a deputy marshal and follow the course the Senator has outlined—a very good one, I concede—it would take all the time that he has got here to look for the pieces of political pie. He would not have the time to devote his energies and abilities to the work of the Senate here, where he is so much needed.

Mr. REED. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator will be brief in his interruption.

Mr. REED. I apologize for having so long trespassed before; but I can count upon my fingers now the names of 50 men in my State whom I personally know who have been sheriffs and deputy sheriffs or chiefs of police, all of whom are qualified for the position of deputy marshal; and I can count on my fingers men who have been collectors of counties, men who have been auditors of cities, men of the highest qualifications, who could fill these positions. It would not take me much time to fill the 8 or 10 offices that would come to my State.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator may be better than the balance of the men in public life—

Mr. REED. No; I am not.

Mr. NORRIS. In this particular respect.

Mr. REED. I just claim—

Mr. NORRIS. But I want to say before the Senator would appoint those men he knows he would probably say to Mr. John Smith, "I know you; you are eminently fitted; you have got the nerve and can shoot straight; you are honest and reliable, and you are a Democrat. I am willing to name you deputy, but before I appoint you to that office I should like to have the indorsement of the Democratic county central committee. I should like to have this man and that man behind you."

Mr. REED. I never asked that in my life.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator would not do that, but I want to say that in the past and at the present time for all appointments that are made by Senators and Members of the House those are the things that are done. A man can not get an appointment, as a rule, unless he gets that kind of an indorsement. There are some exceptions. I presume the service would be better if there were more of them, but everybody here knows the method that is pursued. Go to the Post Office Department and look over the recommendations for postmasters. We find there the reasons that are given why a certain man should be appointed. Then take the man who makes the recommendation, the Congressman or the Senator. See what he says, as I have often seen, and as you can see any day: "I know this man; he would be my choice, he would make a good man, and all that, but I could not appoint him. Great heavens! this other fellow had all the indorsements of the campaign committees of my party from the State committee down to the precinct committeeman. I could not turn him down. I had to appoint him." That is the spoils system and that is what you will have in the appointment of all the deputy United States marshals and all the deputy internal-revenue collectors if this amendment is adopted.

Now, it is just up to the two systems. Are you going to allow these men to be appointed along political lines or are you going to say to a nonpartisan board, the Civil Service Commission, "You shall make this appointment. You can investigate as to a man's ability. You have got more time than we have; that is your business. You can formulate a set of questions. You can make an investigation through the agent that you send out into the field. You can consider this from a nonpartisan standpoint, from the good-of-the-service point only"; or will we turn it over to the politicians of the country? That is the difference between the two systems. There is no other difference in it as I see it. You are going to come to one or to the other.

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in just a moment.

The Senator says he knows a great many men who would make good deputy marshals. I presume that is true of every man. Yet when he comes into office and finds one of those men in office—a deputy marshal whom he knows to have the nerve, to be honest, to be efficient, and can shoot straight and work a sum in arithmetic, if he wants it that way; who has all the qualifications and has the experience; who knows, in a general way, all about the territory that he covers; who knows something about crooks; who knows where to look for them; who knows where the dangerous points are—when the Senator comes in the office and that is the kind of man in office, and he finds that he is a Republican, that man has got to go, notwithstanding all his efficiency. Then the Senator will do his best to get another man just as good. It may be that he will succeed. The probabilities are he will fail. The Senator would fill his place, but the appointee would have to be a Democrat, and he would be untried and inexperienced. The other man would have to go. The service would be crippled. The political machine would be a little better off. I refer to the Senator from Missouri not because he is an exception to humanity, but on the theory that he is about like the rest of us.

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President; the Senator is mistaken. That man would have to go—that far he is correct—and he would have to go for a reason that is higher and greater than the matter of his experience. He would have to go because no general can fight a battle with a lot of soldiers back of him who want to see him destroyed, because no man can run an office and run it right unless he is not only the boss of that office but has the loyal support of the men who are under him. No man can properly fill the office of marshal of a great district unless he has men working with him who are responsive to his will and who will go to all reasonable lengths to carry out his policy. No man can properly detect criminals who can not make a confidant of the men he sends out after the criminals. When you put a man in an important position and surround him with a lot of political enemies who are seeking the first opportunity to strike him down and destroy him, you put that man in a position where neither he nor his office can bring efficient service to the public. That is the reason why I advocate this and the reason why I would make the change.

Now, the Senator has spoken about politicians, and I hear the word "politician" constantly, particularly upon the lips of those who claim to be somewhat of reformers. We are told there are wicked political machines, wicked politicians, and constantly there is held before our mind the vision of an awful thing known as a politician. Every man in the Senate of the United States is here because he is a politician. If there is a man here who is not a politician, he has no business to be here. This is what I mean by that statement: Our Government is based upon the idea of the rule of the people. Any man who is here and is not here by virtue of the will of the people is wrongfully here, and if a man is here by virtue of the will of the people it is because he appealed to the people; and the minute you appeal to the people for a political position you are in the high and proper sense of the term a politician, for you have sought the popular favor. That is not all. There is not a man in this Chamber, no, not even excepting my exceptional friend, the Senator from Nebraska, who has not called upon political organizations for support when he waged the battle which he did wage in behalf of decent government and offered himself as the candidate. If the regular political organization was not with him, he created one for himself; he had his committees in counties; he had his representatives in precincts; he kept in touch with them; he organized the voters; he massed his forces; he marched them to the polls; and he employed political machinery from the day he made his announcement until he was triumphantly returned to this body. That has been true of every other man here, and it is right that it should be true. If we are to have government by the people, then the more we are compelled to appeal to the people or the more the people are consulted the more the people rule.

Mr. President, I go a step further. If in that great political battle which the Senator from Nebraska waged so valiantly, when his white banner was floating at the head of the legions of reform, when his clarion voice was summoning the cohorts of virtue from all parts of his great State, there were other officers beneath him. He had his colonels, his captains, his lieutenants, his sergeants, his corporals, and his privates, all gallant sons of Nebraska, walking forward in the magnificent crusade for virtue and all goodness. When the fight was over the Senator thought that it was in the interest of reform that he should take all the spoils and the rest of the men who fought with him should be denounced as mere politicians and excluded from any of the rewards.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield there?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator in relation to his description of my campaign that from the very beginning to the end of it I stood for the very propositions for which I am standing now, and I said so.

Mr. REED. I am not claiming that the Senator changed front, for the Senator never changes front.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator rather indicates there was not any man who supported me who when he did so had any idea that I was going to change front and be in favor of turning over the civil-service employees to the spoils of office.

Mr. REED. Now, honestly, Senator, if one of your good cohorts came up and said: "Senator, now, of course, I am not asking you to make any pledge; I would not do that; but you know I am putting in a good deal of time in this campaign, and will you not consider me on my merits after it is over?" you did not tell that man "I am going to insist on excluding you," did you?

Mr. NORRIS. No; and there was not any such man who came to me.

Mr. REED. He may not have been in Nebraska, but, if so, then your soil fails to produce one article which springs up from the soil of every other land beneath the sun.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, the Senator from Missouri would be surprised if he would start out on the proposition that he was opposed to building up political machines and turning over all the appointees to politicians—I speak that word in a perfectly respectful sense, but I will say “officials,” if he wants to put it that way—if he would start out with that kind of a theory he would be surprised to discover that there are more people in the country who are opposed to this political machinery than there are who are in favor of it. There are more people in the country who either support or fight men from a purely patriotic desire of good government than there are men who support candidates because they want to get something for themselves.

Mr. REED. I know that. That is true in every community. Neither can the Senator from Nebraska go further than I will go in denouncing a political machine, if you mean by a political machine an organization that is brought together for corrupt purposes. If you mean by a politician a man who does not seek the public favor, but who organizes for the purpose of plundering the Public Treasury, I will go as far as the Senator in denouncing that; and that is what the Senator denounced on the plains and in the beautiful cities of his splendid State. He did not say that he was opposed to anybody except himself having office.

Who are those whom the Senator calls “politicians”? Is it the man who does not possess his splendid ability, whose voice can not in persuasive and melting tones induce the voter to cast his ballot for him? Is it the man who has not been to school so long as the Senator may have had the good fortune to go? Is it the man who takes an active interest in affairs, who from patriotic motives is constantly found ready to perform his duty? Surely none of these. The man the Senator has in mind is the scoundrel who seeks to plunder the public and to render poor service for large pay. Of that kind of man we all have the same opinion; but I protest that because a man has been active from patriotic motives he should not be excluded from consideration.

I want, however, to get back to the main question. What is it? I will suppose a case: That the Senator from Nebraska is not possessed of his great ability; that he is simply a man of good, ordinary capacity. We will say he is appointed United States marshal for the great State of Nebraska. There may be some moonshiners in his State; there may be some white slavers operating through his State; there may be counterfeiters in his State, or that come into his State to pass their counterfeit coin; there may be a thousand other classes of criminals who are violating in some way the laws of that State. He is sworn in as an officer, and he gives a heavy bond for the faithful discharge of his office; he becomes responsible for all that takes place therein. I put it to the Senator whether he ought not to be allowed to pick the 8 or 10 men who are to serve with him; whether he can not render a better service to the public, whether you have not fully met all the requirements of the civil service in its proper sense when you have made him give his bond and made him responsible for the men under him?

Mr. NORRIS. Now, I should like to ask the Senator—

Mr. REED. I want to ask further, would he feel safe with a lot of men whom he not only did not know but who would be glad to see him trip and fall, and who would be glad to secretly place an obstacle in his path?

Mr. NORRIS. Now, if the Senator from Missouri will permit me, he is describing a condition that will not be remedied by the method that he proposes.

Mr. REED. But I think it will.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, I beg the Senator's pardon. The man at the head will not appoint these subordinates, except as a matter of form. In reality these deputies will be appointed by some one who has had the political influence to make him.

Mr. REED. By whom?

Mr. NORRIS. Well, it may be the chairman of a county committee; it may be the chairman of a State committee, and a large number—

Mr. REED. They will be appointed either by the marshal himself or they will be appointed upon the recommendation of the United States Senator who recommends the marshal.

Mr. NORRIS. Probably.

Mr. REED. When the Senator states that improper men will be recommended he, in effect, states that he as a Senator—for he will not claim to be better than the rest of us—would recommend improper men for these responsible positions.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; I do not claim that. The Senator from Missouri must not put me in that attitude; I am not claiming anything of that kind; but all of us would be influenced by the recommendations and petitions of men whom we knew in politics. We ourselves would not and could not know and could not take the time from our official duties to investigate and pass upon all these cases and have personal knowledge of them; it would be a physical impossibility to do so.

Mr. REED. I can only say, in reply to that, that as to the 8 or 10 deputies who will be appointed in my State, as I said a while ago, if I were called upon to make a recommendation I not only know the 8 or 10 men necessary, but 50 men who are qualified, and I would not be going by the recommendation of county committees or State committees. But again I ask when it was—

Mr. NORRIS. Would the Senator appoint them of his own knowledge or would he invite recommendations?

Mr. REED. On my own knowledge; but of course I would consult people who knew.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator did that he would be doing something different from what is ordinarily done.

Mr. REED. And that is not all. When did it happen that the county committee of a great agricultural State like yours, composed, as it is, of the leading spirits of your own party—representative farmers, merchants, and mechanics of your State—sank to so low a point that they could be recognized only during the campaign, when they were helping you, and ceased to be safe counselors after the fight was over? I do not make that personal; I mean to use you as illustrative of all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The “ayes” have it, and the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I think we ought to have a roll call on that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska calls for the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Chair having announced that the amendment had been adopted, I hope the Senator will not insist on a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the request of the Senator from Nebraska seconded by one-fifth of the Senators present? [A pause.] The demand is not seconded by one-fifth of the Senators present. The amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Did the Chair announce that the amendment had been adopted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Myers	Simmons
Bacon	Hollis	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Hughes	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Jackson	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Brandeggee	James	Penrose	Swanson
Bristow	Johnson	Perkins	Thomas
Bryan	Jones	Pittman	Thompson
Burton	Kern	Poindexter	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lane	Pomerene	Tillman
Chilton	Lea	Ransdell	Vardaman
Clarke, Ark.	Lewis	Reed	Walsh
Fletcher	McLean	Shafroth	Weeks
Gore	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Williams
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Shields

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to inquire the status of the amendment which was being debated a moment ago. I understood that a request was made for the yeas and nays and that at that time a point of no quorum was made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; that is not correct. The request was made for the yeas and nays. The Chair inquired whether it was seconded by one-fifth of the Members present. It was not seconded by one-fifth of the Members present. The Chair then declared the amendment carried. Thereupon the point of no quorum was made. So the amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My further inquiry is, When the point of no quorum was made whether or not the matter at that time before the Senate was disposed of until the presence of a quorum was ascertained?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It had already been disposed of. The Chair has no desire to prevent a roll call. The Chair will say, for the information of the Senator from Washington, that there not having been any roll call upon the adoption of this amendment, the Senator from Washington can raise the question by a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, I will suggest to him that the bill is now being considered in Committee of the Whole. It will be possible to make the application for a roll call, I think, when the bill gets into the Senate. There were not enough Members here to get a roll call; at least, I will say to the Senator from Washington, there were not enough seconding the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has stated the record correctly, has he not?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I will say that the Chair has stated the record correctly, as I understand.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very much obliged for the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, but it is possible that I shall not be present at the time the matter is reached in the Senate. The same question is presented now. All that I desire is an opportunity at least to make an application for a roll call, and if possible to secure one; and I prefer to make it now.

For that purpose I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted. And upon that motion, if I may be permitted, I should like to say a few words.

I do not think the question is so much that which has been debated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], about the kind of examinations that are given under the civil-service law for appointments. I am in entire agreement with him as to the proposition that many of those examinations are not appropriate for the ascertainment of fitness for the particular office that is to be filled. Sometimes the questions asked are absurd. But that does not touch the important proposition at issue. Those examinations can be changed and some other test for appointment can be adopted.

The question is as to whether or not these offices are going to be turned over to what is called the spoils system. I do not care whether it is the spoils of one party or the spoils of another party. The question is whether or not every time there is a change of party all the men that fill these offices, however well qualified, however experienced, however faithful, however loyal they may have been to the Government, are to be turned out, and other men put in their places who are inexperienced and untried, simply because they belong to the political party that has carried the election.

The Senator from Missouri has said a great deal about the difficulty through any civil-service system of getting men with nerve, brave men, to be deputy marshals, to go out and arrest criminals, to run down moonshine whisky distilleries, and so forth. If I am correctly informed, the entire Secret Service of the Government is on some sort of a civil-service basis. At least, as I understand, it is not under the system which it is proposed to establish by this amendment. The best work that is done by men who have to have judgment and nerve in a line of work similar to that of deputy marshals is done under the Secret Service of the Government. There is some means found for testing the qualifications of applicants for those offices, and it seems to be satisfactory. I do not know that anybody is contending that those offices ought to be turned over as the spoils of political victory.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. REED. Is the Senator now ready to make a wholesale indorsement of the Secret Service of this Government, as it has been conducted?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not ready to make a wholesale indorsement of everything that the Secret Service has done, but I am ready to make a wholesale indorsement of the manner in which the men are appointed to those places.

Mr. REED. How are they appointed?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They are appointed by certain tests which the Chief of the Secret Service applies as to the fitness of the men for office, and when they are in office they are kept in office.

Mr. REED. That puts it up to the Chief of the Secret Service to pick them, does it not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It puts it up to him to apply the test.

Mr. REED. That is all this bill proposes to do—to allow a marshal to make his own tests and his own selections.

While I am on the matter, unless the Senator really means to indorse the methods of the Secret Service Department of this Government, I hope he will not do so by making his statement so broad that it may be misunderstood; for I think if there is any department of the Government that needs a thorough renovation it is that particular department.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No doubt the Secret Service has been guilty of doing things that it ought not to have done. On the other hand, it has done a great deal of good work. If a method could be devised of appointing deputy marshals, such as the Senator says he is willing to agree to or which he says is the same method, so that they would be retained in office when they are competent and when they are faithful and not turned out of office for no fault of their own simply because there is a change of administration, I would agree with the Senator about it. That is really the question that is involved here.

I am perfectly willing to agree to any reasonable test for appointment if we can avoid the spoils system. I do not want it. Even if I had the power to name these men in my State or district, it would not do me any good politically, and it would not do the Senator from Missouri any good politically. It does not do any political party any good, and it does the country a great deal of harm.

I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the request for the yeas and nays seconded?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words on this question. If I am too late, I ask unanimous consent to do it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is not too late.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, this is a proposition to take from the operation of the law known as the civil-service law certain employees, deputies, and so forth, subordinate to the various revenue collectors throughout the country.

The civil-service law was passed in 1883. Every Democratic platform since that time has indorsed in specific terms that law and the principles it sought to establish.

The particular officers with whom we are dealing now have never been fully covered into the civil service. They occupy an unusual relation, in that, while their term of office terminates with the term of the collector, the collector can not appoint the men whom he desires to appoint in their stead, but must have recourse to an established list.

It is not true, as some Senators seem to think, that an internal-revenue collector now taking up the duties of his office is bound to continue in the service the deputies appointed by his predecessor. He can turn out and dismiss every single deputy collector under his jurisdiction, but when he attempts to fill their places he is compelled to go to a properly established list.

I suppose I may be properly termed and designated a civil-service reformer. I believe in civil-service reform. I am against what is sometimes improperly and unfairly called the spoils system. I do not take the position that every public man, politician or statesman—whichever way you choose to designate him—is necessarily going to pay his political debts out of the Treasury rather than out of his own pocket. I do feel, however, that individual Senators are not nearly so well qualified to pass upon the qualifications of a man for an office with the duties of which they are unfamiliar as a tribunal organized for that purpose.

I have been in favor of civil-service reform ever since it became a Democratic tenet and a Democratic principle. Before and since the passage of the law of 1883 every Democratic platform has declared in unmistakable terms in favor of this principle, at which, it seems to me, the Democratic Party to-day is on the point of delivering a blow which may mean the beginning of a struggle that will end, if I am any judge of the temper of my colleagues, in the absolute annihilation and destruction of civil-service reform.

I would as soon vote for a law that would permit me to turn out every letter carrier, clerk, and rural free-delivery carrier in the United States as to vote for this provision. It would be precisely the same in principle. A great deal can be said against the present system; arguments have been made, scores of them, pro and con; but I do not propose to thrash over that straw now. The question is whether or not the Democratic Party is committed to the principle of civil-service reform, and whether or not this proposition calls for a departure from that principle.

I wish to read some of the declarations in Democratic platforms that attracted me to this principle and that are responsible for the attitude I now take.

The Democratic Party in convention assembled in the year 1904 inserted this plank in its platform:

The Democratic Party stands committed to the principles of civil-service reform, and we demand their honest, just, and impartial enforcement.

We denounce the Republican Party for its continuous and sinister encroachments upon the spirit and operation of civil-service rules, whereby it has arbitrarily dispensed with examination for office in the interests of favorites and employed all manner of devices to overreach and set aside the principles upon which the civil service was established.

Here we are, in a Democratic platform, denouncing precisely the thing we are asked to vote for in this appropriation bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HUGHES. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator from New Jersey think the country will regard with favor the declaration of the Democratic platform, which he has just read, commending in very strong terms what has come to be known as civil-service reform, when as soon as the party comes into power, apparently, judging from this amendment and some others, at every opportunity they strike a blow at the system called civil-service reform? Does the Senator think the country will approve of the party upon the promise which it repudiates in action at the first opportunity?

Mr. HUGHES. I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, and I am simply trying to give the reason why I am taking the stand I take now. I regard the Democratic Party as being absolutely committed to civil-service reform. I am not wedded to the present law. I hear almost universal criticism of it. It may be that it needs drastic and fundamental change.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator yield to me further?

Mr. HUGHES. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator says he is committed to civil-service reform, and he reads the platform of his party. The purpose of the question I asked him a moment ago was to emphasize what seems to me the manner in which a committee treats a platform declaration, with apparent indifference as to whether that platform is carried out or not. That seems to be the situation. The Democratic Party can not establish itself, and the Senator can not establish himself, as an advocate of taking these appointments out of the political spoils system, by reading platforms. The question is, What are you going to do about this amendment?

Mr. HUGHES. I must be very dense or else the Senator must be. I am on my feet for the purpose of telling what I am going to do and my reasons for it.

I want to read another declaration from a Democratic platform in reference to the question. The platform of 1908 had the following declaration in it:

The law pertaining to the civil service should be honestly and rigidly enforced to the end that merit and ability shall be standard of appointment and promotion rather than services rendered to a political party.

The last platform, which we have heard quoted a great deal in the recent tariff debate and adverted to by gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber, declared as follows:

The law pertaining to the civil service should be honestly and rigidly enforced, to the end that merit and ability shall be the standard of appointment and promotion rather than service rendered to a political party; and we favor a reorganization of the civil service, with adequate compensation commensurate with the class of work performed, for all officers and employees; we also recommend the extension to all classes of civil-service employees of the benefits of the provisions of the employers' liability law.

As I said in the beginning, I am in favor of civil-service reform. I am against a return to the old system under which it was the custom to tear the uniforms off the letter carriers and clerks at every change of administration. Not one man in ten thousand of the citizens of the United States can hope to be a Federal employee or a Federal officeholder, and they are not interested in who gets the job or whether I pay my political debts or not. They are interested in an honest and just enforcement of the law and administration of the affairs of government, and they want proper and fit men intrusted with the discharge of these duties.

I sympathize with the feeling which exists, and is bound to exist, where a party after being 20 years out of power is suddenly swept upon a great wave of popular approval into the possession of every branch of the Government. I sympathize with the feeling that must be in the breast of every man at all partisan that so far as possible every office should be in the hands of the party which has been placed in power and stamped with the popular approval of the people. I am willing to go as far as I think any man properly should go to see that tried and true Democrats are put in the places that have not already been covered into the civil-service law.

Mr. REED. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HUGHES. Certainly.

Mr. REED. If the Senator so much loves the civil service, it must be because it is a good thing; and it seems to me that instead of wanting to fill with Democrats the places that have not been covered into the civil-service law, if he was entirely logical he would be insisting on covering everything into the civil-service law to the end that no wicked Democrats might get in unless they pass the ordeal of an examination.

Mr. HUGHES. There is nothing in what the Senator says to call for any reply from me that I can see.

Mr. REED. There is nothing that can be replied to.

Mr. HUGHES. I think I am logical, but nobody, perhaps, is logical except the Senator from Missouri. I have stated that I have great sympathy for the feeling that this party, which has been denied the soft places in political life, should have its share; but I am not willing to throw away one of the most revered and beloved principles of the Democracy for the sake of a few places. If it is to be done let it be done in the daylight, with our eyes open and in cold blood. Let us say to the people, "We have been elected, we are entitled to these offices, and we mean to have them"; but do not let us go skulking around behind a subterfuge of this sort. There is a great deal to be said in favor of that proposition, and it should be said. The issue should be joined.

Mr. JAMES. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey if he did not support the provision in the tariff bill which we just passed which provides that deputy collectors to collect the income tax shall be taken without regard to the civil service?

Mr. HUGHES. I expected that question from some one on the other side of the Chamber. I did not expect a Democrat to throw in my teeth that while I voted against the proposition in caucus I supported it and voted for it on the floor. I will say to the Senator, in order that he may humiliate me as far as he can, yes; I voted for that proposition because we caucused on it, and I felt that I was in honor bound to vote for it.

Mr. JAMES. I would not suppose it would be any humiliation to the distinguished Senator to merely inquire of him how he voted.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator knew how I stood.

Mr. JAMES. I was in that caucus; and eloquent and forceful as the distinguished Senator always is, I have not any recollection of any vehement protest or any eloquent utterance upon his part against that provision which is now in the tariff act.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator is absolutely correct. There was no eloquent or vehement protest from me, because it was apparent that the proposition was going to carry overwhelmingly, and I did not waste the time of the caucus. I did what my conscience dictated; I voted against the proposition in the caucus. If the Senator does not recollect that, I am not responsible for the failure of his recollection.

Mr. JAMES. I am very frank to say that I do not recollect that any vote was called for in the Democratic caucus upon that question.

Mr. HUGHES. There was no vote called for except a viva voce vote. If the Senator insists, of course, he can say before the Senate and the country that he does not believe what I say. I say to him—

Mr. JAMES. The Senator has not stated that. I merely stated my recollection as to the fact, which the Senator himself admits is true.

Mr. HUGHES. I have not admitted that the Senator's recollection is true. I have said that there was a viva voce vote, and I voted "no." I have admitted that I made no speech.

Now, Mr. President, that is all I care to say on this subject. I feel that the Democratic Party, over a period of years which runs back as far as my recollection, has been committed to the principle of civil-service reform. As I said before, I do not say that the civil-service law is perfect. From the universality of the criticism of it I am forced to the conclusion that it has many errors, and that fundamental changes are demanded. I am willing to go into a changing of the law with an open mind, and I am willing to go as far as I think a man can safely go who has the interests of the Republic at heart to see that a partisan may get office. Further than that I decline to go.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I believe most thoroughly in a legitimate civil service. In the public positions which I have heretofore held I have at all times done what I could to secure the establishment of such a service. I believe that the great body of the American people are thoroughly in support of and would not countenance any other than a system of legitimate civil service. It is too late to turn our backs in the other direction. But the experiments which have been made along that line have in many respects been successful; in others they have not been.

Mr. President, a civil-service system must be one which covers all offices from that of President of the United States down to the lowest and humblest position of a civil character, or there must be a dividing line somewhere. I think that much of this discussion and much of the difference of opinion, of honest political opinion, on this subject find their origin in the difficulty of determining where that line ought to be.

The debate which has occurred here this morning has emphasized, in my mind, the fact that there should be some distinct line of division—scientific perhaps, arbitrary perhaps—between those positions which should fall within and those which should fall without that line when once fixed.

Now, there is a great deal of hypocrisy in both political parties—in all political parties—upon the general abstract subject of civil service. When you Republicans are in power and enjoying the fruits of office, we Democrats are most vehement civil-service men. When we Democrats are in power, and entitled to the fruits of office, our Republican friends develop a very vehement, enthusiastic, and critical civil-service spirit. That is human nature; that is a proper human nature, because it results in criticisms which keep the other side from too arbitrarily attempting to go beyond a proper limitation.

Mr. President, I supported the first draft of the amendment of the Senate Finance Committee to the tariff bill relating to this subject, because I thought it was legitimate. I did not support the last extended amendment, because I thought it went entirely beyond its legitimate province. My own belief is that all executive positions which carry with them the responsibility of executive authority, which form a part and parcel of the administration of the country, should be in sympathy with its head, and in the selection of the persons filling these positions the appointing power should not be subjected to any limitation except that discretion which always should be exercised with reference to the general standards, the general merits, and general qualifications of the respective candidates; and that as to those positions which simply are mechanical, so to speak—clerical, if you please—or which involve the exercise of technical knowledge of a high degree, or of an ordinary degree, should not be subject to the political changes that necessarily come to every country under a democratic form of government.

If it be true, Mr. President, that a deputy marshal, or a deputy revenue collector, should be under the civil service, then it is equally true that the heads of the offices should be under the civil service. If it be true that a deputy marshal should only be appointed after an examination and qualification for the position to which he aspires, it is equally true that the marshal himself, instead of being appointed by the President of the United States, should be taken from a list of names representing men who have passed creditable examinations and who are presented to the appointing power for that purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Will not the same argument apply to deputy postmasters?

Mr. THOMAS. I think so.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator mean to argue, then, that because a postmaster is not under the civil service we should therefore take the deputy postmasters out?

Mr. THOMAS. I do, most emphatically.

Mr. NORRIS. Why does not the Senator take the other course and, if the civil service is good, put the other fellow in?

Mr. THOMAS. Simply because, Mr. President, I think the postmasters of the country—that is, the first and second class postmasters—are a part of the administrative processes of the country, just as marshals are, just as revenue collectors are, just as the other heads of bureaus and departments are.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator, when he gets through that process and puts it into active operation, what part of the civil service will be left?

Mr. THOMAS. I have stated—or I have attempted to state, Mr. President—those parts of the civil service which I think are left, and that is all below those who are responsible for and who represent these administrative processes; all the vast army of clerks, all the vast army of employees throughout the country, I do not care where they are.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator think that as long as the man who appoints the clerk is not under civil service the clerk ought not to be under the civil service, if his argument is good?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I think not, unless you carry the contention to the heads of the departments. You must draw the line somewhere.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand the Senator's logic, there will be no line. He would obliterate the whole entire civil service.

Mr. THOMAS. That may be the Senator's understanding. I think something was said a moment ago about logic in this discussion, but it seems to me that the logic of those who are now contending for the general application of our civil-service doctrines and our law ought to begin with the Secretary of War, with the Secretary of the Navy, with the Secretary of the Interior, with the Postmaster General, and all the heads of departments, or else recognize the fact that those charged with the duty of carrying out the functions and the policy of the existing administration successfully should be in sympathy with that administration, should be a part and parcel of it, and inasmuch as the deputy marshal, or the deputy postmaster, or the deputy collector, performs the same functions as his principal, then he should be included in the same class and appointed in the same way.

Mr. President, a house divided against itself can not very well stand. If, to illustrate, a marshal or a Cabinet officer representing one administration is surrounded entirely by deputies and assistants who have held over from another administration of a different political faith, of different political tendency, not in harmony with new processes and policies, in what respect can such an administration expect to be entirely successful? Of course I am simply singling out for illustration one or two of the many positions to which the same argument would apply.

And there is another point, Mr. President, I want to emphasize right here, which is that all the deputy marshals in the country, all deputy collectors in the country, unless my recollection is incorrect, have been certified into the classified service by the past administration and consist of men who never took any examination of any sort whatever.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The objection which the Senator has just made is a meritorious one, I think. Many who do not agree with him in his general position would agree with him upon that. I should like to ask the Senator if it could not be avoided, without a wholesale change such as is proposed by this amendment, by providing that those who are now in office, who have not been subjected to the test of civil service, should pass those tests and take the examination as a condition of retaining the office? That would obviate the objection of the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. If I thought that that class of officials should be included within the civil-service regulations at all, yes; but I am not prepared to concede that they should be so included unless you include as well the principals of these different positions.

I stated this condition for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that the civil service has been unduly and improperly extended, not alone by Republican Presidents, but by all administrations, State and Federal, to include men who have not been properly classified, and then protest against anything which looks like removing them from the positions they occupy.

Mr. President, I believe and I have always contended for a civil service which would exempt the heads of departments, the heads of bureaus, and other officers directly connected with the administration, and by the force of argument such a position necessarily includes the exemption of the deputies who are clothed with the same powers, who exercise and perform the same duties, and for the exercise and proper performance of which the principal is necessarily held responsible. The fact that a bond has been executed and approved conditioned for the faithful performance of these duties seems to me to be entirely outside of the question.

I would not for a moment, Mr. President, vote for any measure which would in any wise affect the application of existing civil-service rules beyond the point which I have mentioned.

I have referred to the fact that there was a great deal of hypocrisy in our advocacy of a universal civil-service condition, and that this was not peculiar to any political party, but common to all of them and to their members.

Now, let me give you a recent instance. The present cashier of the United States mint in my city was appointed, if I remember correctly, on the 29th of last December. He was at that time a citizen of the State of Iowa, a friend of the superintendent of the mint, as I am informed. That appointment at that time was not within the classified civil service. The assistant cashier did occupy that position, and he had served the country faithfully ever since 1898. He was entitled to promotion under the principles and rules of the civil service and by every just consideration of ordinary equity and fairness.

On the 20th day of February last, by an Executive order, this place was covered into the classified service, whereby the deserving subordinate, entitled to promotion and presumably certain of it, was set entirely aside for a gentleman perfectly competent, a good citizen, but nevertheless a gentleman from another State. He was given the position; and then, in the expiring days of the administration, permanently certified into the civil service with no examination or other preliminary requirement.

I am not complaining about this because a Republican President made the order. I have no question but that a Democratic President would have done the same thing and may do the same thing before this administration expires.

I am simply citing it as an instance, Mr. President, and it is only one of many, to show how we preach the doctrine of civil service to the multitude and violate it in our common practice in a great many of the opportunities that present themselves where it can be done.

But I think, Mr. President, it is unfortunate that our methods of procedure here are such that matters of this kind can be included in an appropriation bill. I do not question the practice. It is unquestionably perfectly legitimate and warranted by the terms of the Constitution of the United States. But I believe it would be far better if our method of legislation here were that of most of the States of the Union, to wit, that every bill shall have a title and that nothing not contained within that title, except appropriation bills, can appear within the body of the statute. It would do away with much of this general legislation, with what are called riders, and which necessarily form the subject of much abuse.

I differ with my friend the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] in that while he is perfectly right in so far as all official positions except those which are enumerated are concerned, I think he is entirely wrong as to the other positions. The time will come, and I hope soon, I trust under this administration, when a systematic, scientific line of division, arbitrary perhaps, as I have stated, to some extent, but nevertheless a line of division between appointive executive officers and appointive clerical and technical positions will be drawn, there being upon the one side all the former class of positions and upon the other all of the latter class of positions. It will very largely clarify the situation. It will be an intelligent system, and one which no administration and no Congress will care to violate.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I desire to say that it seems to me that the political spoils system is one of the dangerous things in American politics, and I think in time it will affect in a serious way the fortunes of the Republic. I do not believe that the present civil-service law is a perfect law. I think it is very imperfect in many particulars. I agree with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] that it has been administered imperfectly many times, and many abuses have been committed by indirect evasion of the law and by hypocritical pretense evasions have been covered up.

But this must be said for it: It has greatly improved the methods of administering the civil affairs of our Government, and it seems to me that we ought to try to correct the imperfections, to improve the methods of administration, and to enlarge its scope rather than to pick it to pieces from time to time, as we are about to do.

I can not agree with my friend from Colorado in that a subordinate to the chief officer should be exempt from the civil service because that officer is—

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think I said that a subordinate of a chief officer should be exempt from the civil service. What I said or intended to say was that a deputy of a chief officer, who performs and is supposed to perform, and whose duties include the duties of the chief officer himself, and who is therefore as to everything except his title the chief officer when he is in action, should be exempt.

Mr. BRISTOW. I probably gave a broader interpretation to the words of the Senator than was justified from what he said. My personal opinion is that the marshal and the collector of revenue should both be under the classified civil service. I see no reason why the collector of internal revenue for the State of Kansas or for the State of Colorado should not be a classified officer. It should not be partisan in any sense. He is simply an administrative officer, a ministerial officer, who performs certain routine functions in the administration of our Government.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the Senator is perfectly logical, and evidently he does not hesitate to carry his logic to its legitimate end. I should like to ask whether he would carry it one step further and include the Commissioner General of Internal Revenue here in the city of Washington.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, that is a different question and much broader than the other. The Commissioner General of Internal Revenue deals with policies of the Government to a certain extent—more so than his deputies do. It may be altogether proper, being here in Washington and more or less in personal contact with the administrative head of the Government, that he should not be a classified officer, although I am not entirely clear as to that. But certainly he can direct any policies of administration through the various deputies throughout the country if they are loyal to the service of the Government; and if they are not, he should have the power to promptly remove them from office. From some experience and a more or less extensive observation, I want to say here on the floor of the Senate that, in my opinion, civil-service employees are just as faithful to one administration as they are to another in the performance of their public duties. I have myself had some experience, and have found as loyal and as faithful subordinates who were of the opposite political party in carrying out the policy of the administration with which I was connected as those of my own party. I never hesitated to trust them with the secrets of the administration, and I never yet was betrayed in the discharge of any public duty by such men.

You may ask any honest executive officer in the present administration who has been there for any length of time and had opportunity to learn from experience, and he will tell you that such subordinates of his who are carrying out his policies are loyal, regardless of their political belief or party affiliation in the past. They never think of partisanship in the proper discharge of their duty.

With due respect to Senators who are taking the other position here I believe that this piece of legislation is against the interests of this country and is directly in the interest of corrupt machine politics. The men who are trying to get these offices out of the civil service want to use them in political campaigns, and they will become a source of political scandal and corruption, as all spoils systems do in the end.

It has been a source of gratification to me to observe the conduct of the civil-service employees who came into the service of the United States under the Cleveland administration without examination, who were covered under the civil service by Mr. Cleveland when he went out of office. I do not blame him, nor do I blame any other President for extending the civil service at the close of his administration, although it was not a consistent thing to do; but there is a practical side in the administration of the Government as well as a theoretical side, and Mr. Cleveland extended the civil-service system then because he believed it ought to be done, and he could do it much easier then than at any other period in his administration, for if he had undertaken to have covered in appointees of another administration, he would have had a hungry horde of Representatives and Senators besieging him to withhold his hand in order that they might put their partisans into the service and thus pay their political debts. Rather than stand up against the spoilsmen of his party he waited until the opportunity for them to assail him for such conduct was gone, and that has been the practice of other Presidents since his time.

I will join cheerfully with Senators on the other side of the Chamber to improve the present method of civil-service administration; to improve the law. Indeed, I think it needs improvement in many respects. I think it ought to be very largely extended to cover in many offices that are not now covered. I hope that this administration before it goes out of office will extend the civil service further than it has ever been extended before, and that it will be done at the most opportune time—the quicker the better—but from the spirit which prevails here, the President, if he should undertake to cover in officers who have rendered faithful service, but who can be plucked out of their positions in order that political adherents of Senators and Representatives now in public life may receive political reward, would meet violent and determined opposition. So probably it will not be done now, and he will follow the same practice his predecessors have followed, that extends the service after his partisans are in office. If by any fortune of political events in the future I should be in this Chamber and a President should be elected who belongs to the party to which I belong, if he undertook or if the majority of which I might happen to be a member undertook, to destroy, weaken, and tear to pieces the civil-service law I would stand upon this floor and denounce it then the same as I denounce this effort now.

Patronage is the bane of American politics. It has been used in the past by Presidents to purchase congressional support for political policies favored by an administration; it has been used in the past by Senators and Representatives to force appointments which the President thought ought not to be made; and it will be used in the future by both the executive and the legislative branches of the Government the same as it has been in the past. So the best thing that can happen to this Government of ours is to curtail the power of patronage as quickly as it can be done, so as to put into the law a merit system and correct the abuses that have been indulged in under the system which we now have.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I would like to say in a general way that I believe the civil-service system, properly administered, to be preferable to the spoils system. I think there is no doubt of that as an economic proposition. But I believe also that it has not been and is not being administered in the interests of the people at large; that the law governing it, the regulations, and the manner of administration need remedy and should be remedied soon. I believe that it is the duty of Members on both sides of the Chamber to get together and reorganize the system of rules and regulations and the method of administration so as to make the civil-service system more amenable to the needs and uses of the Government. At the same time, I prefer, even as it exists now, the civil-service system to any return to the spoils system. I think that any changes which are made in the law should be made along the lines of general principles, which will reach into the heart of the conditions and remedy them to the general good of the people.

I am, as a Democrat, a bit jealous of any attack which is made in an insidious manner to break down the system piecemeal. I think it poor policy for the party, and that it will defeat the purpose which we should have in view and which is emergently needed at this time.

I am perfectly willing to concede, and I believe, that there is a system of sabotage, if you please, being practiced upon the party now in power by many of the persons who are employed under civil-service regulations, yet they are protected by these regulations from the treatment which they properly deserve; but I am against this amendment upon principle. I believe it to be the wrong method of correcting the evil. It is my opinion that the law should be changed so as to give to all executive officers the power to remove any appointee who does not do his full duty both to his superior officer and to the Government by which he is employed. Nothing short of that will remedy the condition which exists at this time. For that reason, I am not in favor of the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	Nelson	Simmons
Bacon	Jackson	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Bradley	James	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Johnson	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Bristow	Jones	Owen	Swanson
Bryan	Kern	Perkins	Thomas
Burton	Lane	Poindexter	Thompson
Chamberlain	Lea	Pomerene	Thornton
Chilton	Lewis	Reed	Tillman
Clarke, Ark.	McLean	Shafroth	Walsh
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Weeks
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Shields	Williams
Hollis	Myers	Shively

Mr. REED. I again announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. STONE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. JAMES. The yeas and nays have not been ordered on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] asks for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Washington to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was agreed to. Is the demand seconded? [After counting.] In the opinion of the Chair not a sufficient number have seconded the demand.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask that the other side be counted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again inquire if the demand for the yeas and nays is seconded? Senators favoring the calling of the yeas and nays will indicate by holding up their hands. [After counting.] In the opinion of the Chair not a sufficient number have raised their hands.

Mr. NORRIS. Can we not have the other side counted? It only requires one-fifth of those present to order the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair knows of no rule whereby the other side can be taken. Fifty-one Senators are present, and but 10 Senators have raised their hands.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think that 51 Senators are now present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll call has disclosed the fact that there are 51 Senators present.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was at the time the roll was called, but not at this time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I want to suggest, if I may, that it seems to me, inasmuch as the Constitution provides that the yeas and nays shall be entered on the Journal at the request of one-fifth of the Members present, a Senator has a right to have the evidence as to whether or not one-fifth of those present do demand the yeas and nays. If one side is counted, namely, those who do demand the yeas and nays, in order to know whether or not the demand is seconded by one-fifth, a Senator has a right to have the other Members on the floor counted, irrespective of what a previous roll call may have indicated.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say—

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask for the regular order. The Chair has ruled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is compelled to rule that the roll call just concluded showed the presence of 51 Senators.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to call the Chair's attention to the fact that the Chair said there were 10 Senators seconding the demand for the roll call. That would be one-fifth of fifty. Now, there are not 50 Senators present, and there were not that many present when the Chair made that announcement. I can call the Chair's attention to one Senator, if he desires, who answered the roll call who is not now present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator knows that the Chair can not go into that question of fact. As the Chair understands the precedents laid down by former occupants of the Chair, a roll call is conclusive on a proposition of this kind.

Mr. NORRIS. The Constitution says that on the demand of one-fifth of those present the yeas and nays shall be entered on the Journal. Now, it must be ascertained whether there are more than 50 Senators present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no way for the Chair to ascertain that fact except by having the roll called, and when the roll is called—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Presiding Officer will allow me, the way the Chair ascertains the number who have asked for the yeas and nays is to count them, and the Chair did count them. It is just as mathematically possible for the Chair, if he desires to do so, to count the other Senators present as it is to count those who have asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is repeatedly done, if I may be allowed to say so. Acquiescence to the request that the other side be counted is simply in another form a method of division.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it seems to me that when the Chair took pains to ascertain how many Senators demanded the yeas and nays, he did so by having us stand up or by having us hold up our hands. He did not pass upon the demand from any previous roll call. The way to ascertain whether that number is one-fifth is to count the other side in the same manner. That has always been the custom heretofore, and I have never known it to be deviated from when the point was raised.

Mr. BACON. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the language of the Constitution is not "one-fifth of those voting," but "one-fifth of those present." I think the Chair is correct in saying that the only way to ascertain who are present, according to a practice of the Senate, is by a roll call; in other words, we do not have the counting of those who are present, but the presence of a Senator is indicated by his answer to his name. There had been a roll call immediately preceding the demand for the yeas and nays. The very last thing done was to ascertain that there were 51 Senators present, and that is the best evidence of the fact.

Mr. NELSON. I have been here as long as the Senator, and, according to my recollection, invariably when a demand is made for a roll call the question is asked, "Is the demand seconded by a sufficient number?" If there is any doubt about the sufficiency of the number, the Presiding Officer has always asked Senators on the other side to stand up and be counted. This is a plain departure from that rule, and I do not think it is treating us fairly. We ought to be treated in the same spirit that we treated you when we were in the majority.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am willing to have the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Upon what is the roll call, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr.

POINDEXTER] to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President—

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was agreed to. I have moved to lay that motion upon the table. That is the question before the Senate, as I understand.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the exhibition of propriety, circumspection, and order for which the Senate is so famous was so pronounced that I was unable to hear what the question was. I ask that the question be again stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reason the Senator did not hear was that he was addressing the Chair when the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] was stating it. The Senator from North Carolina moves to lay upon the table the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to reconsider the vote.

Mr. ASHURST. What vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote of the Senate upon the last proposition, having to do with the amendment to the civil-service provision. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and called the name of Mr. ASHURST.

Mr. ASHURST. I refuse to vote until we know what we are voting on.

Mr. JAMES. As I understand the parliamentary situation, the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment relative to deputy collectors and deputy marshals was agreed to, and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has moved to lay that motion on the table. Our vote is "yea."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I rise to a point of order, which is that after the Chair has ordered the Secretary to call the roll and a Senator has answered to his name it can not be interrupted for discussion and debate.

Mr. JAMES. The Senator himself interrupted the roll call a moment ago and argued for half an hour about a proposition that was not germane at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have not interrupted the roll call. I demand the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who is not here, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "yea." At the same time I desire to announce that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is absent from the Chamber on account of committee work.

I also desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. STONE] is unavoidably detained from the Senate by sickness in his family. In his absence he is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. If present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I desire again to announce my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and I refrain from voting. I will not make this announcement again during the day, but will let it continue for the day. I also wish to add that if at any time my vote is necessary to make a quorum, under our agreement I have the right to vote, as has the Senator from Massachusetts in my absence.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to inquire if the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has voted upon this roll call?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I can not vote, as I have a pair with that Senator.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WALSH (after having voted in the affirmative). I inadvertently voted upon this question without reflecting that I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I therefore desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. Under that pair I have reserved the right to vote at all times when it is necessary to do so in order to make a quorum of the Senate. I vote "yea."

Mr. LEA. I announce my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], reserving the right, however, to vote when necessary for the purpose of constituting a quorum. I do not know whether it is necessary, and until I ascertain whether it be necessary or not, I will withhold my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that his vote will not be necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Then I withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). In view of what the Chair has just stated, I desire to withdraw my vote, because I only voted to make a quorum, as I have a pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that if a sufficient number of Senators withdraw their votes there will not be a quorum, of course.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will allow my vote to stand until the fact is ascertained whether a quorum has voted.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. McCUMBER] is absent from the city on important business.

Mr. WALSH. I observe that the Secretary, in recapitulating the vote, called my name as having voted. I announced that I withdrew my vote, although the pair expressly stipulated that I should have the right to vote at any time in order to make a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator's vote is necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. WALSH. Then I will let my vote stand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is now informed that a sufficient number of Senators have voted, so that if the Senator from Montana desires to withdraw his vote he may do so.

Mr. WALSH. Under that statement, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. A quorum having voted, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 16, as follows:

So the motion of Mr. OVERMAN to lay on the table the motion of Mr. POINDEXTER to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and the Secretary read to line 24, on page 2.

Mr. OVERMAN. To the next paragraph, on page 3, at the request of the department, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 4, after the word "States," the committee proposes to insert:

And for other purposes connected with the present disturbed conditions in Mexico.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I call the attention of the Senator to the unanimous-consent agreement that the committee amendments shall be first disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Very well. With the understanding, then, that matters of this kind will stand undisposed of until the committee amendments are disposed of, I will not press the amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as pending.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Treasury Department," on page 3, after line 12, to insert:

OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

The money accounts of the Panama Canal, under the Panama Canal act of August 24, 1912 (Stat. L., vol. 37, p. 560), shall continue to be audited by the Auditor for the War Department.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge in relation to that provision, why does that need to be continued?

Mr. OVERMAN. The committee was informed that under the new act there would be confusion as to which auditor should audit these accounts, and legislation upon the subject was desired, so as to make it definite. We have placed it where it is now, under the same auditor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, yes; I notice that it says they "shall continue to be audited."

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not know but that the authority originally given in the bill had expired, or something like that.

Mr. OVERMAN. The comptroller says that under the new act he can not tell exactly where the accounts should be audited.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 18, to insert:

Boston, Mass., immigrant station: The existing legislation authorizing the acquisition of a site and the construction and furnishing of an immigrant station at Boston, Mass., be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to construct upon the site heretofore acquired for such station a suitable building or buildings, exclusive of sea wall, piers, approaches, and the furnishing of such building or buildings; all within the limit of cost of $375,000, heretofore fixed for said site and building or buildings; and any unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made under said limit of cost are hereby transferred to the Treasury Department and are to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill just what that means, and what the purpose of the amendment is.

Mr. OVERMAN. As I understand, it is to give to the Secretary of the Treasury, instead of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the right to control the letting of contracts for the erection of those buildings. It has been in the hands of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor by mistake. All public buildings are in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Architect of the Treasury is under the Secretary of the Treasury. For some reason this was taken out of his hands and put in the hands of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. We wish to have it transferred back.

Mr. WEEKS. It is simply a transfer from one department to another?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is all.

Mr. WEEKS. Was it done at the request of the Treasury Department?

Mr. OVERMAN. It was done at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. WEEKS. And with the assent of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor?

Mr. OVERMAN. There was no objection at all from him. It is something unusual to put it in the hands of that department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill, not only as to the item on page 4 in regard to the post office at Bronx, N. Y., but in regard to the others that are in the bill. Have they been provided for under the public-buildings act?

Mr. OVERMAN. All of these public buildings have been previously authorized. We put nothing new in the bill as to public buildings. They are all authorized by laws heretofore enacted by Congress.

Mr. NORRIS. Then why were not these appropriations made in the regular appropriation bill? How do they happen to be made in this one? Is it not customary to place them in the regular appropriation bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator refer to the public-buildings bill?

Mr. NORRIS. No; the public-buildings bill does not carry appropriations. I refer to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. The sundry civil bill usually carries them, but this has come up since that time. It is in accordance with an estimate made by the Treasury Department itself.

Mr. NORRIS. I notice a great number here reading, "For completion of building under present limit," and so forth. Most of them are very small. I was under the impression that the sundry civil bill carried sufficient appropriation.

Mr. OVERMAN. The sundry civil bill, if the Senator will remember, carried only certain amounts for certain buildings, and not all the amounts necessary to complete the buildings. It appropriated $5,000, $50,000, and so forth, for various buildings.

Mr. NORRIS. I know it does not necessarily give them the full amount; but, for instance, a little further down is this item: Corinth, Miss., post office: For completion of building under present limit, $3,500.

It is a very small amount.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was necessary to complete the building under the appropriation already made or authorized.

Mr. NORRIS. There are so many of these items that I was led to make the inquiry. The practice has always been in the sundry civil bill, if we came as near to the total as $3,500, to appropriate in the sundry civil bill all that was authorized by law; and I wondered why so many of them had been omitted.

Mr. OVERMAN. These are estimates sent down by the Treasury Department, all within the limit of cost. We would not include a single new public building in the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether there was any investigation made by the committee in regard to this subject. I think there were 48 buildings provided for in the last buildings act where the amount that had been authorized before was increased, and plans, specifications, and so forth, have been prepared and submitted, but no contract let, because the bids were all larger than the authorization. The last public buildings act, I think, had 48 of those cases in different parts of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think the Senator will find anything of that sort here. These are all small amounts.

Mr. NORRIS. What I was going to inquire was whether the matter was given any consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was not.

Mr. NORRIS. The Supervising Architect of the Treasury, as I understand, had the matter up, at least with the House committee, and was desirous of getting some additional employees in his office, in order that those buildings should not lose their place.

Mr. OVERMAN. The question did come up as to whether or not we should allow additional clerks. The House declined to allow them, and we accepted what the House did.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 4, after line 17, to insert:

Charleston, W. Va., rent of buildings: For rent of temporary quarters at Charleston, W. Va., for the accommodation of Government officials, $5,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRISTOW. Do I understand that other amendments are not in order until the committee amendments have been passed on?

Mr. OVERMAN. That was the unanimous-consent agreement.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 5, after line 2, to insert:

Galveston, Tex., appraisers' stores: The appropriations of $40,000 (act of Congress March 4, 1911, 36 Stat., 1372) and $25,000 (act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, 37 Stat., 420) for the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of the appraisers' stores building at Galveston, Tex., under the authorization contained in section 2 of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 680) are hereby reappropriated and made available for carrying into effect so much of the revised authorization contained in section 1 of the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913, as provides for the purchase of a suitable building and site for an appraisers' stores, warehouse, and other purposes, and providing suitable offices therein, at a limit of cost of $65,000; and any balance remaining of said $65,000 from said purchase and provision of suitable offices is hereby reappropriated and made available toward carrying into effect either, or both, of the other two purposes contemplated by said authorization contained in section 1 of said public act of March 4, 1913.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to insert:

Galveston, Tex., quarantine station: For placing riprap alongside the bulkhead at the quarantine station, Galveston, Tex., in order to prevent the same from being washed away due to its exposed position and the effect of storm and wave action and the scour of tidal currents, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 9, after "$10,000," to insert: "Provided, That not to exceed $7,000 of this amount may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the acquisition of additional land adjoining the present site," so as to make the clause read:

Hanover, Pa., post office: For completion of building under present limit, $10,000: Provided, That not to exceed $7,000 of this amount may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the acquisition of additional land adjoining the present site.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 19, to insert:

Pittsburgh, Pa., Bureau of Mines: Section 26 of the act approved March 4, 1913, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into a contract or contracts for the erection of fireproof laboratories for the Bureau of Mines in the city of Pittsburgh, Pa., etc., is hereby amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to accept and expend, in addition to the limit of cost therein fixed, such funds as may be received by contribution from the State of Pennsylvania, or from other sources, for the purpose of enlarging, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, and improving the site authorized to be acquired for said Bureau of Mines, or for other work contemplated by said legislation: Provided, That the acceptance of such contributions and the improvements made therewith shall involve the United States in no expenditure in excess of the limit of cost heretofore fixed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 12, to insert:

Portland, Oreg., post office: The unexpended balance ($160,000) of the appropriation for the acquisition of a site for a post-office building at Portland, Oreg., is hereby reappropriated and made available toward the construction of said building within the present limit and for the purposes stipulated in the public buildings act of March 4, 1913: Provided, That section 6 of the public buildings act, approved March 4, 1913, is hereby amended so that authority is given to construct said public building to accommodate any other governmental purposes in the city of Portland, Oreg., said additional accommodations herein authorized to be made within the limit of cost heretofore fixed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 3, to insert:

Tampa Bay, Fla., quarantine station: For the construction of attendants' quarters on shore, wharf, and causeway, including disinfecting house thereon, and a house on shore for the storage of inflammable materials, to replace the damage done by the fire of June 18, 1913, $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 9, to insert:

Memphis, Tenn., customhouse, courthouse, and post office: Authority is hereby given to use the sum of $20,000 of the amount heretofore authorized for the purchase of a site toward the construction of said customhouse, courthouse, and post office, at Memphis, Tenn.: Provided, That the limit of cost heretofore fixed shall not be exceeded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 8, to insert:

New York, N. Y., appraisers' stores: The appropriation of $75,000 contained in the sundry civil act approved August 24, 1912, for installing in the appraisers' stores building, New York, N. Y., certain metal conduits and wiring, fire-alarm system, etc., be, and the same is hereby, made available in lieu thereof for the following purposes, namely: For completing the inclosing of the central elevator shaft, inclosing the lift in the northeast corner, new inclosed staircase on the south side, remodeling wiring system, installing a new fire-alarm system, and extending watchman's clock system; any balance within said limit of $75,000 to be expended in reassigning changes incident thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 10, to insert:

Wytheville, Va., post office: The post-office building heretofore authorized at Wytheville, Va., shall be so constructed as to provide quarters for all governmental purposes in that city: Provided, That said post-office building, together with any additional accommodations herein authorized, shall be constructed within the limit of cost fixed for said building.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 11, to insert:

Mechanical equipment for public buildings: The limitation of $9,000 for the Treasury, Butler, and Winder Buildings, contained in the appropriation for "Mechanical equipment for public buildings, 1914," is increased to $15,000 for repairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 9, after the word "compensation," to strike out "(not exceeding in the aggregate $15,000 and at a monthly compensation not exceeding $300 each, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury)" and insert "not exceeding in the aggregate $15,000, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury," so as to make the clause read:

For compensation, not exceeding in the aggregate $15,000, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and traveling expenses of agents to select and recommend sites that have been authorized by law for public buildings, for the fiscal year 1914, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Washington to the fact that under the unanimous-consent agreement amendments other than committee amendments are not now in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent agreement is that the committee amendments are to be first considered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was not aware of that. I was not present when the agreement was entered into.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 11, after line 16, to insert:

MINTS AND ASSAY OFFICES.

For freight on bullion and coin, by registered mail or otherwise, between mints and assay offices, additional for the fiscal year 1914, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 20, to insert: Mint at Carson City, Nev.: For incidental and contingent expenses, additional for fiscal year 1914, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 23, to insert: Assay office at Boise, Idaho: For incidental and contingent expenses, additional for fiscal year 1914, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 12, to insert:

Assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak.: For incidental and contingent expenses, new machinery, etc., additional for fiscal year 1914, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEA. I should like to give notice that after the conclusion of action on the committee amendments, I desire to offer an amendment to be inserted on page 11, just before "Mints and Assay Offices."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as pending.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, one matter occurs to me here, and I do not mention it to be critical. For instance, when a committee amendment is up for consideration, it may be that some Senator will wish to amend that amendment. If he can not do it at that time, he must get some time in which to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent agreement does not prevent an attempt to amend a committee amendment, as the Chair understands.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to proposals to amend committee amendments.

Mr. NELSON. That is what I mean. When a committee amendment is up for consideration, it is certainly open to amendment, is it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the Chair.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 12, after line 3, to insert:

Assay office at Helena, Mont.: For incidental and contingent expenses, additional for fiscal year 1914, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 6, to insert: Assay office at Salt Lake City, Utah: For incidental and contingent expenses, additional for fiscal year 1914, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 9, to insert:

COLLECTING INTERNAL REVENUE.

For salaries and expenses of 40 revenue agents provided for by law, and fees and expenses of gaugers, salaries and expenses of storekeepers and storekeeper-gaugers, fiscal year 1913, $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 2, to insert:

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Authority is granted to transfer the sum of $2,100 from the item "For medical examinations, care of seamen, care and treatment of all other persons entitled to relief, and miscellaneous expenses other than marine hospitals, which are not included under special heads," for the fiscal year 1912, to the item "For freight, transportation, and traveling expenses," for the fiscal year 1912.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Interstate Commerce Commission," on page 14, line 13, after the words "nineteen hundred and fourteen," to insert "and this appropriation shall be charged with all expenses properly incurred on and after July 1, 1913," so as to read:

To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to carry out the objects of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, by providing for a valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks, bonds, and other securities," approved March 1, 1913, of which sum not exceeding $15,000 may be expended for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia, being for the fiscal year 1914, $300,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $100,000 made for this purpose in the general deficiency appropriation act approved March 4, 1913, which is reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1914, and this appropriation shall be charged with all expenses properly incurred on and after July 1, 1913.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to ask a question regarding the amendment. Of course I assume that the expenses were properly incurred in the sense that they were necessary, but that the amendment is designed to apply to a case where some money was expended perhaps not strictly and technically according to the provisions of the statute, in some emergency. So much as a preliminary to get to my question. If that is the intention will not the use of the word "properly," in line 14, effectually bar the curing of the very trouble the amendment is designed to cure, because they were not properly incurred if they were not incurred strictly in accordance with the law.

Mr. OVERMAN. This item was sent down and inserted after conference with the comptroller. The men are already employed. I do not know whether they were properly employed or not, but no provision was made for their payment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know either. If he does not know enough to extricate himself from his own difficulties that he has got into, I have nothing more to say.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 3, after the word "appointment," to strike out "Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available for payment of persons duly appointed, qualified, and actually employed prior to July 1, 1913." So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no person in the classified service of the United States on March 1, 1913, or employed therein since that date, other than in the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall be employed hereunder, by certificate or otherwise of the Civil Service Commission or by transfer from other branches of the public service, at a rate of compensation exceeding that received from the United States on or since March 1, 1913, nor shall the rate of compensation of any person appointed hereunder be increased within 12 months after such appointment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 21, to insert:

UNITED STATES BOARD OF MEDIATION AND CONCILIATION.

To enable the United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation to carry out the objects of an act entitled "An act providing for mediation, conciliation, and arbitration in controversies between certain employers and their employees," approved July 15, 1913, for the fiscal year 1914, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "District of Columbia," on page 16, after line 11, to insert:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to use so much as may be necessary of the appropriation of $4,800 contained in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, approved March 4, 1913, under the head of "General Expenses," subhead "Excise Board," to pay the salaries of the four employees of the old Excise Board for services actually rendered by them from July 1, 1913, to August 21, 1913, both dates inclusive, at the rates of compensation set forth in the law granting said appropriation, and the said appropriation is hereby made available for this purpose.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask the object of that. They are employees of the board under the old law and held over?

Mr. OVERMAN. The clerks held over, and now we can not pay them because the law was changed. The comptroller held that he could not pay them on that appropriation, and so we have authorized the payment. The clerks have been doing the work, and they are to be paid out of the $4,800 heretofore appropriated.

Mr. BURTON. Is it due to delay in the confirming of the excise commissioners or to the fact that certain clerks held over who had been employed by the old board?

Mr. OVERMAN. They were employed by the old board, and they were just continued. There was no confirmation, but the clerks went on, and there is no money to pay them.

Mr. BURTON. I suppose it is just to them that they should be paid; but what duties did they have to perform in the meantime?

Mr. OVERMAN. They were under the employment of the Government at the time and they held on until the confirmation of the new board. We thought it was right to pay them out of the appropriation made for that purpose.

Mr. BURTON. Did they act as clerks under the new board as well?

Mr. OVERMAN. The same men.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Chair ruled so quickly; I had been waiting to offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the order by which the amendment was agreed to will be vacated.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I send an amendment to the amendment to the desk and ask that it be read. It is to come in on page 16, after line 25, at the conclusion of the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the committee amendment, at the bottom of page 16, insert:

For the expenses of jury commissioners of the District of Columbia, including stationery and clerical assistants—

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to that as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course it is not a matter concerning the Commissioners of the District, but I thought this was the proper place for it.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is an entirely different subject. I ask the Senator to wait until we get through with the committee amendments.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is immaterial to me. I will withdraw it until the bill is open to individual amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 9 on page 20, the last paragraph read being as follows:

International Waterways Commission: Not exceeding $5,100 of the sum appropriated in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914 for the work of the International Waterways Commission shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred subsequent to January 1, 1913.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to ask a question about the International Waterways Commission. As I recall it, certain expenses had been incurred before the sundry civil act was passed, and the commission was unable, under the terms of the act, to pay those expenses from the appropriation; that is to say, from January 1 up to the date when the bill became a law.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think this is to legalize that payment.

Mr. BURTON. It is to provide for that period.

Mr. OVERMAN. For the interim.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, under the head of "War Department," on page 20, after line 19, to insert:

RIVER AND HARBOR WORK.

The sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the unexpended balance of the appropriation heretofore made for the improvement of the Tennessee River between Chattanooga, Tenn., and Browns Island, Ala., be made available for expenditure in the section of the Tennessee River between Florence and Riverton, Ala., for the purpose of allowing immediate and continuous work of improvement in said latter section of the river.

Mr. BURTON. I should like to make an inquiry about that amendment. This amount of $150,000 has already been appropriated or authorized in the river and harbor act. The object of the amendment is to expend a portion of the amount heretofore appropriated, to wit, $150,000, for another section of the river.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is the section adjoining—the section between Florence and Riverton. I understand that all the money has been expended on that portion of the river where work is being done; $150,000 is a part of the amount that was appropriated for the section between Browns Island and Chattanooga. They want to take that $150,000 and apply it to the other section. It is recommended by the department. They are not able to do anything in that portion of the river between Browns Island and Chattanooga. The Secretary of War recommends it.

Mr. BURTON. There has been no action by the House on the recommendation of the River and Harbor Commission.

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. BURTON. I presume this is continuing the improvement, and I shall not raise a point of order on it. It is entirely contrary to precedents we formerly observed to shift the appropriation from one section to another without the action of the River and Harbor Board.

Mr. OVERMAN. I inquired if all the parties concerned had consented, and they came before us from the House and said they had. As I said, the Secretary of War has recommended it. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 3, to insert: For protecting the shore of Anastasia Island, Fla., by groins, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Navy Department," on page 25, line 8, after the word "House," to strike out

"document" and insert "documents"; in line 9, after the words "one hundred and eighty-five," to strike out "$1,059" and insert "and Senate Document No. 194, $1,781.39," so as to make the clause read:

To pay the claims adjusted and determined by the Navy Department, under the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1911 (36 Stat. L., 607), on account of damages occasioned to private property by collisions with vessels of the United States Navy and for which the naval vessels were responsible, certified to Congress at its present session in House Documents Nos. 151 and 185 and Senate Document No. 194, $1,781.39.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 11, to insert:

NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

The "Improvement of hydraulics, Mare Island Straits, etc., in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1103, Sixtieth Congress, second session," authorized by the naval appropriation act approved March 4, 1911, may be effected by the Secretary of the Navy in accordance with such modifications of the plan recommended in said report as he may approve, subject, however, to the limitation of cost fixed by said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Interior Department," subhead "General Land Office," on page 25, after line 23, to insert:

To enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to temporarily employ additional clerks and stenographers, at not exceeding the rate of $1,000 per annum each, for the purpose of bringing up such arrears of work as may exist in his office, the unexpended balances amounting to $8,377.88 of the appropriations of $32,620 contained in the act approved August 24, 1912, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913," providing for temporary employment of additional clerks in the General Land Office, is hereby continued and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 27, to insert:

SURVEYING THE PUBLIC LANDS.

To pay William T. Evans, United States deputy surveyor, for surveys and resurveys of public lands in Oregon, under contract No. 784, dated January 21, 1909, the sum of $1,428.16, as found due him by the Auditor for the Interior Department by certificate No. 32100 of September 16, 1913, and payable from the appropriation "Surveying the public lands," fiscal year 1909.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, after line 22, to insert:

INDIAN OFFICE.

For the temporary employment of eight clerks in the Office of Indian Affairs, at the rate of $1,200 per annum each, for the balance of the fiscal year 1914, for work in connection with determining heirs of deceased Indian allottees, $7,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid from the $50,000 appropriated in the Indian appropriation act of June 30, 1913, for such work in the Indian field service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 6, to insert:

The unexpended balance remaining upon the books of the Treasury on June 30, 1913, of the appropriation of "$15,000 for improvements at Fort Bidwell School, in California, as follows: $7,000 for the erection and construction of a water and electric-light system; $3,000 for sewerage system; $3,000 for a steam laundry; and $2,000 for a complete heating system of the school and accessory buildings," under the act of August 24, 1912, entitled "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, and for other purposes," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913 (37 U. S. Stats., pp. 518-520), and under the terms of said appropriation of $15,000, is hereby reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 13, to insert:

Capitol Building: For work at Capitol and for general repairs thereof, including flags for the east and west fronts of the center of the Capitol and for Senate and House Office Buildings; flagstaves, halyards, and tackle, wages of mechanics and laborers; purchase, maintenance, and driving of office vehicle, and not exceeding $100 for the purchase of technical and necessary reference books and city directory, $1,650.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Justice," on page 29, after line 22, to insert:

Office of the Attorney General: For salary of the Assistant to the Attorney General, which is hereby fixed at the rate of $9,600 per annum; in addition to the $7,000 heretofore appropriated, for the balance of the fiscal year 1914, $1,950, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. This is evidently an increase of the salary of this official. I want to know what the demand for it was. I assume it is legislation on an appropriation bill and subject to a point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Attorney General came before the committee and said this is a very valuable man, and that he could make a good deal more money practicing in New York City, but he brought him here and he thought his salary ought to be increased. The House committee allowed $9,600, and it went out on a point of order in the House. We inserted it in the bill upon the recommendation of the Attorney General.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is there any particular significance in the figures $9,600 instead of $10,000?

Mr. OVERMAN. Twelve times 8 are 96.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know why we should not make it a salary in round numbers.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator that this position is the most important in the Department of Justice and it is next to that of the Attorney General. This is his main assistant, his main reliance, and he needs a first-class lawyer. I do not think the compensation is any too high.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am acquainted with the name of the gentleman and I voted to confirm him; I think he is a very excellent gentleman; but the salary was $7,000 when he took the office, and I wanted to know what the emergency is which requires an increase in this emergency appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is very hard to get a man at that salary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It was not hard to get him.

Mr. OVERMAN. He could not keep a man at $7,000 in this position, as the Senator from Minnesota said.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is the gentleman threatening to resign?

Mr. OVERMAN. I have not heard that he is.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. He did not accept the position with the understanding that the salary would be raised?

Mr. OVERMAN. I expect the Attorney General brought him here at his special request. He says he is a good man.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. He has been here for some time. He is a very competent gentleman. I shall not make a point of order against it. I wanted simply—

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not know that the Senator was a cheap-john man before. I thought he was pretty liberal.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am liberal. I am so liberal about it that I shall not make the point of order which I think would lie if made. I simply wanted a frank statement of what the intention was and what there is about the amendment, which I now have.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 3, to insert:

For two charwomen, at the rate of $240 each per annum, for the balance of the fiscal year 1914, $360, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 9, to insert:

For furniture and repairs, including carpets, file holders, and cases, for the fiscal year 1914, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 12, to insert:

For miscellaneous expenditures, including telegraphing, fuel, lights, foreign postage, labor, repairs of buildings, care of grounds, books of reference, periodicals, typewriters and adding machines and exchange of same, street car tickets not exceeding $200, and other necessities directly ordered by the Attorney General, for the fiscal year 1914, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 19, to insert:

For rent of buildings and parts of buildings in the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1914, $6,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 19, to insert:

Enforcement of antitrust laws: For the enforcement of antitrust laws, for the fiscal year 1913, $8,540.26.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 22, to insert:

For the enforcement of antitrust laws, for the fiscal years 1910 and 1911, $947.98.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill to line 18, page 32, subhead "Commerce Court."

Mr. OVERMAN. There will probably be some debate on that part of the bill. I ask that all that follows from line 18, page 32, down to and including line 12, on page 40, be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless there is objection it will be so ordered.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill to line 13, page 40.

The next amendment was, under the head of "United States courts," on page 40, after line 20, to insert:

The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to allow in the accounts of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut amounts paid by him from the appropriation pay of bailiffs, etc., United States courts, 1912, to Selah G. Blakeman, $192, and from the appropriation pay of bailiffs, United States courts, 1913, to Selah G. Blakeman, $363, and to Timothy E. Hawley, $513, notwithstanding the fact that said payees also served and received compensation as field deputy United States marshals.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to have printed in the RECORD, so that it may show the reason for the amendment, the report made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] from the Judiciary Committee. I will not, however, ask to encumber the RECORD with it. I will simply cite here that it may appear in the RECORD that the reasons for the amendment appear in communications from the Department of Justice and the report made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] from the Judiciary Committee, on pages 1734 and 1735 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the present session, under date of May 26, 1913.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 6, to insert:

For payment of assistants to the Attorney General and to United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney General to aid in special cases, for the fiscal years 1913 and 1914, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Postal Service," subhead "Out of the postal revenues," on page 43, line 24, after the words "nineteen hundred and fourteen," to insert "except for such purposes as the appropriations under the Supervising Architect may be available," so as to make the clause read:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation of $750,000 made by the general deficiency appropriation act, approved March 4, 1913, not exceeding $15,000, for the Parcel Post Service for the fiscal year 1913 is reappropriated and made available for the same purpose for the fiscal year 1914 except for such purposes as the appropriations under the Supervising Architect may be available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Commerce," subhead "Bureau of Fisheries," on page 45, after line 8, to insert:

Fish pathologist, Division of Inquiry, for the balance of the fiscal year 1914, at the rate of $2,500 per annum, $1,875, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 17, to insert:

OFFICIAL REGISTER OF THE UNITED STATES.

Hereafter the Official Register of the United States shall not contain the names of those persons heretofore published in Volume II relating to the postal service, namely, postmasters, assistant postmasters, clerks in post offices, city and rural carriers, employees of the sea-post service, employees of the Railway Mail Service, employees of the mail messenger service, and mail contractors; nor shall it contain the statement of allowances made to contractors for carrying the mails or the list of ships and vessels belonging to the United States, as heretofore published in the said Official Register; and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the foregoing provision are hereby repealed.

Mr. BURTON. For information I should like to inquire about this amendment. Is the publication of the names discontinued because the book is made so voluminous? Is that the reason?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is published in another place. There is no need of it. It would be a saving to the United States Government, I think, of some $25,000.

Mr. BURTON. In what other place are the names published?

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a letter here from the Postmaster General, which is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., October 1, 1913.

Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. MARTIN: The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD indicates that my letter of September 19 to the Joint Committee on Printing, wherein I recommend the discontinuance of volume 2 of the Official Register, relating to the postal service, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations for consideration in connection with the pending deficiency appropriation. I trust that the department will be authorized at an early date not to prepare the data for this book, inasmuch as under the existing law the information must be compiled for submission to Congress early in December, and work thereon should be started in the near future. As previous correspondence shows, the compilation of this book involves a cost to the Government of from $20,000 to $25,000, for which no benefit accrues, so far as this department is concerned.

Very sincerely, yours,

A. S. BURLISON,
Postmaster General.

Mr. BURTON. What publication, do I understand, is submitted to Congress which gives those names? That would be a very voluminous publication.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is familiar with the Blue Book.

Mr. BURTON. Yes. The second volume contains the names of postal employees.

Mr. OVERMAN. We do not need it now, because everything is under the civil service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 4, to insert:

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey may be reimbursed for food, clothing, medicines, and other supplies furnished for the temporary relief of distressed persons in remote localities and to shipwrecked persons temporarily provided for by them, not to exceed $500 per annum, from the appropriation for field expenses, Coast and Geodetic Survey.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 8, after the words "mark the," to strike out "dredged channel at or near the west end of the draw near the Lehigh Valley Railroad bridge in Newark Bay, N. J.," and insert "channel in Newark Bay, N. J.," so as to make the clause read:

Beacon lights, Newark Bay, N. J.: The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to use the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $15,000, made by the act approved March 4, 1907 (34 Stat., p. 1318), "For light and fog-signal station at or near the west end of the draw near the Lehigh Valley Railroad bridge at Passaic, N. J.," for establishing beacon lights to mark the channel in Newark Bay, N. J.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of Labor," on page 51, line 4, after the words "nineteen hundred and fourteen," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000," so as to make the clause read:

Contingent expenses: For additional amounts for contingent and miscellaneous expenses for the offices and bureaus of the Department of Labor, to be available for the objects named in the appropriation for contingent expenses for the Department of Commerce and Labor, contained in the act approved March 4, 1913, and for all other miscellaneous items and necessary expenses not included therein, fiscal year 1914, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 12, after the words "Department of Labor," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$25,000" so as to make the clause read.

Commissioners of conciliation: To pay the expenses of commissioners of conciliation in labor disputes, whenever appointed in pursuance to section 8 of the act creating the Department of Labor, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Legislative," on page 53, after line 16, to insert:

For investigating and reporting to Congress a suitable design for a memorial bridge across the Potomac River from the city of Washington to a point at or near the Arlington estate in the State of Virginia by the commission authorized pursuant to section 23 of the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913, $25,000, to be disbursed one-half by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, on vouchers approved by the member of the commission designated by it to consider and approve vouchers for its expenditures.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 2, to insert:

For additional members of the Capitol police force for the balance of the fiscal year 1914, as follows: One lieutenant, at the rate of $1,200 per annum; and 20 privates, at the rate of $1,050 each per annum; one-half of said privates to be selected by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and one-half by the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives; in all, $16,650, or so much thereof as may be necessary, one half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and the other half to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 12, to insert:

SENATE.

To pay Mrs. Carrie B. Sherman, widow of Hon. James S. Sherman, late Vice President, United States, $12,000, being a sum equal to one year's salary as Vice President.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 17, to insert: To pay Therese Hooper Johnston, widow of the late Senator Joseph F. Johnston, from the State of Alabama, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, after line 20, to insert:

For 23 stenographers to Senators, from December 1, 1913, to June 30, 1914, both dates inclusive, at the rate of $1,200 per annum each, for Senators having less than three employees in connection with their official work, $16,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 55, to insert:

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $19,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 2, to insert:

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers to committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 6, to insert:

To reimburse the official reporters of the proceedings and debates of the Senate for expenses incurred from March 4 to September 15, 1913, for clerk hire and other extra clerical services, $3,150.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 10, to insert:

For purchase of an automobile, including driving, maintenance, and care of the same, for the use of the Vice President, for the fiscal year 1914, $7,000.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee how many automobiles are provided for the Vice President?

Mr. OVERMAN. Only one.

Mr. VARDAMAN. He has one.

Mr. OVERMAN. He has one and it is worn out. It is the one that was given to Vice President Sherman. I will state that the amount appropriated before for an automobile was $7,000. That automobile is worn out, and we appropriate the same amount now that was appropriated before.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Only one is provided?

Mr. OVERMAN. Only one.

Mr. GRONNA. I may have misunderstood the Senator from North Carolina. Did I understand the Senator to say that the price of the automobile will be $7,000?

Mr. OVERMAN. There was an appropriation some years ago for an automobile for the Vice President. The automobile is about worn out. We are giving the Vice President the same amount that was given to the former Vice President, including the driving and the maintenance and the care of the automobile, $7,000.

Mr. GRONNA. So this appropriation is not simply for the automobile?

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. GRONNA. But it is for the service?

Mr. OVERMAN. It includes the driving, maintenance, and care of the automobile.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 55, after line 14, to insert:

For purchase and maintenance of motor vehicles for carrying the mails, $4,000, for the fiscal year 1914: Provided, That the unexpended balance of the appropriation for expenses of maintaining and equipping horses and mail wagons for carrying the mails for the fiscal year 1914 is hereby made available for maintaining and equipping motor vehicles.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 21, to insert:

For rent of warehouse for storage of public documents for the Senate for the balance of the fiscal year 1914, $2,700.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to have some explanation of that amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. That item has been appropriated for ever since I have been on the Appropriations Committee, but the appropriation has generally been $3,600. The House at the last session refused to agree to that amount, stating that our documents ought to be put over in the Senate Office Building. I investigated the matter and found that we had thousands and indeed hundreds of thousands of documents stored there and that it was impossible to remove them. There was a resolution passed authorizing them to be catalogued and allowing each Senator within six months to select as many of such documents as he might wish. Those remaining were to be sold as waste paper. We hope that finally the documents which may be of use may be removed to the Senate Office Building.

Mr. NELSON. Where is this warehouse located?

Mr. OVERMAN. This warehouse is at the foot of Capitol Hill. It is the old car barn. We have had it for about 20 years.

Mr. NELSON. Is this appropriation to provide for one year's rent?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is for the balance of the year.

Mr. NELSON. That is an enormous amount of rental for that old building. I do not believe that any private parties would pay so much rent for it.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is too much; but what are we going to do? Where are you going to put these documents? We can not get the building any cheaper. We want these documents sold as waste paper as soon as Senators shall make their selections of such documents as they desire; documents that are of recent publication will be taken care of, we hope, in some other building.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I had a suspicion when I arose that the building referred to was that old car barn which we have heard of before. I do not know what they would do with that car barn if they did not have the Government to rent it.

Mr. BORAH. That is not the only building that would be unfortunate in that regard.

Mr. BURTON. Have the six months in which Senators may make their selections yet expired?

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. BURTON. When does the time expire?

Mr. OVERMAN. The catalogue was issued about 60 days ago, I think.

Mr. BURTON. Is that a rare collection of documents?

Mr. OVERMAN. A copy of the catalogue has been sent to the Senator's office, I hope.

Mr. BURTON. Is it a rare collection of books and documents?

Mr. OVERMAN. There are many old documents there that the Senator might desire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 56, to insert:

Senate Office Building: For maintenance, miscellaneous items and supplies, and for all necessary personal and other services for the care and operation of the Senate Office Building, under the direction and supervision of the Senate Committee on Rules, $1,750.

Mr. NELSON. I inquire whether that provision, in the view of the Appropriations Committee, will put the Senate Office Building under the control of the Committee on Rules of the Senate? I think it ought to be under the control of that committee and not under the control of the Interior Department. Will that amendment put it under the control of the Senate?

Mr. OVERMAN. I fully agree with the Senator from Minnesota, and I advocated that two years ago, but the Senate refused to take that action. This is only $1,750, to be spent under the direction of the Committee on Rules of the Senate as to changing matters and as to the force to be used there; but the building itself is under the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. NELSON. It seems to me the building ought to be under the control of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator from Minnesota as to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead, "House of Representatives," on page 56, after line 12, to insert:

To pay the widow of S. A. RODDENBERRY, late a Representative from the State of Georgia, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Government Printing Office," on page 58, line 1, after the word "Washington," to insert "fiscal year 1914," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Public Printer to meet the additional operating expense made necessary by reason of handling and disposing of the waste paper from the various departments of the Government in Washington, fiscal year 1914, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judgments, Court of Claims," on page 58, line 15, after the words "One hundred and fifty-six," to insert "and Senate Document No. 195," so as to read:

For the payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, reported to Congress at its present session in House Document No. 156, and Senate Document No. 195, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 18, after the words "War Department," to strike out "$82,869.89," and insert "$89,114.52," so as to read:

Under War Department, $89,114.52.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 20, after the words "In all," to strike out "$86,358.22" and insert "$92,602.85"; so as to read:

In all, $92,602.85.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Claims allowed by the Auditor for the Interior Department," on page 66, after line 6, to insert as a new section the following:

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. We will now recur to page 32, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill at the point indicated by the Senator from North Carolina.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, on page 32, beginning in line 18, and read as follows:

Commerce Court: For expenses of the Commerce Court during the first half of the fiscal year 1914, namely: clerk, at the rate of $4,000 per annum; deputy clerk, at the rate of $2,500 per annum; marshal, at the rate of $3,000 per annum; deputy marshal, at the rate of $2,500 per annum; for rent of necessary quarters in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, and furnishing same for the Commerce Court; for books, periodicals, stationery, printing, and binding; for pay of bailiffs and all other necessary employees at the seat of government and elsewhere, not otherwise specifically provided for, and for such other miscellaneous expenses as may be approved by the presiding judge, $17,500; in all, $23,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The Commerce Court, created and established by the act entitled "An act to create a Commerce Court and to amend the act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as heretofore amended, and for other purposes," approved June 18, 1910, is abolished from and after December 31, 1913, and the jurisdiction vested in said Commerce Court by said act is transferred to and vested in the several district courts of the United States, and all acts or parts of acts in so far as they relate to the establishment of the Commerce Court are repealed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, at that point I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think the entire section should be read, and then probably we can take a vote on it. Then the Senator from Montana can offer his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call attention to the fact that there is a committee amendment that should be first acted on.

Mr. WALSH. The committee amendment is within the portion of the bill which my amendment proposes to strike from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the committee has a right to perfect the text of the bill before an amendment is offered to it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest that the whole paragraph be read.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading, as follows:

The five additional circuit judgeships provided for by the act of Congress approved June 18, 1910, and by chapter 9 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, are hereby abolished.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 33, line 24, after the word "abolished," to insert "effective December 31, 1913."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, in the amendment which has just been read I want to move to strike out, commencing with the words—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will withhold his amendment for a moment. The amendment has not been acted on. Has the Senator from Minnesota any objection to the amendment that has been read? The Secretary has not completed the reading of the paragraph.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to that being done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. The provision relating to the Commerce Court beginning on page 32, line 18, makes appropriation for the first half of the fiscal year of 1914. That would be until June 30, 1914, while the amendment reported by the committee seeks to repeal the law providing for the court to be effective December 31, 1913. What is the reason why there should be a difference in these two provisions? The House of Representatives, though seeking to abolish the court and to repeal the law for the appointment of the judges, left them in office until June 30, 1914, apparently, while the Senate committee amendment continues the court without the judges.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is correct about that. I had not noticed that there was a little inconsistency. The appropriation for the expenses of the Commerce Court during the first half of the fiscal year 1914 carries that court, of course, until July next, but the Commerce Court is abolished to take effect on the 31st of December, 1913. We will have, therefore, an appropriation for six months that can not be used; but if the Senate should adopt this provision, we could make the change necessary in the paragraph after it is adopted.

Mr. BURTON. The best way to harmonize that is to vote down the Senate amendment and agree to the provision as it came from the House. It is summary enough in any event.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, before we dispose of this entire section it seems to me there are two important questions that should first be determined: First, whether we shall abolish the Commerce Court, and, second, whether we shall abolish the judges. I am in favor of abolishing the court, but I doubt our right to abolish the judges, and I do not believe in legislating them out of office. Therefore I shall move, either now or whenever it suits the convenience of the Senator who has the bill in charge, to strike out all of the first paragraph commencing after the word "repealed" in line 18, page 33, down to and including the end of line 12, on the next page; in other words, all that part of the bill which eliminates the judges. I will either make the motion now or subsequently, to suit the convenience of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I would prefer that the Senator should make his motion after the reading of the paragraph is concluded.

Mr. NELSON. Very well.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] that my attention has been called to the fact that both he and I are probably in error in regard to the application of the appropriation for the first half of the fiscal year 1914. The provision reads:

For expenses of the Commerce Court during the first half of the fiscal year 1914—

Which would be to December 31, 1913.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment inserting the words "effective December 31, 1913," on page 33, line 24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 34, line 11, after the word "repealed," to insert "effective December 31, 1913," so as to read:

And the authority in said acts of Congress for the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint 5 additional circuit judges is hereby repealed, and the number of circuit judges is hereby reduced to 29. So much of the acts of June 18, 1910, and of March 3, 1911, as authorize or direct the said 5 judges to preside in the circuit or district courts of the United States or in the circuit courts of appeals or to exercise any of the powers, duties, or authority of circuit or district judges, or of said circuit or district courts or of said circuit courts of appeals, is hereby repealed, effective December 31, 1913.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator in charge of the bill desires to complete the reading relating to this subject before we take it up for discussion?

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to complete the reading of the whole paragraph and have the committee amendments disposed of where they are unobjectionable before we take up the paragraph and discuss it.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning with line 13, on page 34, and the Secretary read as follows:

The venue of any suit hereafter brought to enforce, suspend, or set aside, in whole or in part, any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be in the judicial district where some or all of the transportation covered by the order has either its origin or destination, except that where the order does not relate to transportation the venue shall be in the district where the matter complained of in the petition before the commission arises, and except that where the order does not relate either to transportation or to a matter so complained of before the commission the matter covered by the order shall be deemed to arise in the district where one of the petitioners in court has either its principal office or its principal operating office. In case such transportation relates to a through shipment the term "destination" shall be construed as meaning final destination of such shipment.

The procedure in the district courts in respect to cases of which jurisdiction is conferred upon them by this act shall be the same as that heretofore prevailing in the Commerce Court. The orders, writs, and processes of the district courts may in these cases run, be served, and be returnable anywhere in the United States; and the right of appeal from the district courts in such cases shall be the same as the right of appeal heretofore prevailing under existing law from the Commerce Court.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 35, after the words "Commerce Court," in line 12, to strike out:

No preliminary injunction, or restraining or stay order, suspending the enforcement, operation, or execution of, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any order made or entered by the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be issued or granted by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a circuit judge, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur in granting such application. When such application as aforesaid is presented to a judge he shall immediately call to his assistance to hear and determine the application two other judges. Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least five days' notice of the hearing has been given to the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the Attorney General of the United States, and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit. The hearing upon such application shall be given precedence, and shall be in every way expedited and be assigned for a hearing at the earliest practicable day after the expiration of the notice hereinbefore provided for. An appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States from the order granting, after notice and hearing, a preliminary injunction, or restraining or stay order, in such case if such appeal be taken within 30 days after such preliminary injunction or restraining order or stay order is granted and upon the final hearing of any suit brought to suspend or set aside, in whole or in part, any order of said commission the same requirement as to judges and the same procedure as to expedition and appeal shall apply.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of, or setting aside, in whole or in part, any order made or entered by the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be issued or granted by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a circuit judge, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur in granting such application. When such application as aforesaid is presented to a judge he shall immediately call to his assistance to hear and determine the application two other judges. Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least five days' notice of the hearing has been given to the Interstate Commerce Commission, to the Attorney General of the United States, and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit: Provided, That if of opinion that irreparable loss or damage would result to the complainant unless a temporary restraining order is granted, any justice of the Supreme Court or any circuit or district judge may grant such temporary restraining order at any time before such hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction, but such temporary restraining order shall remain in force only until the hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction upon notice as aforesaid. The hearing upon such application for an interlocutory injunction shall be given precedence and shall be in every way expedited and be assigned for a hearing at the earliest practicable day after the expiration of the notice hereinbefore provided for. An appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States from the order granting or denying, after notice and hearing, an interlocutory injunction, in such case if such appeal be taken within 30 days after the order, in respect to which complaint is made, is granted or refused; and upon the final hearing of any suit brought to suspend or set aside, in whole or in part, any order of said commission the same requirement as to judges and the same procedure as to expedition and appeal shall apply.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I rise to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill concerning this proposed amendment. I notice that it was suggested in the course of the hearings that the provision found in the bill when it came to the Senate so operated as to affect, if not to nullify, the existing general provision in relation to the issuance of injunctions. What is the fact about that?

Mr. OVERMAN. The fact is that the committee, as nearly as possible, have incorporated section 266 of the Judicial Code as it now is in regard to interlocutory injunctions.

Mr. WALSH. That is to say, you have made that provision in section 266 applicable to injunctions to restrain the execution of orders?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, exactly; as nearly as possible.

Mr. WALSH. In what way, then, could it be contended that it repeals or annuls the provisions of section 266?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not understand that it is contended that it is a repeal of section 266.

Mr. WALSH. That contention was made before your committee, was it not?

Mr. OVERMAN. Not that the provision in regard to a preliminary hearing repealed it, but that it was in opposition to section 266. In regard to other matters it would be in the nature of a repeal. Of course, the words "preliminary injunction," as used in the House provision, are not used in section 266. Section 266 relates to interlocutory injunctions, and the House provision covered preliminary injunctions, using those words.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, that criticism, I will say to the Senator from Montana, was directed against the House provision.

Mr. WALSH. In what respect is there a difference? Why was the House language changed and the language found in the amendment substituted?

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator will find, on line 14 of page 36—

Mr. BORAH. We can not quite hear on this side.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not rise to address an inquiry to the Senator from Montana, but to ask a question of the Senator in charge of the bill regarding another provision in this same amendment. I thought the Senator from Montana had concluded when I addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRYAN. I was trying to say, Mr. President, that the provision as it came from the House gave no right of appeal if an order was denied, and it was contended that in that way section 266 of the Judicial Code would be very greatly changed. Again, the House provision modified section 266 in that one judge could not grant a preliminary injunction until three judges could be gotten together. So the committee restored the provisions contained in section 266 of the Judicial Code.

Mr. WALSH. And that provision commences in line 10, page 37?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. So that it is now in entire conformity, by the amendment proposed, with the provisions of section 266?

Mr. BRYAN. We think so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the proposed amendment makes important changes in the existing law with respect to the granting of interlocutory injunctions and temporary restraining orders. I wish to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill whether the Interstate Commerce Commission, or any member of that commission, has been consulted with regard to the important changes which this provision makes in the existing law?

Mr. OVERMAN. We do not understand that it makes any changes at all, except to allow an appeal in case of the denial of as well as the granting of an injunction.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The existing law provides that no temporary injunction restraining any order of the commission can be granted without notice to the commission. This provision permits the granting of a temporary injunction without any notice to the commission. That is a very important and material change.

Mr. OVERMAN. Our attention was not called to that. I will say frankly to the Senator that this is the provision contained in section 266 of the Judicial Code as it applies to injunctions and to matters where the constitutionality of a State statute is involved.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the provisions of the interstate-commerce act regarding interlocutory injunctions and restraining orders have been the subject of very extended discussion in the Senate. I remember when the act of 1903 was before the Senate that provision was discussed here for weeks, and I do not believe that this body ought to seek to make applicable to this important and special proceeding the general provisions of law.

I have called the Interstate Commerce Commission on the telephone, and I am authorized to say for the chairman of the commission, to whose attention this contemplated change in the law has just been called for the first time, that upon a hasty conference of the commission they regard these changes as serious and very prejudicial to the work of the commission.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I entirely agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that this is an exceedingly important question. I have been looking over, as best I could while the debate has been going on, the provisions as to several points.

As to the particular point the Senator has just suggested, that the amendment does not provide for notice to the Interstate Commerce Commission of a pending application, I am somewhat confused as to the particular part of the bill from which he thinks that provision is absent. I notice that on page 37, in line 6, it provides:

Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least five days' notice of the hearing has been given to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That does not refer to temporary injunctions.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is what I wanted to get in mind.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will look at the language of the proviso that immediately follows that, beginning in line 10, he will see that the amendment as framed would permit the granting of a temporary injunction without any notice whatever.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Just a moment, if the Senator will pardon me.

I have in my hand a compilation of the various acts to regulate commerce revised to July 1, 1911, since which time I am confident that no change has been made in this particular provision of the law. The provision with regard to notice for temporary injunctions is as follows. I read from page 44 of this compilation, section 3, of the act of 1910, which the Senator will remember:

No order or injunction so restraining or suspending an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be made by the Commerce Court otherwise than upon notice and after hearing, except that in cases where irreparable damage would otherwise ensue to the petitioner, said court, or a judge thereof, may, on hearing, after not less than three days' notice to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Attorney General, allow a temporary stay or suspension in whole or in part of the operation of the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission for not more than 60 days from the date of the order of such court or judge, pending application to the court for its order or injunction, in which case the said order shall contain a specific finding, based upon evidence submitted to the judge making the order and identified by reference thereto, that such irreparable damage would result to the petitioner and specifying the nature of the damage. The court may, at the time of hearing such application, upon a like finding, continue the temporary stay or suspension in whole or in part until its decision upon the application.

There is provision also for requiring notice of five days in case of application for an interlocutory injunction or a restraining order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose we add that here, then, and I shall not object to it. I intended to cover the point just as the Senator does.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have dictated an amendment to this provision which is now being prepared.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will look at section 266, he will see that this is the same as that section; but that is in regard to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Therefore I should like to have it inserted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will have the language before me in just a moment.

There is another change in the law to which I think the attention of the Senate should be called. I beg the pardon of the Senator from Idaho. I intended to yield to him when I had finished answering the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BORAH. I hope the Senator will proceed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was about to say that under the terms of the proposed amendment, the temporary injunction or restraining order "shall remain in force," to quote the language of the proposed amendment, "only until the hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction upon notice as aforesaid." That language is very indefinite. It takes the place of definite limitations upon such temporary injunctions provided in the existing law. It has been followed, however, by the expediting provision, which is intended to take the place, I assume, of the 60-day limitation of the existing law. The temporary injunction can be maintained, under existing law, for only 60 days. Under the pending provision if it becomes the law it may be maintained indefinitely. If the hearing upon the interlocutory order be postponed from time to time, and postponed indefinitely, then the temporary injunction granted without notice might be continued indefinitely. I think this is a very important and serious modification of the existing law.

Mr. OVERMAN. The amendment says that the temporary restraining order shall remain in force only until it is heard and determined, and that they shall call in at the earliest practicable moment three judges to determine it. Does the Senator contend that these judges might continue it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is my contention that upon applications many delays may occur. We all understand perfectly well how those cases are managed. They are strung along sometimes for a year or two, while the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which prima facie is right and ought to go into effect at once, is suspended, awaiting the long-delayed court proceeding. It was because Congress desired to make it impossible to delay these cases indefinitely that there was inserted in the act of 1910 the provision that when a temporary injunctive order was secured it must be determined and disposed of within 60 days.

Mr. KERN. Has the Senator the language of the act here?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have the act here.

Mr. KERN. What is the language?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have dictated an amendment to this provision. I will ask that this provision may be passed over for the present.

Mr. OVERMAN. We are in full accord with each other in regard to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; I think that is perfectly true.

Mr. OVERMAN. It may be just as the Senator prefers about that. If he prefers to wait until his typewritten amendment comes in, that may be done.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I took a little pains to prepare an amendment on the subject. I have not that amendment with me now.

Mr. OVERMAN. We will pass this over, then, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be passed over for the present. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on page 38, line 7.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 38, line 12, after the words "existing law," to strike out "from the Commerce Court to the Supreme Court" and insert "in equity cases"; in line 24, after the words "district courts," to strike out "except" and insert "including," and in line 25, after the words "final decree," to insert "and all cases wherein injunctions or other orders or decrees, mandatory or otherwise, have been directed or entered prior to the abolition of the said court shall be transferred forthwith to said district courts, which shall have jurisdiction to proceed therewith and to enforce said injunctions, orders, or decrees," so as to read:

A final judgment or decree of the district court may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States if appeal to the Supreme Court be taken by an aggrieved party within 60 days after the entry of such final judgment or decree, and such appeals may be taken in like manner as appeals are taken under existing law in equity cases. The provisions of this section shall also apply to the issuing and granting of preliminary injunctions and restraining or stay orders suspending the enforcement, operation, or execution of, or setting aside, orders made by any administrative board or commission created by and acting under the statute of a State. And in such case the notice required shall be served upon the defendants in the case and upon the attorney general of the State. All cases pending in the Commerce Court at the date of the passage of this act shall be deemed pending in and be transferred forthwith to said district courts, including cases which may previously have been submitted to that court for final decree, and all cases wherein injunctions or other orders or decrees, mandatory or otherwise, have been directed or entered prior to the abolition of the said court shall be transferred forthwith to said district courts, which shall have jurisdiction to proceed therewith and to enforce said injunctions, orders, or decrees.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a further word of explanation. On page 38, line 14, is the following:

The provisions of this section shall also apply to the issuing and granting of preliminary injunctions and restraining or stay orders suspending the enforcement, operation, or execution of, or setting aside, orders made by any administrative board or commission created by and acting under the statute of a State.

That, as I understand, is the tenor and effect of the recent amendment adopted to section 266.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Crawford amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Why put it in here? It is the law.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think, really, its provisions are embodied in the amendment recommended by the committee on page 36.

Mr. WALSH. No; that part of the bill applies only to orders made by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This is a general provision, not referring to the Interstate Commerce Commission, but apparently is entirely inappropriate here. It has application to injunctions generally; not in any action brought to review any order made by the Interstate Commerce Commission at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is a House provision that the Senator is now reading.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly. The Senator will understand, of course, that the Interstate Commerce Commission makes no order suspending the enforcement, operation, or execution of any orders made by any administrative board under a stay.

Mr. OVERMAN. I see the point.

Mr. WALSH. Such an order as that would be made by one of the district courts in an action brought to restrain and enjoin the enforcement of such an order. This statute deals only with the review of orders made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the provision is entirely incongruous in this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Undoubtedly so; I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. The matter is now entirely covered in a way that seems to be satisfactory to everybody.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator is correct about it. It has no place in this bill. It is a House provision, and my attention had not been called to it; but I see it has nothing to do with injunctions in this matter.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, down to what point did the Senator from Montana deem it necessary to go?

Mr. WALSH. It will extend to the word "State," in line 21. It begins at line 14 and goes down to and includes the word "State," in line 21—the two sentences.

Mr. BORAH. I thought the Senator stopped at the word "State," in line 18. I was going to suggest that the next sentence seemed to be a part of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana move to strike out those words?

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out those sentences.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, beginning with line 14, it is proposed to strike out that line and all down to and including the word "State," in line 21, in the following words:

The provisions of this section shall also apply to the issuing and granting of preliminary injunctions and restraining or stay orders suspending the enforcement, operation, or execution of, or setting aside, orders made by any administrative board or commission created by and acting under the statute of a State. And in such case the notice required shall be served upon the defendants in the case and upon the attorney general of the State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 39, line 14, before the word "days," to strike out "ten," and insert "thirty," and in line 21, after the words "district courts," to insert "All administrative books, dockets, files, and all papers of the Commerce Court not transferred as part of the record of any particular case shall be lodged in the Department of Justice," so as to read:

Each of said cases and all the records, papers, and proceedings shall be transferred to the district court wherein it might have been filed at the time it was filed in the Commerce Court if this act had then been in effect; and if it might have been filed in any one of two or more district courts it shall be transferred to that one of said district courts which may be designated by the petitioner or petitioners in said case, or, upon failure of said petitioners to act in the premises within 30 days after the passage of this act, to such one of said district courts as may be designated by the judges of the Commerce Court. The judges of the Commerce Court shall have authority, and are hereby directed, to make any and all orders and to take any other action necessary to transfer as aforesaid the cases and all the records, papers, and proceedings then pending in the Commerce Court to said district courts. All administrative books, dockets, files, and all papers of the Commerce Court not transferred as part of the record of any particular case shall be lodged in the Department of Justice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, and read to and including line 12 on page 40.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that all amendments have been adopted except the amendment beginning on page 36.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On pages 36 and 37.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I assume that that does not preclude the adoption of an amendment which would abrogate any portion—

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all. These amendments are only perfecting the amendments of the committee and the little suggestions made by the Attorney General as to the House provisions, and we have stricken out on page 38, upon the motion of the Senator from Montana, lines 14 to 21. The only question remaining is upon the amendment beginning on page 36 and extending to page 37. The Senator from Wisconsin is not here.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment that does not relate to the part referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin. I move to strike out all of the paragraph relating to the Commerce Court commencing on page 33 after the word "repealed," in line 18, and going down to and including line 12 on page 34.

Mr. LEWIS. May I beg to say to the Senator from Minnesota that I have prepared that amendment in writing? Does he care to accept it?

Mr. NELSON. It simply needs an amendment to strike it out. That is all it needs.

Mr. LEWIS. I will adopt the Senator's suggestion as to the course.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator please read the lines?

Mr. NELSON. I move to strike out the part of the paragraph commencing after the word "repealed," in line 18, page 33, and extending to the end of line 12 on the next page. It is that part of the paragraph which abolishes the judges. I will briefly state my reasons for making this motion.

While I am in favor of abolishing the Commerce Court and relegating the power of the court back to the respective district courts, I think it is unwise, and I think it is contrary to the spirit and the letter of the Constitution, to legislate these judges out of office.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this amendment is not exactly in order now, but inasmuch as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is absent, I am willing to take it up at this time.

Mr. NELSON. It does not relate to his amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all. But all amendments to this section, by unanimous consent, were to be deferred until after the committee amendments were perfected.

Mr. NELSON. We had finished the section, as I understood.

Mr. OVERMAN. We had finished it, but there is one section to be adopted. However, I have no objection to the Senator going on at this time.

Mr. NELSON. Under the act of 1910 creating the Commerce Court and amending the interstate-commerce law these judges were appointed. Here is the language relating to their appointment:

The President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint five additional circuit judges, no two of whom shall be from the same judicial circuit, who shall hold office during good behavior, and who shall be from time to time designated and assigned by the Chief Justice of the United States for service in the circuit court for any district, or the circuit court of appeals for any circuit, or in the Commerce Court.

So that these five judges are exactly on the same footing as other circuit judges; and although we may abolish the court, they remain in office, and can be assigned by the Supreme Court to work in the respective districts.

The other day I had a letter from Judge Sanborn, of the eighth circuit, which is one of the largest in the country, and I think has the most business. He said that the calendar in that circuit was crowded, and he was very anxious to detail one of these judges who belongs to that circuit for work on his circuit, and wanted to know whether the judges would remain in office. I did not know what answer to make to him, because I could not tell what course Congress would take.

It seems to me that as these are circuit judges of the United States, appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, so far as the tenure of office is concerned they are on exactly the same footing with the other circuit judges of the United States.

Section 1 of Article III of the Constitution reads as follows:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior.

That is the language of the Constitution. I think under the Constitution we have no more right to legislate out of office these five circuit judges than we have to legislate out of office other circuit judges of the country or the judges of the Supreme Court, although, perhaps, they are beyond our reach because they are constitutional judges.

I do not intend to enter into any lengthy discussion of this matter. Not only do I think that we have not the constitutional right, but certainly we have not the moral right to legislate these judges out of office.

I want to call attention to another matter, to show how unjustly this works. I happen to be well acquainted with one of these circuit judges—Judge Carland, a Democrat, appointed by President Cleveland as district judge in South Dakota. He was regarded by the bar of that State and by the bar in the eighth circuit as one of the leading, prominent, and able lawyers of the State. He was on the district court when he was appointed on this court. His position with that court gave him a life tenure—that is, during good behavior he could remain as district judge until he reached the period both as to age and service, when he could have retired. He was promoted from that district bench to this circuit bench on the Commerce Court. Now, to legislate him out of office, in his case it seems to me would be perpetrating a great wrong. I know Judge Carland well. He is an able, honest, and fearless man, and his services are needed very much in the eighth circuit. They have only three circuit judges there, and it is the greatest circuit, if not in territorial area, in business in the entire country.

Mr. President, while we may think this court ought to be abolished, and I certainly feel that it ought to be abolished, and while we may unite on that question, I think that our antipathy to this court ought not to go to the extent to legislate these judges out of office. I am not acquainted with the other members of this court; I do not know whether they are in the same condition as Judge Carland; but if they are, and perhaps some of them are, it would be a great injustice in their case.

Therefore, whatever else the Senate may do, if the Senate sees fit to adopt the provision abolishing the court, I sincerely trust that these judges will be left in office. I think that will be complying with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, and it would be nothing more than an act of justice.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I very cordially agree with the action taken by the House upon this subject. I do not think that the Commerce Court ought to be left in existence. I do not consider it in any sense an act of injustice to any man to abolish the office which he fills.

I can not conceive any property right in an office to any man or the propriety of any man filling an office except upon the theory that those outside the office are to be benefited by his occupying the office. Offices should only be created for the public good, and should only be continued for the public good. Each individual who is so fortunate as to be honored either by the votes of his people or by designation through the appointing power with office takes the office for public service, not for private benefit, and it is no injustice to him that he should give up the office just so soon as the public no longer need his services.

The Supreme Court of the United States has generally recognized that doctrine. The leading courts of the entire country now agree that there is no property right in an office, and there being no property right in the office it is no injustice to a man to say, "We need the office no longer, therefore you are not to be a public officeholder any longer."

Mr. President, I do not think we need these judges any longer with the Commerce Court abolished. Indeed, I object to their existence any longer after the court has been abolished. If we need additional circuit judges in any circuit court let them be named, let the acts of Congress be passed requiring additional circuit judges in those circuits, and let the judges be appointed from the circuits.

I object to four or five circuit court judges without a circuit perambulating over the country, coming into our circuit and holding our circuit courts, though they are from a distance. They are not men who would have received the support of the bar of our circuit or who could have obtained an appointment by the indorsement of the bar of the fifth circuit.

The remaining question to which I desire to direct my attention is the constitutional right of Congress to abolish these offices. We had a certain number of circuit courts. We had a certain number of circuit court judges. In my own circuit we had two circuit court judges. Congress in its wisdom concluded that there was needed in that circuit another circuit judge, and they created the office of third circuit court judge in that circuit.

Suppose Congress should conclude that only two circuit court judges were needed in that circuit; that only two offices of circuit court judge were required in that circuit. Could not Congress repeal the act which created the last circuit court judge, and, repealing the act, abolish this third office? What constitutional limitation is there that prevents Congress, which created this third circuit court judge in the fifth circuit, from abolishing the third circuit court judgeship in the fifth circuit?

Now, what Congress did in this particular instance was to create five additional offices of circuit court judge and place them in the Commerce Court. This bill proposes to repeal the act of creation and reduce the number of circuit court judges to the number we had before these last offices were created. The only provision of the Constitution which is cited to take from Congress the power here required is found, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] stated, in Article III, section 1, of the Constitution. It provides that—

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their office during good behavior.

The same clause of the Constitution which says that the judge of an inferior court is to hold his office during good behavior provides that Congress may establish and ordain inferior courts from time to time. It clearly was contemplated that the power of control over the courts so far as their existence, so far as their organization, so far as the number of judges to be found in the courts, was to be with Congress, and this power of creation was to be from time to time. It broadly gave the power of change, and to Congress was given the power to say what inferior courts we should have, how many judges should be upon them, changing, if Congress saw fit, the number of the judges, increasing the number if Congress saw fit, decreasing the number if Congress saw fit.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator pardon an interruption in line with what he is saying now?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is well to recall the fact that immediately prior to John Adams going out of the Presidency the Federalists created a lot of Federal judgeships—what were known, some of them, as midnight judges later on—and that the very first act of the very first Democratic Congress that ever existed in this country was to pass a law repealing that act and thereby abolishing those courts.

Mr. LEWIS. Let me ask my friend if they ever abolished them? I am not very clear on that point, and I ask my friend did those judges ever qualify and take office in that case? I was never myself quite certain of the fact; and in that, I think, lies the test of the application of that instance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. These were abolished. There were a lot of them appointed at the same time whose commission had been signed but whose commission had not been delivered. Mr. Jefferson took the position with regard to them—and they are in the Senator's mind—that as long as the commission had not been delivered they had not been appointed at all. But some of them had been appointed and the commission had been delivered, and in the case of those judges the Democratic Congress repealed the act creating them.

Now, I come to a little curious point of history, which I did not know myself until I was engaged in some other investigations and ran across it. James A. Bayard, of Delaware, was at that time the leader of the Federalist Party in the Senate under Jefferson's administration, and Alexander Hamilton wrote to him to know why they could not attack the constitutionality of that act. James A. Bayard wrote back to him. I came across his letter in making some investigation in connection with some lecture I was to deliver. Just at this minute I can not cite where the letter is to be found, but I have a note of it. Bayard said that he had talked the matter over with Chief Justice Marshall and that Marshall had said that the act was constitutional and could not be impeached. That was an opinion not from the bench, but in private conversation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thank the Senator for anticipating me by his remarks. I was coming to that historical feature as a part of my own remarks, and I had about reached it. He has presented it in that clear and most interesting way which he so often presents history to us.

Mr. President, what I was endeavoring to say was that the good-behavior tenure of the judges was in no sense inconsistent with the power of Congress from time to time to change these courts, and having established that proposition, there is no constitutional interference with our action.

The Senator from Mississippi has already pointed out to the Senate that early in the history of the Government the exact view I am taking was asserted by Mr. Jefferson and followed by Congress as to the appointees of President Adams who had received their commissions. The Senator says a part of them had received their commissions and a part of them had not. A part of them had actually become judges under the act approved by President Adams and a part of them had not. But Congress proceeded to abolish those circuit-court judgeships, those specific offices that had been created, those inferior courts that had been established, and with their abolition went out of office the men who had filled them, and they did not dare seek by legal procedure to enter a claim for salary. So, Mr. President, it seems to me that logically it is clear that power is with Congress.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask my very distinguished friend from Georgia a question? Do I gather your argument, then, as follows: If there be an inhibition in the Constitution against the removal of these judges after having assumed a life office, that inhibition is against the Executive removing them but not against Congress?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is an inhibition against removal from office while the office continues, but not a limitation upon the power of Congress to abolish the office itself. While that office continues, these men are entitled by good behavior to continue in office.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Georgia will pardon me, I do not think you can abolish the judge unless you abolish the district to which he was appointed. In other words, you can abolish the office, and that necessarily will carry an unpleasant consequence to the judge.

For myself I hope that the amendment which is offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] will be accepted. That amendment proposes simply to say that these district judgeships which were created shall not be abolished, but that as the entire vacancies occur their offices shall not be filled until the number of judges is reduced to the number before its creation. I have some doubt as to whether you have a right to abolish the judge unless you abolish the judgeship. I do not think you can abolish the judge that the Senator has spoken of as going to the third circuit, I think he said, unless you abolish that circuit.

You can abolish the Commerce Court, undoubtedly. That is the end of the Commerce Court. You could further, if you wanted, abolish any district court or any circuit court in the United States. There is nothing except the Supreme Court which is a constitutional judgeship. The balance of them are inferior judges created by Congress and to be changed by Congress from time to time as Congress may see fit.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. SHIELDS addressed the Chair.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I see the Senator from Idaho has risen.

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia has yielded first to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand the position of the Senator from Georgia, then, it is to the effect that Congress could, if it saw fit to do so, proceed to retire from office any judge lower than that of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I believe that any judgeship created by Congress can be abolished.

Mr. BORAH. Then it does seem that the fathers were a little unfortunate in their language, because the Constitution says judges both of the Supreme Court and inferior courts shall hold their office during good behavior, and so forth. The logic of the Senator's argument is to the effect that we could proceed to wipe out of existence the Federal courts entirely, except the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. LEWIS. Without regard to any behavior at all.

Mr. BORAH. Without regard to the question of behavior or anything else. It will not do to say that you can abolish the office and thereby abolish the judge, without considering the question of tenure fixed by the Constitution. The Constitution says that the judges of Supreme or inferior courts shall hold their office during good behavior, and then the Constitution provides the manner in which we shall determine their good behavior.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have no doubt of the power of Congress to abolish—

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like just to answer my friend from Idaho.

Mr. SHIELDS. The question I wish to ask is germane to that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Very well; I yield.

Mr. SHIELDS. Are not these judges created circuit judges of the United States, and not merely judges of the Commerce Court, which it is proposed to abolish, and has not the Chief Justice the authority to assign them to any circuit or to hold a circuit court of appeals?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. Or to hold a district court?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. Is their tenure of office in any way dependent upon the existence of the Commerce Court?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not entirely.

Mr. SHIELDS. Is it at all?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know that it is.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then is not a statute which removes them from office another mode of removing the judges when the Constitution provides that they can only be removed by impeachment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is not a mode of removing the judge. There is no office left, and therefore he does not hold it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

Mr. SHIELDS. Can he not be assigned to any district court in the United States? Can he not be assigned to any circuit court of appeals?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I answer the Senator that that act of Congress increased the number of judges, while this act of Congress decreases the number of judges. There is nothing in the Constitution that limits the power of Congress to increase or decrease the number of judges of the inferior courts. I take issue with the proposition that having once increased their number they must remain increased during the life of the incumbents.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia will not take the position which was taken by a distinguished adviser of the Interior Department here three or four years ago, that we can do anything that the Constitution does not prohibit. We can only do such things as the Constitution gives us power to do.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator sees nothing in the Constitution which prohibits us from doing so and so, but the Constitution says certain things, and it gives us no power to transcend them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are things that follow to Congress in national matters given generally by the Constitution. The power over the inferior judiciary is given squarely to Congress in this paragraph of the Constitution.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that these judges are not primarily judges of the Commerce Court; that the Commerce Court could be composed of any of the circuit judges of the United States. Let me quote from the statute creating the court. It provides that the Commerce Court shall be—

A court of record, and shall have a seal of such form and style as the court may prescribe. The said court shall be composed of five judges, to be from time to time designated and assigned thereto by the Chief Justice of the United States, from among the circuit judges of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am perfectly familiar with the statute.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that these five judges are no more judges of the Commerce Court than are the other circuit judges of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And I have never contended that they were.

Mr. NELSON. Now, while we are abolishing this court we would abolish the circuit courts of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; but we are abolishing these five additional circuit-court officers; that is what we mean to do. If the Senator will listen to me he will see that my argument is not predicated upon the fact that these judges are not circuit-court judges. I began my argument by calling attention to the fact that, as to the fifth circuit, recently an act of Congress was passed granting and adding three additional circuit-court judgeships for that circuit. I began my argument by taking the position that that act could be repealed and the number of circuit-court judges in the fifth circuit reduced to two. I deny that there is anything in the Constitution that limits the control of these inferior courts, which is given to Congress to be changed from time to time, which limits the power of Congress to increase or to decrease the number of judgeships of these courts. What I contend is that the power is in Congress to repeal the act adding these five additional circuit-court judgeships.

Mr. BORAH. Then, Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia will agree with me in this proposition, that we not only have the means of impeachment by which to remove these judges, but we can remove any judge of an inferior court of the United States that Congress sees fit to remove.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I do not agree with the Senator at all in that claim.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, we can abolish, for instance, a certain district, we can abolish the circuit, and if we abolish the district and the circuit, according to the argument of the Senator, that district or circuit judge goes out of existence. We can do all this without doing it in conformity with the provision relative to tenure.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. And all we have to do is to proceed around the circuits and close up at Washington, and all we have then got left is the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was not necessary to frame the Constitution upon the theory that Senators and Members of the other House would seek to accomplish by indirection what they could not do by direction. I deny that any Senator could in his place vote simply for the abolition of a particular circuit or of a particular district because his object was in that way simply to remove a judge. Such conduct would be highly improper; it would be violative of the spirit of the Constitution, if not of the oath that the Member took. But, Mr. President, I can not conceive that it is necessary to so write a constitution as to prevent Senators and Members of the other House in all instances from doing things that they might think it improper for them to do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will listen to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. But, Mr. President, the Senator says that he can not conceive of a Senator who would vote to abolish a particular judge or a particular district for the purpose of getting that particular party out of office; but this is purely a question of power. The Constitution is not framed upon the theory that we will be guided by this or that motive. We have the power provided we have the conscience to abolish all of these courts, according to the argument of the Senator. We are now arguing solely the question of power. Have we the power to terminate at pleasure, without hearing and without any reason, save our own volition, to terminate the office of every Federal judge, notwithstanding the express provision of the Constitution that they shall hold office during good behavior?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think Congress can abolish every circuit court of the United States if it sees fit, and thereby retire every occupant of the circuit-court bench.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. Then we come back to the proposition, Mr. President, that the country will be glad to know, in view of this urgent propaganda for the recall of judges, that they need not wait for the slow process of impeachment or recall, but that they can call upon their Senators and Representatives to eliminate any man from the bench that they want off the bench. They can simply abolish his circuit, get him out, and re-create the circuit.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I have no doubt of the fact that this constitutional provision which gives Congress the power from time to time to ordain and establish, as it sees fit, inferior court judgeships is not limited by the mere language that the occupant of the office shall have it during good behavior. The two must be construed together; they must be construed in the light of the fact that a man can have no vested right in an office, and that he therefore would only hold the office, if the office continued, during good behavior. I think that is a fair construction of the paragraph.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, suppose, if I may be permitted to again interrupt the Senator from Georgia, that instead of abolishing the court at this time, we had not concluded to do so until about 10 years from now, when no man serving upon the bench, according to the rotation, would have been one who would have been called into existence officially by reason of this act, but they would have rotated out of the regular circuit court offices into this court, then would the Senator say that by merely abolishing the court we abolish those judges that were not specifically called into existence officially by this act, but who had passed on to the circuit court to the performance simply of this duty?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It would be far more difficult to then handle the question than it now is, because it might be difficult to determine what judge would go out of office by abolishing a particular office; but where it is perfectly clear that a particular man still holds the particular office that we are abolishing there is no difficulty at all. When you abolish the office you get rid of the man.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Constitution does not provide the number of judges that shall constitute the Supreme Court. The Senator's position is, as I understand, that all circuit judges might be abolished. Does it follow that this Congress might practically abolish the Supreme Court by reducing the number of its membership to one?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, no.

Mr. SHIELDS. Well, what is there in the way of it? The Constitution merely provides that:

The judicial power of the United States, shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

There is nothing in the Constitution fixing the number of judges. Now, carrying out the Senator's idea, what is there in the way of this Congress passing an act to-day abolishing the Supreme Court by abolishing those now holding the office?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In the first place, the Supreme Court occupies an entirely different position from the inferior courts.

Mr. SHIELDS. As a court, but not as to the personnel. Those judges get their office in the same way as does the circuit judge. The Constitution merely says there shall be a Supreme Court. It does not provide the number of judges. It afterwards provides that the judges thereof shall be appointed, just as it provides that the judges of the circuit courts created by Congress shall be appointed. How, then, are you going to draw a distinction between them?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I answer, Mr. President, that the Supreme Court is a constitutional court, which puts it in a class by itself; that there is no provision in the Constitution that from time to time the Supreme Court shall be established and ordained just as Congress sees fit. It is in a different attitude from the inferior courts. The inferior courts are expressly put within the control of Congress, and Congress is expressly given authority as to them from time to time to change them as it sees fit. With that expressed declaration in the Constitution, coupled with the further proposition that a judge is to hold his office during good behavior, the only fair interpretation of the two is that Congress is to have the power to increase or to lessen the inferior courts as it sees fit. The judge is to hold his office during good behavior. Congress can take the office out from under him, because that power is expressly given to Congress; but if the office remains, he holds it during good behavior.

Senators can not escape that construction of this language by seeking to point out effects broader, perhaps, than they would wish to have follow such a construction. I simply stand upon the proposition that the two clauses construed together limit the tenure of office of the judge to the existence of the office itself.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to add my support to the amendment tendered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. I do not wish to disguise that I have a reason for that somewhat of a personal nature. My anxiety lies in the fact that I wish to maintain the present circuit judge who was appointed and assigned from Chicago, as the business of that circuit very much necessitates at this time assistance.

The provision, Mr. President, as it comes here to us from the House carries with it apparently the contention of the very able Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. If there be any one thing that would cause me to hesitate in feeling complete security in my own views upon any legal or constitutional question, it would be that the able Senator from Georgia held a variant opinion.

At the outset I am impressed with this thought—I may be in error, as my examination at this moment is a superficial one, my contemplation of it casual, and my observations not to be regarded as born of any fundamental reflection—but I have heretofore held the idea that when the circuit courts in this country were established there was in the mind of the creators a system of courts then existing in England, and that after that formation we copied, and after that design emulated. The judges of that system of courts, known as the King's bench, were appointed for life.

The power to remove for want of good behavior then rested in Parliament. Subsequently, after we, emulating the English system, had devised and established our courts, we made one change, allowing the question of good behavior to be primarily passed upon by the Executive by directing the resignation, if need be, of the official; but we still retained the spirit of the English system that the question of good behavior should be passed upon by Congress. I am, therefore, moved to this consideration—and I invite the attention of my distinguished friend from Georgia to it so that I may have the benefit of his views: Assuming that the Constitution of the United States is an expression conveying to the Federal Government the things it might do, having been conceded to it from the States, and adopting the other theory, which I feel is the school of my learned friend and my own, that only what the Federal Constitution commits to us can we do, and only by the method which it commits to us can we execute, I am advised within myself to the following conclusion: That where the Constitution provides that these judges shall be named by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and they are thus named, and then it is provided that they shall be removed by impeachment, and that they shall hold during their whole course of good behavior, I am inclined to the thought that the only removal provided by the Constitution is for want of good behavior, and that to be determined by impeachment. Is there any other method that my distinguished friend can see in the Constitution by which we could remove a judge under that clause?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I think that if the office is to continue and the purpose were to remove the judge from the office, leaving the office in existence, without changing in any way under the former part of the constitutional provision the inferior courts, then you must remove him from that existing inferior court by impeachment.

Mr. LEWIS. I think I see the distinction that the learned Senator has in his mind. He draws a very clear line between the abolishment of the court and the removal of the judge of the court. Am I right in that assumption?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. Well, no man who has reflected upon the creation of our institutions, the meaning of our Constitution and the casual construction it has obtained from the courts, can deny that there is great ground for that distinction. For myself I do not find it necessary to the object I have either to take issue with that view or to affirm it. I recognize it to be a question of such serious doubt that I am not able to see the wisdom of Congress entering into that path of what at least might be called embarrassment and great difficulty.

I have conferred with the Senator from Minnesota, and if there be any fault in his amendment I wish to take full blame for it, for I think it was prepared at my suggestion. My position is this: That since this court was established and since it does appear that there are great troubles arising now and then in different parts of the country growing out of disputations touching the decisions of the Interstate Commerce body, we need these judges. I think it would be wise that we abolish the court, because that seems to be the spirit of the people.

It is my clear judgment—and in this I am so convinced that nothing could move me—that, whenever the citizens of a free country lose their confidence in an established court, to maintain that court as an institution is a useless proceeding, because, once that confidence is gone, all respect for its adjudications is ended and the court loses its usefulness either to itself as a court or as an agency of welfare to the community which it assumes to serve. Since this seems to be the view concerning the Commerce Court located at Washington, I affirm the opinion of the people, as expressed by them in different branches and through different avenues, that the court should go. But it was not the character of all the judges which was asspersed; it was not the conduct of the men individually that was assailed; it was neither the want of capacity, as I understood, on the one hand nor their character on the other that called for this uniform condemnation; it was, rather, the assumption of jurisdiction and usurpation on the part of the court—a thing which the public mind was not willing to accept or indorse. The House of Representatives having expressed clearly the wish of the people in abolishing the court as a court, the question for us purely is, What should be the disposition of the judges?

I agree with my friend the distinguished Senator from Georgia that if these judges had no other office to perform than to serve as judges of the Commerce Court, then to abolish the court and not to abolish the judges would be something of frivolous conduct. The abolishment of one would necessarily entail, in good sense, the abolishment of the other. But as the Senator from Minnesota has clearly pointed out, and as all concede, since these judges are judges of the United States circuit courts, appointed to discharge the duties and functions of a circuit judge wherever they may be located, I hold it wise, in order that litigation may be promptly disposed of and there may be sufficient agencies to accomplish the relief of the people, that we continue the judges; and, instead of bringing the people here to Washington to the court, that we carry the court to the people where they are, and where their grievances exist, and have these judges assigned in the several localities from whence they came, that they may discharge the public business as circuit judges.

It is because of that view, without regard to the constitutional question raised by the eminent Senator from Georgia, that I wish to sustain and give my indorsement to the amendment tendered by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I cheerfully give my support to the amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota; but I am quite sure that without some further provision the act will be left in the greatest confusion, and the extent of the powers of the judges left very largely to speculation. Accordingly, simply for the purpose of making the matter more clear, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, and ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "repealed," in line 18, page 33, down to and including line 12, on page 34, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect the tenure of any of the judges now acting as circuit judges by appointment under the terms of said act, but such judges shall continue to act under assignment, as in the said act provided, as judges of the district courts and circuit courts of appeals; and in the event of and on the death, resignation, or removal from office of any of such judges his office is hereby abolished and no successor to him shall be appointed.

Mr. WALSH. It will be observed that by the amendment proposed by me the same language is excised from the bill as that referred to by the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota; but it simply adds that the judges shall continue to act as is now provided by law under assignment by the Chief Justice, as is directed by the existing act, and that when their offices become vacant by death, resignation, or removal they shall thereupon be abolished, and no successors shall be appointed.

I count it singularly unfortunate that the consideration of so important a matter as the abolition of a court or a system of courts should be thrust upon the Senate as a part of an appropriation bill, which of necessity must receive very hurried consideration in most of its features, and particularly that it should be a part of an urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, I ask for order in the Chamber. The Senator from Montana is discussing a very important proposition, and I for one should like to hear him.

Mr. WALSH. As I say, Mr. President, it is especially unfortunate that this provision should be part of an urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which by its very terms deals with matters that require speedy action.

If this matter were here for consideration as a separate measure I should feel disposed to speak at some length against the abolition of the Commerce Court or at least against reposing the important duties now devolving upon that court in the various district courts throughout the country. Although there may be other and better reasons for the action we are asked to take, we need not attempt to disguise the fact that the sentiment which is back of this provision is a sentiment of disappointment at and disapproval of the brief history of the court. The stoutest defender the court has is obliged to confess that it has indeed made a sorry record. But in abolishing the court we are obliged to consider the consequences. We ought to consider where the important cases now heard by the court shall be determined, and likewise to consider whether the substitute provision proposed will accomplish the results which are hoped for.

The bill provides that all cases over which the Commerce Court has jurisdiction shall go to the district courts of the country for determination. I desire presently to invite your attention to what I consider a dangerous provision of the bill in that respect; but I will remark in passing that these courts are now, as a general rule, overburdened. They usually have heavy calendars; and these important cases, all of which have a public aspect, must go upon those crowded calendars to await their disposition in due course of time, or else they must have a preference and thus crowd out the remainder of the business, public and private in its character, awaiting disposition before those courts.

Moreover, it must be borne in mind that the judges of the district courts were appointed by exactly the same officials, under exactly the same conditions, and subject to exactly the same influences, as the judges of the Commerce Court. How, then, can you expect substantially different results in those courts?

While I am speaking about that, let me call attention to another matter. The bill provides that these cases shall go for disposition to the various district courts of the country. It provides, further, that the venue of the action shall be in any district in which the transportation which is involved either originates or terminates.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have to ask for order. The Senator is debating a very important subject, and it is almost impossible to hear him.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to advise the Senator from Montana that his very excellent suggestion has been met. An amendment has been prepared by the committee to meet the very evil which is rightly being pointed out by him.

Mr. WALSH. It will be noted, Mr. President, that under the decision made by the Supreme Court the shipper is practically denied the right, whenever he is refused redress, to appeal to the court from the decision of the commission. Accordingly, in nearly every instance except when the carrier asks for a reduction in the rates or other relief, the appealing party is the carrier, and not the shipper. The appealing party is given the right under this bill to have a review of any adverse order in any district in which the shipment originates, or in that in which it has its termination.

To illustrate: A petition is filed concerning shipments made from the State of Washington to the State of Minnesota, and the decision is in favor of the petitioner, who resides in the State of Washington. The origin of the transportation is in the State of Washington; the destination is in the State of Minnesota. The decision is in favor of the shipper. The railroad company appeals to the court from the order of the commission. The railroad company is entitled to take its choice of instituting its suit either in the State of Minnesota or in the State of Washington. If, perchance, the State of Idaho, the State of Montana, or the State of North Dakota should choose to join with the State of Washington and ask for a reformation of the rates as they affect all shipments going into all these States, and the decision accords them the relief which they ask, the railroad company is entitled to take its choice of any one of the district courts of those States.

We can not fail to recognize that the railroad companies have their choice among judges, and they would not be actuated by the motives that ordinarily influence the action of men if they did not select the judge whom they thought most favorable to their contention.

But I pass that, because at this time I do not propose to urge the retention of this court. I believe, however, that it might be retained with good results, and other duties might be reposed on the court. For instance, the American Bar Association has repeatedly recommended the establishment of a patent court. We in the West have been for years asking for the establishment of a court for the trial of questions arising under the public-land laws, permitting appeals from the Department of the Interior. Such a court as that would be, as I think, of inestimable benefit to the country.

However that may be, it is suggested that these judges have not much of anything to do. But they do, as a matter of fact, serve upon the circuit and district benches, and they have performed very extensive service in that way. I find that the Attorney General submitted a statement in which he says as follows:

Judge Carland has participated in the decisions of 145 cases in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit during the past two years and has written 48 of these cases. He is now on his way to Denver to participate in the coming session of that court.

Judge Hunt sat in the circuit and district courts in Montana during part of December and all of January, 1912, and in the district court for Arizona during April, 1912, and in the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit during May, 1912, and May, 1913. He also held district court for the southern district of New York during November and December, 1912, February, 1913, and a part of January, 1913. He is now assigned to hear cases in the latter court during the coming months of October, November, and December.

And a similar statement is made with respect to Judge Mack.

I wish to say a word, however, in relation to the abolition of the judges. The bill recognizes that the judgeships would not be abolished by the abolition of the Commerce Court, and there is therefore incorporated in the bill a provision to which the amendment offered by the esteemed Senator from the State of Minnesota and that offered by myself are directed. There is a recognition in the bill that you do not abolish the judgeships by abolishing the Commerce Court, by reason of provisions in the act creating the Commerce Court, to which reference has been made, and which I shall not now detain you to repeat.

I insist, however, that the legality of this provision, this method of getting rid of obnoxious judges, is open to the most serious doubt upon constitutional grounds. I insist, in the second place, that it is eminently unjust and impolitic.

I am not one of those who believe that our system of appointment of judges of the Federal courts is perfect. Neither am I one of those who will claim that it is to be preferred over the system of electing judges for stated periods. This body did me the honor to publish as a public document, before I came here, an address which I delivered before the Bar Association of the State of Washington some two years ago upon the subject of the recall of judges, in which I took the position, in the first place, that this country has had just as good judges who have been chosen by the people for stated periods as those who have graced the Federal bench; likewise, that nothing has ever been asserted against the doctrine of recall of judges by a vote of the people that can not be equally urged against the system of electing judges in the first place. That, however, is aside from the matter before us.

In reaching a just conclusion on the question of the constitutionality of a measure of this kind we are obliged, whatever our own individual views on the system devised for us may be, to assume the attitude and the frame of mind of the men who prepared the Constitution of the United States. At that time the question of the independence of the judges of the appointing power was one which was acutely before the public mind, because of the abuses which had prevailed in England; and the independence of the judges was something which all parties at that time deemed of the very first consequence. The friends of the Constitution pointed to its provisions as guaranteeing the independence of the judges. The opponents of the Constitution pointed to other provisions which, they said, rendered more or less precarious the independence of the judges.

For instance, Patrick Henry insisted that there should be a provision that the salary of a judge should not be increased during his term of office as well as that it should not be diminished, that the judges might be even more secure in their independence. But now the question arises as to whether we have the right, under the Constitution, to abolish these judgeships, so as to cut short the terms of the incumbents.

The provisions of the Constitution have been read. By clause 9 of section 8 of the first article Congress is given power to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court, and by the first section of Article III it is provided that "the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." Then it continues that "the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts shall hold their offices during good behavior, and they shall receive at stated times for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office."

So, of course, there is no doubt in the world that Congress has the power to create courts inferior to the Supreme Court and to designate the number of judges thereof, and likewise that these provisions give to Congress the power to abolish those courts.

All the provisions of the Constitution are, however, to be taken into consideration, and although Congress has power to abolish any court which it creates it must do so in subordination to the other provision of the Constitution, which provides that the judges of the Supreme and the inferior courts as well shall hold their offices during good behavior. That provision had been construed often by the courts of England as signifying for life or until removed in the manner provided by the Constitution.

But, Mr. President, this is not a question strictly of the power of Congress to abolish the courts, because under the bill as it stands, and there is no amendment directed at that, the Commerce Court will be abolished. That is not the question. These judges are circuit judges, judges of the district courts, judges of the courts of appeals, and neither district courts nor circuit courts of appeals are to be abolished.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. It seems to me the last position taken by the Senator is unanswerable; but as to the other proposition I should like to inquire whether he thinks there can be such a thing as the incumbent of an office, the office itself having been abolished?

Mr. WALSH. I think not. The answer to that, however, is that if these judges were judges only of the Court of Commerce and you abolished that court there would be no doubt that they would fall with it. That is not the question, however, as I have indicated. We really do not encounter that interesting inquiry. The question is this: A certain number of district or circuit judges having been provided by law, and the judges having been appointed, is it within the power of Congress, without touching the court at all, to reduce the number of the members of the court and to designate who shall suffer by reason of the act?

The Senator from Georgia made a very persuasive argument in this connection and inquired whether it would not be possible for Congress now, even at this extra session, to repeal the act that it passed creating an additional judgeship in the fourth judicial circuit, and declaring that the judge thus appointed should retire from office. That might seem a rather difficult question to answer, but let me ask the Senator from Georgia this question. Is it within the power of Congress to repeal the act under which was first appointed a judge in the fourth judicial circuit and to say that he shall serve no longer? Let me ask the Senator another question. The Supreme Court of the United States consists of nine justices. It began with six, the number was reduced to five, and from time to time increased until there are now nine.

The act which increased the number may be repealed, but are we to understand that the Senator from Georgia claims that if we shall repeal the act by which the number of the judges of the Supreme Court was increased from six to nine, three of the judges of the Supreme Court will thus be retired, and that Congress may designate which shall go? Let me inquire likewise, if the Senator from Georgia contends that we can repeal or amend the act which creates the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States and declare that that office is abolished and the number of justices reduced to eight, so that the Chief Justice shall now retire?

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. Has the Senator from Montana noticed that while the Supreme Court was originally created with 6 judges, the number was then reduced to 5, and then, again, it was increased to 7 and to 9, and that, with the Chief Justice, to 11 at one time, and then by various statutes it was reduced, and in each statute reducing the number, although it was thought advisable at that time that the number be reduced, it was especially provided, not that any of them should go out of office, but that no vacancy should be filled upon the death of those incumbents? It was never attempted to legislate them out of office.

In regard to the case in 1803, when the 16 judges were legislated out, the fact is that was a case of a political statute; those judges never brought suit in a court, although they petitioned Congress that provision be made for their salary, and that a hostile partisan Congress denied them. As I understand, they never qualified.

They were commissioned at midnight, and hence their name, but they were never qualified and never assumed any duty. Furthermore, with that exception, for more than 100 years, until this act was introduced and passed by the House, it was never attempted to substitute a statute for the mode pointed out by the Constitution of removing judges by impeachment, because these are judges of the circuit courts of the United States, of each and every circuit under the statute, and there is nothing in the Constitution providing that they shall come from any particular circuit. The circuit courts are in no way affected by the repealing act now being discussed. They are left in full force. These particular circuit-court judges are singled out and, in effect, impeached by us.

Mr. WALSH. I was about to address myself to the act of 1802, to which reference has been made here, but I seize the opportunity presented by the suggestion made by the Senator from Tennessee to remark that in the very act, which reduced the number of judges of the Supreme Court from six to five, it was expressly provided that the reduction should be accomplished only when a vacancy should occur in the Supreme Bench, that such vacancy should not be filled, and thus the number should be reduced from six to five. But even that body did not have the hardihood to attempt to legislate, as is here attempted, to retire any of the judges from office the court of which they were judges still remaining.

Mr. President, the legislation to which reference has been made, which gave rise to the appointment of what are known as the "midnight judges," was the subject of the fiercest kind of political contention. That legislation was debated in Congress for several months. It was argued by many of the men who had contributed to the preparation of the Constitution itself.

The debates may be read by all students of constitutional law with the greatest profit.

Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate now with any extended reference to what was said in the course of that debate. I prefer, sir, to invite your attention to the comment of a great Democrat, made after the fierce passions of that time had in a measure subsided, made in his great work on the Constitution that he wrote for the students of all ages. I refer to Justice Story. After referring to the provisions of the Constitution intended to guarantee the independence of the judges, he said:

It would be a matter of general congratulation if this language had been completely borne out by the perusal of our juridical annals. But, unfortunately, a measure was adopted in 1802, under the auspices of President Jefferson, which, if its constitutionality can be successfully vindicated, prostrates in the dust the independence of all inferior judges, both as to the tenure of their office and their compensation for services, and leaves the Constitution a miserable and vain delusion. In the year 1801 Congress passed an act reorganizing the judiciary and authorizing the appointment of 16 new judges, with suitable salaries, to hold the circuit courts of the United States in the different circuits created by the act. Under this act the circuit judges received their appointments and performed the duties of their offices until the year 1802, when the courts established by the act were abolished by a general repeal of it by Congress, without in the slightest manner providing for the payment of the salaries of the judges or for any continuation of their offices. The result of this act, therefore, is, so far as it is a precedent, that notwithstanding the constitutional tenure of office of the judges of the inferior courts is during good behavior, Congress may at any time, by a mere act of legislation, deprive them of their offices at pleasure, and with it take away their whole title to their salaries. How this can be reconciled with the terms or the intent of the Constitution is more than any ingenuity of argument has ever as yet been able to demonstrate. The system fell, because it was unpopular with those who were then in possession of power, and the victims have hitherto remained without any indemnity from the justice of the Government.

Upon this subject a learned commentator has spoken with a manliness and freedom worthy of himself and of his country.

The commentator referred to is St. George Tucker, at that time professor of law in the College of William and Mary, and one of the delegates sent by Virginia with Edmund Randolph and James Madison to the Annapolis convention in 1787, called to revise the Articles of Confederation. He became a distinguished judge of the State of Virginia and afterwards served as United States district judge of that State. He said:

To those who are alive to the just interpretation of the Constitution; those who, on the one side, are anxious to guard it against usurpations of power injurious to the States; and those who, on the other side, are equally anxious to prevent a prostration of any of its great departments to the authority of the others; the language can never be unseasonable, either for admonition or instruction, to warn us of the facility with which public opinion may be persuaded to yield up some of the barriers of the Constitution under temporary influences and to teach us the duty of an unsleeping vigilance to protect that branch which, though weak in its powers, is yet the guardian of the rights and liberties of the people. "It was supposed," says the learned author, "that there could not be a doubt that those tribunals, in which justice is to be dispensed according to the Constitution and laws of the confederacy; in which life, liberty, and property are to be decided upon; in which questions might arise as to the constitutional powers of the executive, or the constitutional obligation of an act of the legislature; and in the decision of which the judges might find themselves constrained, by duty and by their oaths, to pronounce against the authority of either, should be stable and permanent and not dependent upon the will of the executive, or legislature, or both for their existence; that, without this degree of permanence, the tenure of office during good behavior could not secure to that department the necessary firmness to meet unshaken every question, and to decide as justice and the Constitution should dictate without regard to consequences."

These considerations induced an opinion which, it was presumed, was general, if not universal, that the power vested in Congress to erect, from time to time, tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court did not authorize them at pleasure to demolish them. Being built upon the rock of the Constitution, their foundations were supposed to partake of its permanency and to be equally incapable of being shaken by the other branches of the Government. But a different construction of the Constitution has lately prevailed. It has been determined that a power to ordain and establish, from time to time, carries with it a discretionary power to discontinue or demolish; that although the tenure of office be during good behavior, this does not prevent the separation of the office from the officer by putting down the office, but only secures to the officer his station upon the terms of good behavior so long as the office itself remains. Painful, indeed, is the remark that this interpretation seems calculated to subvert one of the fundamental pillars of free governments and to have laid the foundation of one of the most dangerous political schisms that has ever happened in the United States of America.

As expressing the judgment of this learned author as to how the matter was then regarded by the great lawyers of the time he has the following language in the note:

The act gave rise to one of the most animated debates to be found in the annals of Congress, and was resisted by a power of argument and eloquence which has never been surpassed. These debates were collected and printed in a volume at Albany in 1802, and are worthy of the most deliberate perusal of every constitutional lawyer. The act may be asserted, without fear of contradiction, to have been against the opinion of a great majority of all the ablest lawyers at the time; and probably now, when the passions of the day have subsided, few lawyers will be found to maintain the constitutionality of the act. No one can doubt the perfect authority of Congress to remodel their courts, or to confer or withdraw their jurisdiction at their pleasure, but the question is, whether they can deprive judges of the tenure of their office and their salaries after they have once become constitutionally vested in them.

Mr. President, this matter has received the consideration of the courts in this country a great many times since that day. The question is exactly the same when the tenure of the office is fixed by the Constitution, although the office itself is created by the statute, the office being statutory but the Constitution providing that when it is created it shall exist for a definite period. Is it within the power of the legislature then to abolish a court thus established and so cut short the term, a result that could not be accomplished by a direct act?

Unfortunately the courts are divided in opinion upon the subject. It is held that such legislation is forbidden by the constitution in the States of Mississippi, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Wisconsin and Illinois. It is held that it is not in the States of Kansas, Arkansas, and Iowa, the argument urged being substantially that made by the distinguished Senator from the State of Georgia to which we have listened this afternoon.

In the State of Tennessee the matter has received repeated consideration from the courts. It was held in the case of the State v. Leonard, reported in Eighty-sixth Tennessee, that you could not abolish the office, and thus get rid of an undesirable judge; but the contrary was held in the case of McCulley v. The State, reported in Fifty-third Southwestern, but by a divided court, three judges asserting that the office could be abolished before the expiration of the period for which the judge was elected and two holding that it could not be done.

You will find in the opinions in that case a review of practically all the law there is upon the subject. The dissenting opinion is written by Chief Justice Snodgrass, and is, as it seems to me, well-nigh unanswerable in its logic.

However, Mr. President, we may regard it, or whatever view may be taken of it, the best that can be said of it is that it is a question the ultimate determination of which is extremely difficult to forecast. The constitutionality of the act proposed is one that is involved, to say the least, in the very gravest doubt. Obviously the serious question involved ought not to be determined in this hurried manner and without giving the matter the deliberate consideration which its importance demands.

But, Mr. President, I do not fully agree with the distinguished Senator from Georgia when he says that we are not to consider the equities, if so they might be described, of the judges who are thus to be relegated to private life. Of course there is no gainsaying the proposition that there is no contract whatever between a public officer and the State whose servant he is, and yet the relation is one which comes as close to that of contract as one can well conceive. Three of the judges appointed to the Commerce Court were, at the time of their appointment, judges of the district court. Two of these still remain. They were then occupying positions which gave them a life tenure.

The act was evidently framed so that, even though in the course of time it should be deemed advisable to abolish the court, the judges would still have judicial duties to perform, and would be judges of courts which in all probability would not be abolished. It was probably thought, and with abundant reason, that thus they could not be deprived of their official character. With these inducements before them, they quit what was practically a life position and took these positions on the Commerce Court. It does seem to me that we may well consider whether, in view of the fact that courts inferior to the Supreme Court must in the future be established, it is wise to declare now by our action that if any man does occupy a position such as judge of the district court, and he is invited to go to a court which may eventually pass out of existence, he must have in mind that he surrenders a life tenure for one the duration of which is precarious and uncertain. I inquire whether we will not thus deprive ourselves of the opportunity to get upon these new courts, which must in the course of time be created, men of experience upon the bench, men of approved discretion and judgment, and whether we will not be restricted in the filling of these offices to men who are untried in judicial work?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator not think there are just as good judges on the supreme courts of the States as there are on the district courts of the United States? Do they hold life tenures? Does the Senator not think that we shall really get better material there?

Mr. WALSH. I will gladly answer the Senator. In the address to which I referred, I pointed to the fact that to a very great extent United States district judges are selected from men who had attested their fitness for the position by experience as judges of State courts; and I have no doubt in the world that you can get good judges from those courts, but that is not the question.

Here is a man who holds a position. He has a position, we will assume, upon a State supreme court; he has a position which probably means a life tenure, if he cares to occupy the place; he is sought for to fill a position on one of these courts created by Congress, and he does not know, when he is called upon to determine whether or not he shall accept it, but what Congress will abolish that court the year after and leave him without any position at all. I put it to you that it is not simply a matter of fairness to the judges themselves, but it is a question as to whether it is a wise public policy to thus peremptorily terminate their tenure.

But beyond that, Mr. President, I fear that if you shall establish this precedent, if you shall adopt this method of getting rid of an obnoxious or an objectionable judge, it may return to plague us.

To-morrow you may pass an act that abolishes the district judge of the State of Montana, joins that State to the State of Idaho, and directs that the judge of the district of Idaho shall preside over the district that is thus consolidated; you may the next day provide that the State of Nevada shall be attached to the State of Arizona, and that the district judge of Nevada shall preside over the consolidated district so constituted, and thus legislate out of office the judge of the district of Arizona.

It may not become, as may be feared, an evil precedent, but upon sober reflection we may well dread whether the enactment of this measure will not eventually be condemned both by history and by our own consciences.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the substitute proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let the amendment be read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "repealed," in line 18, on page 33, down to and including line 12, on page 34, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect the tenure of any of the judges now acting as circuit judges by appointment under the terms of said act, but such judges shall continue to act under assignment, as in the said act provided, as judges of the district courts and circuit courts of appeal; and in the event of and on the death, resignation, or removal from office of any of such judges his office is thereby abolished, and no successor to him shall be appointed.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, that amendment is entirely satisfactory to me, and I am well content to have that adopted in place of the amendment which I offered.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the learned Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]—I have not the amendment before me, and therefore I wish to know—whether the effect of it is to keep in office all of the judges or only such of them as have been assigned to the circuit courts?

Mr. WALSH. It continues in office the four judges.

Mr. BACON. Are there not five?

Mr. WALSH. There are only four now.

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes; I remember that one has been removed. But it continues the four in office?

Mr. WALSH. It continues the four as circuit judges.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to suggest one view of this subject which has not yet been suggested, and which is a pertinent one to my mind. I confess that the question is not free from very great difficulty. I do not go so far as my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Georgia] in the statement made by him to the effect that the repeal of the law which created, for instance, an additional circuit judge in the fifth circuit would abolish the office of that judge and remove him. I am inclined to the opinion that, unless the circuit court to which he was appointed should itself be abolished, he himself could not by act of Congress be removed from office. I do, however, entirely subscribe to the proposition that where the office itself is abolished the officer goes with it. Of course, that can not relate to any judge of the Supreme Court, because we are without power to abolish that court. I do not think, for instance, if Congress should find the present Supreme Court so embarrassed by the accumulation of business that it was deemed necessary to add a judge to the Supreme Court bench, that when that emergency had passed we could by law, in repealing that particular act, remove that judge.

The particular point, however, to which I wish to call attention is this: That is due to the fact that the Supreme Court is an entirety—you might say an entity—an entity and an entirety; in other words, it is indivisible, and the judge of the Supreme Court, when he becomes such, can not thereafter be separated from the other judges. He is as much a judge of that court, when appointed by that supplementary act, as is any judge holding office under a previous act, and you can not divide it. But the further point to which I wish particularly to call attention to is that that is not true of the circuit courts of the United States and never has been true of the circuit courts of the United States.

No judge of the circuit court of the United States has ever been commissioned, prior to this particular enactment, as a judge of the circuit courts of the United States. The law under which every circuit-court judge has heretofore been appointed has made him the judge of a particular circuit court and not of the circuit courts of the United States.

As we all know, originally there was no such officer as a circuit court judge of the United States. Until the year 1869, while we had circuit courts, the only circuit court judges were the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, who were assigned to duty by allotment among themselves in the several circuits. They were simply ex officio circuit judges. Their office was that of Supreme Court justice. In 1869, however, there was created the office of judge of the circuit courts, but in each instance the original act provided that there should be a circuit judge of each circuit.

There was no such thing as an act providing that the judges should be appointed judges of the circuit courts and allotted to the several circuits, but Senators who will search the statutes will find it to be a fact that in each instance in the original law there was a provision for a circuit judge of each circuit. As the development of the country and the enlargement of business required, there was an increased number of circuits, and in each case there was a judge of that particular circuit. For instance, if you turn to the law which created the ninth circuit—which was the last one created—it will be seen that there was authorized the appointment of a circuit judge of the ninth circuit, not a judge of the circuit courts of the United States to be allotted to the ninth circuit, but the distinct creation of the office of judge of the ninth circuit, and so on as to the other circuits. It is true in every instance, from the first circuit to the ninth circuit, that the judge is a judge of a particular circuit.

Now, the proposition that I make is this: The abolition of the ninth circuit, for instance, would carry with it the abolition of the office of judge of the ninth circuit. Necessarily, if the proposition is correct that the abolition of the office carries with it the officer, and if the history which I have recounted is a correct narration, the abolition of the ninth circuit would carry with it the abolition of the office of judge and carry with it the abolition of the right of anyone to hold the office of judge of the ninth circuit.

Mr. President, it seems to me that it is a very clear proposition. It is just as true of a circuit-court judge as it is of any other officer, if it be true that in each instance the judge was appointed as a judge of that particular court and not appointed generally as a circuit-court judge of the United States.

We are now confronted with this situation: The act creating the Commerce Court made an innovation. It did not authorize the appointment of any judge for any particular circuit; there was no appointment and no authorization for the appointment of a judge as a circuit court judge of any particular circuit. If there was, I am very strongly inclined to the opinion that his office could not be abolished, for the reason I have previously stated, just for the same reason that I have stated that I do not incline to the opinion that the repeal of the law creating the third judge in my own circuit, the fifth circuit, would abolish him as an officer. In the same way, if the judges of the Commerce Court had been authorized as appointees of particular circuits, I do not think they could themselves be removed from office by the repeal of the law, because they would become attached to those circuits and be judges of those circuits.

But now here is the question: Here is a law separate and apart from any other law we have had on that subject. I say a new class of judges was created—judges who were simply designated circuit judges, but not appointed as judges of any particular circuit. It was the creation of an entirely new class of judges. It is true there was a provision by which they would be put to work in the same courts that the other judges were who had been previously created under a distinct classification, of which I have already spoken—appointed as judges of a circuit court and not generally as circuit judges. Here is a distinct class of judges appointed. Now, if it be true that if the law creating the ninth circuit were repealed that would carry with it the judges of that circuit, and if it be also true that the repeal of the law creating this entirely new class of judges does not carry with it those judges, then we would stand in the position that these particular five judges are favored above all other judges, and that while the judges of the ninth circuit might be removed by repealing the law which created the ninth circuit, carrying with it the judges who were appointed as judges of that ninth circuit, these five judges can not be removed unless we repeal the law as to all the nine circuits. That is the necessary conclusion to which we must come.

Mr. President, I recognize to the fullest the strength of the argument which has been presented on the subject by Senators here; it is a very strong argument, but it occurs to me as a legitimate proposition that the judges of the Commerce Court are to themselves and apart; that they were not appointed each as the judge of any circuit; that they were appointed under a law peculiar to itself, and that when that law is repealed these judges would necessarily go with it. I am led to a conclusion about which I confess I did not have a fixed idea, to the effect that the judge when appointed as a judge of a particular court, even though he be an additional judge created subsequent to the original appointment of judges, has equal right to the tenure of office with the original judges; but the judges of the Commerce Court were not appointed as the judges of any particular court except the Court of Commerce, and they were given certain ex officio rights as judges of the Court of Commerce, and whenever you abolish a law standing by itself and peculiar to itself, a law creating a class of judges which theretofore did not exist, it has the same effect as if you repealed the law creating a court to which a judge has been authorized to be appointed.

Mr. President, I confess that after the argument I have heard to-day, unless my mind can rest upon that proposition, I would have to vote against the provision of the law which removes these judges or declares that they are removed.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator allow me to bring to his attention the language of the act?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. WALSH. With respect to the appointment of these judges they were not appointed judges of the Commerce Court at all.

Mr. BACON. I understand that.

Mr. WALSH. But their floating character ceased immediately, because the act provided that they should be assigned to specific circuits.

Mr. BACON. But not permanently.

Mr. WALSH. No; of course not.

Mr. BACON. That is the reason I say that these judges are very different from any other judges.

Mr. WALSH. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the language, if he will permit me:

The President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint five additional circuit judges no two of whom shall be from the same judicial circuit, who shall hold office during good behavior and who shall be from time to time designated and assigned by the Chief Justice of the United States for service in the circuit court for any district, or the circuit court of appeals for any circuit, or in the Commerce Court.

You will observe, Mr. President, that service in the Commerce Court comes last, and that they are not any more judges of the Commerce Court than they are judges of any other court to which they are assigned.

Mr. BACON. That does not change the proposition, though, that they are judges created by a law altogether different from the law which creates the other judges known as circuit judges.

Mr. WALSH. I should like, however, to ask the Senator another question before I take my seat. If I understand him aright, now, if a law is enacted giving an additional judgeship in any circuit, an act repealing that law would not be effective to remove the judge from office, because he is attached to that particular circuit?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. But as I understand the Senator, without reference to the Commerce Court at all—let us pass this and abolish the whole thing—suppose we enact a law providing that there shall be appointed five additional circuit judges, to be assigned to the various circuits throughout the country by the President of the United States or the Chief Justice, as he may see fit, to aid in the work wherever their services may be needed. I understand the Senator to say that the repeal of that law would abolish the judges.

Mr. BACON. Yes; the Senator correctly states my position.

Mr. WALSH. But upon what basis in the Constitution does the distinction rest? You can not abolish the judge who is attached to a particular circuit because of the provision of the Constitution of the United States to the effect that he shall hold his office during good behavior. That is the only constitutional provision that stands in the way; but that constitutional provision is as applicable to the floating judges as to the man who is anchored.

Mr. BACON. The answer to that is that that provision of the Constitution does not stand in the way of removing a judge by abolishing the court of which he is a judge. The two things are not inconsistent. It is true that the Constitution, in effect, says that a judge shall be appointed for life; but it is equally true that that is in perfect harmony with the other principle that if the court to which he is thus appointed for life is itself abolished he himself goes with the court.

Mr. WALSH. But, Mr. President, I assume that you do not abolish the court. You leave the circuit courts, but you have appointed five judges who are not attached.

Mr. BACON. Yes; I understand that, Mr. President; but the question is, How can you apply the same principle in the one case that you do in the other? That is the question. It is a sound principle. How can you apply it to the cases of these judges? By abolishing all the nine circuits? Manifestly, that would be unreasonable. Yet that principle must be as live a principle as to them as it is as to any other judge.

The thought in my mind and the suggestion which I have made rest upon the proposition that this is an entirely different class of legislation from the other; that it does not create judges of any particular court. These courts are not, in the aggregate, the creation of any statute. They are not created in the aggregate. They are created separately, each one of them. Every circuit court judge has been authorized, not as the judge of these several courts, which he could not properly be, because each is a separate court, the one liable to be abolished without affecting the other. Either one of these courts can be abolished without affecting the other courts.

You can not abolish a part of the Supreme Court, because that is an entirety, one and indivisible; but these circuit courts are separate courts, and any one of the nine can be abolished without affecting the remaining eight, or the eight can be abolished without affecting the remaining one. That is the situation; and in each case the judges will go with them.

Here is a case where we create an entirely new jurisdiction, one that did not exist before, and authorize the appointment of judges for the purpose of performing the duties of that jurisdiction. I think it is a reasonable conclusion that when we abolish that jurisdiction it is the same thing as abolishing a court. You have got to analogize it, because you can not directly and distinctly parallel it. It can not be done.

I think it is an unreasonable proposition that these five judges shall stand supremely above the other judges known as judges of the circuit courts of the United States; that whereas the judges of the nine courts could be removed from office by the repeal of the law which created the nine circuits, while that would be true of the judges of any of the circuits, at the same time these five emergency judges, if we may so speak of them, stand supremely above all and could not themselves be removed from office by legislation unless we repealed the law as to all the nine circuits; that if the Congress of the United States should see fit to abolish eight of these circuits and leave one, while the judges of all these eight circuits would by such a law go out of office, these five judges would still remain as the judges of the one remaining circuit.

Mr. WALSH. Let me make an inquiry of the Senator. Are there two districts in Georgia or one?

Mr. BACON. There are two.

Mr. WALSH. Could we pass an act here abolishing one of the districts and consolidating the two and designating the judge who was to retire?

Mr. BACON. You could undoubtedly repeal the law creating any district court in the United States, and I have no hesitation in expressing the opinion that whenever you did the judge of that district would go with his district. What we would do about consolidating two districts and what judge we would have in the consolidated district would be matters for Congress to determine.

Mr. President, I beg pardon for trespassing so long upon the attention of the Senate. I simply wished to present the view that these judges are not judges of any circuit court; that it was an entirely new jurisdiction, and that when that jurisdiction is itself abolished the judges go with it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE obtained the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to dispose of this bill to-night, if possible, and I will ask Senators to make their speeches as short as possible.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was about to inquire of the Senator from North Carolina whether it was his intention to attempt to pass the bill to-night, or whether we could not adjourn until to-morrow.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think we ought to pass the bill to-night. There are only two amendments to be voted upon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course I do not know what may lie in the minds of other Senators, but personally I shall be exceedingly brief in what I have to say. I shall want to take perhaps 5 or 10 minutes, but not more than that. What I shall say is in line with the inadvisability of acting upon this proposition at this time in this way.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator from Idaho desires to say anything now, I will yield to him.

Mr. BORAH. No; I only wanted to say that if we could have a vote on the substitute we could tell whether we should adjourn to-night or not, because if the substitute is not adopted I would not be willing to see an adjournment take place without further discussion of the matter, and rather extended discussion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, some conference is evidently desirable. I do not desire to interrupt any negotiations if they will expedite business. I do not care to talk if there is some attempt to agree upon a course of procedure in the future, other than to proceed with the debate.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] says he fears somebody will think that that is sarcasm, but it is not meant so at all. I did not know but that there was some conference going on with relation to adjournment or recess.

I will say, and then let the bill take its course, that it is perfectly evident to everybody and known to everybody that there is not a quorum in the Chamber. This is an exceedingly important proposition. It is evident that the best lawyers in this body—and there are as good lawyers here as there are almost anywhere in the country, I think—differ in their views of our constitutional power to pass this bill as it stands. I myself feel, I will say, not exactly ashamed to be concerned in an act of this importance being taken up in this time, in the absence of a quorum—

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have a quorum now, probably; we will not have one to-morrow. We will not have as many Members present then as we have now. So we will have more votes if we act on the matter to-night than if we postpone it until to-morrow.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If I should agree with the Senator, I do not think that would militate very strongly against what I am about to say, because if it is known that we have a bare quorum now, with many or at least some of the very ablest lawyers in this body absent, and will not have to-morrow, it seems to me that that is not really a very convincing reason why the Senate of the United States should be driven practically by the threat of the absence of a quorum to-morrow to pass what is contained in this bill from page 33 to page 41—seven or eight pages of matter involving a great court, a national court, that had its first session as a court only two years ago. It is hardly a sufficient reason for insisting upon the passage of these seven or eight pages of legislation upon an emergency deficiency appropriation bill, vitally changing the interstate-commerce law, and abolishing a great court that has existed only two years.

I voted for the establishment of the Commerce Court. It may have made some blunders. Of course we know that it was unfortunate in some things that concerned one of its members. But I believed that court was necessary when I voted for it, and I believe it is wise to maintain it. I think many other jurisdictions, or some, at least, can be conferred upon it with great benefit to the country. I agree to a very large extent, if not entirely, with the sentiments expressed here this afternoon by the Senator from Montana.

These appeals from the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission on applications for writs restraining the enforcement of their orders, instead of being tried expeditiously here in the city of Washington, at a convenient point for the Department of Justice and the Interstate Commerce Commission and the governmental authorities to appear before the court, are to be scattered to the four winds of this country through 86 district courts of the United States.

I have been, as best I could—the bill having been reported yesterday and printed to-day for the first time—attempting to listen to the very able debates that have gone on here pro and con upon this question this afternoon, and to refresh my recollection in regard to the laws governing the Interstate Commerce Commission, and to read a very able public document that was presented here yesterday afternoon upon this question by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], being Document No. 203, by the Hon. R. F. BROUSSARD, of the House of Representatives.

I feel that we are not treating ourselves fairly to rush this great question through here upon the eve of the dispersion, at least, if not the recess or adjournment of Congress. Yet I do not want to raise the question of the absence of a quorum; neither do I want to defeat the immediate adoption of this meritorious deficiency bill. Yet there we are. These eight pages of technical legislation fairly bristle with intricate legal questions that have been matters of controversy in the courts, and in this body, and before the committees that generally and appropriately would have jurisdiction of this matter.

The proposed legislation, I am satisfied, is more or less confusing. I have certain amendments to it that I should like to prepare and offer. I should like to hear discussion upon them. I wish this matter could be stricken from the bill, and let the appropriation bill be passed. If it should be the firm, fixed intention of the Senate to abolish this court, it can do it on the first Monday in December, when Congress reconvenes. Under the committee amendment it is proposed to continue the court until the 31st of December. I do not feel that it is fitting for this great body to rush lightly into a mass of legislation that we have not made up our minds about; and I, for one, feel the seriousness of it. I feel my individual responsibility as keenly as I feel my powerlessness to treat the subject as it deserves to be treated, and to inform myself as well as I should like to be informed.

I promised to take not over five minutes. I will conclude now, and will simply say that I can not vote for this measure as it stands. I am going, at some time or other—I suppose it will be an abortive attempt, but at any rate it will relieve me of the responsibility of rushing into what I consider this very unwise procedure and action—to move to strike this matter out of the bill. I will make that motion now, if it is in order. If not, I will renew it later. I will move to strike from the bill all after line 6, on page 33, down to and including line 12, on page 40, and make it what it purports to be—an urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has accepted the substitute motion of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. NELSON. I have accepted the amendment of the Senator from Montana.

The VICE PRESIDENT. So the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, as modified by the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut to strike out from the bill, beginning with page 32—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; beginning with page 33, line 7. I want the appropriation to stay in the bill. The matter I have moved to strike out commences at page 33, line 7.

The SECRETARY. Beginning at page 33, line 7, and going down to and including line 12, on page 40.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the motion of the Senator from Connecticut would have the effect of eliminating the entire subject matter of the abolishment of the court?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator if it would have the effect of retaining the court? Is that the object?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; it would leave the appropriation in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And leave the subject also for future consideration?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Whether the court should be abolished or retained?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It would.

Mr. LEWIS. It would vitiate the whole House legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We have already vitiated a very important part of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut. [Putting the question.]

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call for a division.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	Nelson	Shields
Bacon	James	Newlands	Simmons
Bankhead	Johnson	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Jones	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Kern	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Bristow	La Follette	Pittman	Swanson
Bryan	Lane	Polindexter	Thomas
Burton	Lea	Pomerene	Thompson
Chilton	Lewis	Ransdell	Thornton
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Reed	Tillman
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Hollis	Myers	Sheppard	Walsh

Mr. LANE. My colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is absent. He is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I make the point of order that the committee amendment in italics in relation to this matter is legislation upon an appropriation bill and is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair may perhaps have made an inappropriate ruling this morning, in ruling that the amendment is germane to the bill, but the Chair so holds.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Chair may have made the ruling on something in his own mind, but I appeal from the ruling of the Chair, very respectfully, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no objection. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair be sustained? [Putting the question.]

Mr. BRANDEGEE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the count may be had of the other side.

Mr. OVERMAN. There has been a roll call showing 48 Senators present.

Mr. JAMES. There has been a roll call showing that a quorum is present, and only three sustained the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is not the point. The point is whether one-fifth of those present have demanded the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Only four hands are up for the yeas and nays. The Chair, since it has been occupied by the present incumbent, has not tried to take advantage of any Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. This Senator does not claim that the Chair has tried to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Only four hands were up, and that is not a sufficient number, as is perfectly apparent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest the absence of a quorum, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	Nelson	Shields
Bacon	James	Newlands	Simmons
Bankhead	Johnson	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Jones	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Kern	Pittman	Swanson
Bryan	Lane	Polindexter	Thomas
Burton	Lea	Pomerene	Thompson
Chilton	Lewis	Ransdell	Thornton
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Reed	Tillman
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Hollis	Myers	Sheppard	Walsh

Mr. REED. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. STONE] is unavoidably absent from the city.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. O'GORMAN, and Mr. BRISTOW entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. KERN (at 7 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.). Mr. President, I ask that the names of the absentees be called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] was compelled to leave the Chamber some time ago, and will be absent for the evening.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, has any order gone forth ordering the absent Senators to be brought in by the Sergeant at Arms?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There has been no motion of that kind. The Chair will entertain one, if made.

Mr. HITCHCOCK (at 7 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) entered the Chamber and responded to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Since the roll call began 48 Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. KERN. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Is the committee amendment now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The state of the record, as the Chair understands, is that there was an arrangement between the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that a certain amendment was to be presented, and it was agreed that the matter contained on page 37 was not to be taken up until that amendment was presented.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is no other committee amendment to be presented, as I understand. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] has an amendment which we might consider to use the time while we are waiting for the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BRISTOW. I understood that the Senator from North Carolina had agreed to accept the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. He is in charge of the bill, and will be here in a moment. We will pass over that matter in the meantime.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has a very important amendment still open.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if this matter can be passed over until the return of the Senator from Wisconsin, I have an amendment which I should like to offer as an individual.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We are awaiting the return of the Senator from Wisconsin. In the meantime there are some other amendments to be offered. The committee amendments have been disposed of, as I understand.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I say I have one I should like to offer, to use the time until the Senator from Wisconsin arrives. It will take but a minute, if it is in order to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that it is in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well. It is the same amendment that I offered, when it was not in order, as an amendment to the committee amendment. I now offer it as an amendment to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, after line 12, it is proposed to insert:

For the expenses of the jury commission of the District of Columbia, including stationery and clerical assistance, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, $400.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, that amendment was adopted by the Senate when the District appropriation bill was before it, and it went out in conference.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it go, Mr. President. It is accepted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to refer, for the benefit of the conference committee—

Mr. OVERMAN. We know all about it. We have had it before.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We are thoroughly familiar with it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the clerks and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of October, 1913, for extra services rendered during the first session of the Sixty-third Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. OVERMAN. While I personally am in favor of that amendment, and I have always voted to give the clerks an extra month's salary, I think it ought to be submitted to the Senate. I can not accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

To pay David L. Frawley, as additional compensation for extra services rendered the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary engaged in the investigation of the maintenance of a lobby, pursuant to Senate resolution 92 during the first session of the Sixty-third Congress, $465.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that is all right. I accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, line 15, it is proposed to insert:

Arming and equipping the militia, allotment State of Ohio: For replacing military stores, supplies, and equipments lost by the National Guard of the State of Ohio during the recent floods in Ohio during March and April, 1913, $78,670.87.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is that the Senator's amendment?

Mr. POMERENE. That is the amendment relating to the Ohio State National Guard.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that since the Senator was before the committee the Secretary of War has recommended it.

Mr. POMERENE. I will say to the Senator that the Secretary of War has recommended it. I have here a letter from him which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it go in the RECORD. It is not necessary to read it. I want it to go in the RECORD, however.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well; let it be printed then.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 3, 1913.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Touching the matter of militia stores, supplies, and equipment lost by the National Guard of Ohio during the recent floods in that State, an estimate of appropriation for the replacement of which was submitted August 1 last by the Assistant Secretary of War, acting as Secretary of War at the time, I wish to add to the approval of the Assistant Secretary my own personal approval of this bill and to express the hope that it will receive favorable consideration and action by Congress.

This United States property in question has been surveyed, as required by law, and the governor of the State of Ohio authorized to drop the supplies from his property returns.

The original estimate of the appropriation required was $74,243.92, but since that estimate was submitted corrections of the same have been made, which corrections I approve, bringing the estimate up to $78,670.87.

With kindest regards, I am,

Very respectfully,

LINDLEY M. GARRISON,
Secretary of War.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 10, page 53, it is proposed to insert:

For the following, on account of additional services to the Committee on Finance, namely, to pay Joseph S. McCoy $1,000; Thomas M. Robertson $500; in all, $1,500.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEA. I desire to call up an amendment which I have pending on the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

MONUMENT TO COMMEMORATE THE WOMEN OF THE CIVIL WAR.

To make payment of a part contribution to the acquisition of a site and the erection thereon of a memorial in the District of Columbia to commemorate the service and the sacrifices of the women of the United States, North and South, for the sick and wounded in war, $400,000: Provided, That said memorial shall be a building monumental in design and character and shall be used as the permanent headquarters of the American Red Cross and shall cost, with the site, not less than $700,000: Provided further, That the sum hereby appropriated shall not be payable until there shall have been assured by private subscription an additional sum of $300,000: Provided further, That the money hereby appropriated shall not be paid for any site nor toward the construction of any memorial unless the site and plan for the proposed building shall have been approved by a commission consisting of the Secretary of War of the United States, the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress, and the president of the American Red Cross. The plans of said memorial shall likewise be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts. The expenditure for said site and memorial shall be made under the direction of the commission consisting of the Secretary of War, the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress, and the president of the American Red Cross, and the said memorial shall be constructed under the supervision of an officer of the Corps of Engineers appointed by the Secretary of War, who shall act as the executive disbursing officer of the commission: Provided further, That the title to the site procured shall be taken by and the building erected thereon shall be the property of the United States, but the American Red Cross shall at all times be charged with and be responsible for the care, keeping, and maintenance of the said memorial and grounds without expense to the United States, subject to such further direction and control as may be provided by law: And provided further, That should the commission hereby created be unable to acquire a suitable site at a price deemed by the commission to be fair, it is authorized to institute condemnation proceedings in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, providing a site for the enlargement of the Government Printing Office (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 26, chap. 837).

Mr. OVERMAN. That amendment was before our committee and it was heard thoroughly by all parties. The committee did not think that this was a proper amendment for a deficiency bill. This is an urgent deficiency appropriation bill, to take care of deficiencies of the Government, and the subcommittee unanimously turned it down, and it went before the full committee and was rejected. It has not been estimated for. I understand the Committee on the Library has recommended it, however.

Mr. LEA. Mr. President, I want to say a word in behalf of the amendment. I believe everyone is in sympathy with the purpose and object of the amendment to erect a memorial to the women of the sixties in which the Government will participate and patriotic citizens who desire to express their appreciation of the sacrifices and the heroism of these noble women of the North and South will be permitted to participate also.

It is true that this is not perhaps the legitimate object of an amendment to an urgent deficiency appropriation bill, but there is a peculiarly delicate situation existing regarding certain of the proposed donors of the $300,000 to be made up by private subscription, and if the fund is ever to be available I believe this appropriation will have to be made at this time.

On that account I very earnestly hope that the amendment will be adopted. I supported the amendment in the Committee on Appropriations, and it failed there, but it has been recommended by a standing committee of the Senate and is therefore in order, and I hope it may be adopted.

Mr. OVERMAN. The committee thought that it might wait for another appropriation bill.

Mr. LEA. The situation is such, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina, that it can not wait, if it is to be carried out according to the present plan.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I recognize the general rule that a deficiency appropriation bill is to provide for some branch of the public service which has been insufficiently provided for.

But let us consider for a minute what we have been doing in this bill. We have not confined it to appropriations. We have abolished a court. We have sought to settle the question whether certain judges shall be removed from office or remain. We have provided for a statement of certain appropriations to be made by the Treasury Department. There are numerous items in the bill for relief operations for the benefit of sufferers. We have made an appropriation to repair an injury done by a vandal. On page 53—I wish especially to call the attention of the Senator having the bill in charge to that—there is an appropriation of $25,000 for a suitable design for a memorial bridge across the Potomac River in the city of Washington.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is authorized by law. The bridge is to be constructed, and this is a deficiency simply according to a law passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate appointing the commission, and they have no money with which to act.

Mr. BURTON. That item was right alongside of this amendment pertaining to the Red Cross in the bill which passed the Senate last winter. The Senate not only included this Red Cross item in the bill passed last winter, which went to conference, but also by joint resolution in the year 1912, on the 16th of August, we passed a joint resolution identical with this amendment.

I recognize the temper of the Senate, and no one can expect that Members will listen to any argument regarding the work of the Red Cross, but that organization has accomplished a wonderful work. There has been occasion for them in an unusual degree this year and the last, because of calamities by flood and by fire and from accidents in mines.

Their activities have not been confined to this country. Their work in China did as much to create a friendly feeling toward this country as any action of diplomacy. This society is officially recognized not only by the Geneva convention, to which we are a party, but also by statute of the United States.

The President of the United States is at the head of this organization. He appoints a central committee which includes representatives from five of the great departments of the Government. There is a war relief board presided over by the Surgeon General. The Senator understands that the contributions which would be made available if the Government is committed to this appropriation are liable to be dissipated.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am in favor of it and at the proper place next winter it can be taken care of in the sundry civil bill. There is no question about the merit of it.

Mr. BURTON. I recognize that the Senator from North Carolina is friendly to this appropriation, but I fear if it is postponed there will not only be delay, but it will seriously hamper the work of the Red Cross. They are doing a colossal work and spent $7,500,000 in the eight years from 1905 to 1913, yet their office is a simple room in the War Department, very limited in the amount of space. I will add, without reading, a statement showing the wide extent of their operations and the amounts expended:

I trust the Senate will adopt this amendment. The amendment is not subject to a point of order. It has already been recommended by the Committee on the Library; there is no question on that score.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have not made a point of order. I am willing to leave it to the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, there is no point of order made against this amendment. I hope the Senate will allow it to go on the bill and receive the consideration of the conference committee. It is a very commendable and a very important measure. As the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has so well said, there are certain conditions about it that make it risky to wait several months. In that case a large portion of the money that is to be subscribed through the generosity of private parties might not be obtained. Every month something may happen to prevent it. All we ask is that it may go to conference, and I hope that will be the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate with any argument, but simply wish to express my concurrence in what the Senator from Connecticut has said. I hope very much the amendment will be acted on favorably. We remember that at the last session there was a controversy here because we thought there was a discrimination. All that has been removed, and it is not only for a noble purpose but will furnish a very noble monument to those who are entitled to it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think it is setting a bad precedent to load a bill of this kind with so many extraneous matters. The Senator from Ohio has very properly called attention to a number of matters that have already been considered in this bill and which would be better for the country as matters of outside and special legislation. This is an urgent deficiency appropriation bill, and we have in this bill determined to abolish one of the great courts of the country.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. We have not done so yet.

Mr. THOMAS. I am talking about what is proposed. We have also proposed to take their commissions away from four judges. We have also provided a method of procedure with reference to business belonging to that court by means of which it is to be distributed over 86 other courts in the country. We have also provided for some change in the civil-service law.

It seems to me we ought to reach the limit somewhere and some time in the matter of subjects that are brought within a bill the principal purpose of which is entirely foreign to it.

While I want to see the Red Cross recognized in every possible way, I certainly hope that this large appropriation, which is not a deficiency appropriation, will not be passed in this way. Each and every of these additions to a bill which is designed for some other purpose simply serves as a precedent for the continuing of such legislation. The practice is a vicious one, and I hope that the amendment will not be ingrafted on this measure. If I thought there was any prospect of it, I would make the point of order.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that I am in favor of the amendment and I expect to vote for it. Personally I would much prefer, however, to see the National Government furnish all the money for the construction of this building, which is to be a memorial to all the women of the country. I do not like to see the Government put in the position of admitting that it must go into partnership with private individuals for the erection of a memorial of this kind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA].

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 9; no quorum voting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hughes	Myers	Sheppard
Bacon	James	Nelson	Shields
Borah	Jones	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.
Brandeggee	La Follette	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Lane	Pittman	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Lea	Poinexter	Swanson
Burton	Lewis	Pomerene	Thomas
Chilton	McLean	Ransdell	Thompson
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Reed	Thornton
Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Walsh

Mr. REED. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. STONE] is absent from the city on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. JONES. As the Senate knows, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] is not very strong, and he was compelled to go to his home. I make this announcement for any other roll call.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to state that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] was not feeling well, and he felt that it was necessary to leave the Chamber and go to his home.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty Senators have answered to their names—not a quorum.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest that the names of the absent Senators be called.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators and Mr. HOLLIS and Mr. KERN answered to their names when called.

Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. BANKHEAD entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, we have been here nearly two hours and we have requested the attendance of Senators. They do not respond to the request. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to arrest absent Senators and bring them to the Senate. It is useless to stay here unless we bring in the absentees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JAMES in the chair). The Senator from Virginia moves that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to arrest absent Senators.

Mr. KERN. There are a number of Senators just below at their lunch. I have just returned from there. They are scarcely to blame for that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Indiana that the question is on the motion made by the Senator from Virginia that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to arrest and bring before the Senate the absent Senators.

Mr. KERN. I move to amend it by striking out the word "arrest" and inserting "request the attendance of."

Mr. SWANSON. I think it is not treating Senators right who stay here four or five hours trying to get a quorum when we deal so generously with absent Senators. We are expected to stay here and constitute a quorum, and we should be properly treated by having absent Senators brought in.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana to the motion made by the Senator from Virginia that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SWANSON. I wish to say that I am not going to stay here four or five hours waiting on the courtesy of some Senators who are simply requested to come here. I am willing to stay here if Senators will come and attend to business, but, with 45 Senators, it is not right to be dillydallying in this way. If it is the intention to stay here and pass the bill to-night the proper way is to have Senators arrested and brought here and proceed with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia as amended by the motion of the Senator from Indiana that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms is directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

At 8 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m. Mr. OWEN entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

At 8 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m. Mr. VARDAMAN and Mr. NEWLANDS entered the Chamber and, respectively, answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The pending question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I raise the point of order on the amendment that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, attention has already been called to that matter. This amendment was reported by the Committee on the Library on the 4th of September last, and, as has already been conceded by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], having the bill in charge, it is in order.

Mr. BRYAN. May I inquire of the Senator from Ohio when the amendment was reported by the committee?

Mr. BURTON. On the 4th of September, 1913. On July 21, 1913, the amendment was referred to the Committee on the Library and ordered to be printed; on September 4, 1913, it was reported favorably by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida insist upon his point of order?

Mr. BRYAN. I did not know the amendment had been proposed by a standing committee of the Senate. If that is true, I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment heretofore agreed to, in line 2, on page 56, it is proposed to strike out the word "clerks" and insert the word "officers."

Mr. OVERMAN. I accept that amendment, because it only corrects the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to offer an amendment to the bill, proposing to pay to Thomas P. Kane, who is acting as Comptroller of the Currency, the salary as comptroller while he is serving as such.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following amendment, under the heading "Office of the Comptroller of the Currency":

To pay to Thomas P. Kane the difference between the compensation allowed by law for the Comptroller of the Currency and the compensation allowed by law for the Deputy Comptroller of the Currency, for services as acting Comptroller of the Currency from April 28, 1913, when the office of Comptroller of the Currency was vacated, and continuing so long as the duties and responsibilities of said office of the Comptroller of the Currency shall devolve upon said Thomas P. Kane, as Acting Comptroller of the Currency, such an amount as may be necessary, to be paid from the $5,000 appropriated for salary of the Comptroller of the Currency by the act of August 23, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 377), for such part of such services as may be rendered during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913; and such amount as may be necessary to be paid from the $5,000 appropriated for salary of the Comptroller of the Currency by the act of March 4, 1913 (Stat. L., p. 756), for such part of such services as may be rendered during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

Mr. OVERMAN. I raise the point of order on that amendment that it has not been estimated for or recommended by any department and would be setting a very dangerous precedent.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to say, in connection with that matter, that it was my fault that the amendment was not presented to the committee, it having been introduced by me and reported on favorably by the Secretary of the Treasury. His letter is here on the files of the committee, and the matter was not properly presented. That was because I was called away by my duties as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not insist upon the point of order, because the amendment is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was not before our committee.

Mr. OWEN. Yes; it is here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina insist upon his point of order?

Mr. OWEN. I repeat that it was my fault that the matter was not presented to the committee, I having been called away from the committee, although I went to the committee for the purpose of presenting it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it would be setting a very dangerous precedent to pay a man who performs services because some other man was getting a greater salary than he is getting. If we begin this thing, we shall have to pay every subordinate an increase of salary when he temporarily performs the duties of a higher officer.

Mr. OWEN. This man is really performing the services of Comptroller of the Currency. He has been in that office a long time acting as deputy and is now acting as comptroller. Since he is performing the work and is worthy of performing it and is well qualified for it, I thought it was a measure of justice that he should be paid, and the Secretary of the Treasury thought that he should be paid, the compensation which would have been paid to him if he had been regularly appointed as the comptroller. Of course it is only a temporary matter until the comptroller is regularly appointed. It only involves a small sum.

Mr. BRISTOW. Is there any more reason—

Mr. OWEN. Deputy Comptroller Kane is serving as comptroller, and it is only proposed to give him what the comptroller would otherwise receive, and which has been appropriated for the salary of the comptroller.

Mr. BRISTOW. I know that, but I am in entire sympathy with the statement of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] that it would be setting a very dangerous precedent, because it is not infrequent that subordinate officers for months perform the duties of their superiors during their absence.

Mr. OWEN. I shall not insist upon it strenuously at all if Senators feel that it is not right, but I thought it was right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina insist on his point of order?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am bound to do so, Mr. President, because of the precedent which the adoption of the amendment would establish.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona has proposed an amendment, which is now pending and which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 11, on page 3, it is proposed to insert as a new paragraph the following:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $72,000, to be paid to the following-named persons in the amount specified to each, for injuries sustained by shots fired across the American boundary line by soldiers and revolutionists on the Mexican side of the line in the year 1911, to wit: Adolfo Varela, of El Paso, Tex., $3,000; Virginia Moorhead, of El Paso, Tex., $3,000; Abundio Soto, of El Paso, Tex., $4,000; Edwin G. Heaton, of El Paso, Tex., $2,000; Celia Griffiths, of El Paso, Tex., $15,000; A. R. Chandler, of El Paso, Tex., $12,000; Emma Larson, of Douglas, Ariz., $1,000; Elmer E. Crowe, of Douglas, Ariz., $5,000; Francis F. Williams, of Douglas, Ariz., $5,000; John W. Keate, of Douglas, Ariz., $5,000; Joseph W. Harrington, of Douglas, Ariz., $15,000; William R. White, of Douglas, Ariz., $2,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. OVERMAN. That amendment was before the committee, but we did not think that we ought to settle questions growing out of the Mexican War in this way on an urgent deficiency appropriation bill. I make the point of order that the amendment has not been estimated for.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, it is true that I went before the Committee on Appropriations and attempted to get this amendment placed in the bill. I left the committee under the impression that there would be no objection to it. If I understand the rules, the amendment is not subject to a point of order, for a bill embodying the provisions of this amendment has passed the Senate and has been favorably reported in the House of Representatives. A similar item was placed on an appropriation bill at the last session, but the conferees on the part of the Senate, as usual whenever it comes to a matter that a man will not fight for, conceded it, and the bill came back with the item left out.

I attempted a second time, in connection with another appropriation bill, to secure the incorporation of this item, but out of deference to the committee, and owing to the fact that they did not desire any amendments at all put on the bill, I submitted to their wishes. Now, after a judgment by a tribunal established by the Government to adjudicate these claims, and after their report with the testimony is filed here, after the Senate has passed the measure as a separate bill, and passed it a second time as an amendment to an appropriation bill, I am met to-night with the suggestion that it is not a proper item to be incorporated on an urgent deficiency appropriation bill. Mr. President, I want this item added to this bill. I do not think a point of order will lie against it; and I ask the Senator from North Carolina to withdraw the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit the point of order to the Senate. Those who believe the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona is in order will say "aye"; those opposed "no." [A pause.] The "noes" seem to have it, the "noes" have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Chair, as I understood, decided that the "noes" had it and that the amendment was not subject to the point of order. If it is not obnoxious—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair put the question to the Senate whether or not the amendment was in order, and the vote was in the negative—that it was not in order.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I misunderstood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question again, in order that there may be no misunderstanding. Those who believe the amendment is in order will say "aye"; opposed "no." The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I call for a division.

Mr. OVERMAN (to Mr. SMITH of Arizona). Do not ask for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division is called for. Those who think the amendment is in order will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Wait a moment, Mr. President. My patience and my devotion to the business of this legislative body are such that I would rather take whatever medicine they see fit to give me than to unduly delay the passage of the pending measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw the amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Chair will be a little patient with me—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will be abundantly patient with the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I withdraw the demand for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona withdraws the demand for a division. The amendment is rejected.

Mr. BACON. I have an amendment, Mr. President, which was presented to the Senate by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and reported back from the committee favorably, which I now, for the Senator from Massachusetts, offer. I wish to make a short statement in regard to it. I desire that the amendment be inserted on page 3, after line 11.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 11, it is proposed to insert as a separate paragraph the following:

To the heirs of Angelo Albano, $6,000, in accordance with the recommendations of the President contained in his message dated June 26, 1913 (H. Doc. No. 105, 63d Cong., 1st sess.).

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, that is an amount agreed upon between the Executive Department of this Government and the Italian Government, to be paid for the homicide of an Italian who was killed by a mob in the State of Florida. It is a liquidated amount, and its payment has been recommended to Congress in a special message from the President of the United States. A bill introduced for the same purpose has passed the House of Representatives, is now in the Senate, and has had a favorable report at the hands of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The only reason why I ask that this amendment be put upon the appropriation bill rather than to pass the House bill, is that the peculiar phraseology of the House bill, while it authorizes payment does not make specifically an appropriation, and there would still have to be an appropriation made. I have in my hand the report of the House committee, which states the circumstances under which this man was killed. It was recognized as an unjustifiable homicide.

In this case the Government has done what it has heretofore done in several other cases where there have been homicides. In several of the States there have been payments made to foreign governments as some compensation for the homicide. There was one in the case of a homicide by a mob in Louisiana, one in Colorado, one, I think, also in Washington, one possibly in Oregon, and one or two others. Of course, it is recognized that the State is primarily liable, but under the circumstances the Government of the United States has always assumed to settle and pay these debts.

Mr. LANE. There was not such a case in Oregon.

Mr. BACON. Possibly not; but there was in Washington, I think, in the case of some Chinese.

Mr. LANE. That was in Washington.

Mr. BACON. Very well. This particular amendment is now recommended by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I want to state further, Mr. President, that the Italian Government, not knowing the methods which are peculiar to ourselves, does not understand the reason why it is that after the amount has been agreed upon between the two Governments the money is not paid, and the Italian ambassador is making constant application at the State Department and entering protests about it.

The amount involved is $6,000; and I trust that the amendment may be put upon the bill and that it may be retained in conference. It is going to have a very bad effect in its irritating influence if it is not done. Of course, it is not going to lead to war or anything of that kind; I do not mean that; but there will be dissatisfaction, and we owe it, I think, to our obligations and to the agreement which has been made and recognized in every way it can be recognized, except by the final passage of an appropriation, that the claim should be paid. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I can not make a point of order against the amendment; but I want to say that the Italian can wait. This bill is not the proper place for such an amendment, and if the amendment should be adopted I am in favor of paying the claims of Americans if we are to pay the claim of a foreigner.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Let me ask the Senator from North Carolina why he can not make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Because it comes, as I understand—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that it has been reported by a standing committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Because it comes, as I understand, from a standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. But was it referred to the Committee on Appropriations one day before it was offered here? If it was not it can not be considered.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will permit me, I do not think that the mere report by a standing committee will make an amendment in order upon a general appropriation bill. The language of the rule is that the amendment must be moved at the suggestion of a committee. Unless a committee moves its adoption it is not in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations has moved the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the chairman does it by instruction of the committee, of course that makes a difference.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That does not satisfy the rule.

Mr. BACON. I want to state further, if my colleague on the committee will permit me a moment—

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I believe I will present this matter, and then the Senator will understand the inquiry I addressed to the Senator from North Carolina. Rule XVI provides:

2. All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation—shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

That is the case here—

Mr. OVERMAN. That has been done; the amendment was referred to the committee.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is the question I asked the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Arkansas that the amendment was reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations and referred to the Committee on Appropriations on August 13, 1913.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. And the Committee on Appropriations refused to put it on the bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. The committee refused to incorporate it in the bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I did not want the impression to go out that simply because some committee of the Senate has reported in favor of an amendment to an appropriation bill it could be put on here without further action.

Mr. BACON. I want to state that not only has this amendment been reported favorably from the committee, but on yesterday at a meeting of the committee I was instructed to move the acceptance of this amendment by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following:

Pay L. J. Hennessy, for 20 days' extra labor, at $5 per day, rendered as special clerk for the Judiciary Committee lobby investigation, $100.

Pay F. M. Broscius, for 30 days' extra labor, at $5 per day, rendered as special clerk for the Judiciary Committee lobby investigation, $150.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, line 16, before the word "clerks," it is proposed to insert:

Appointment clerk, at the rate of $2,500 per annum.

And, in line 20, it is proposed to strike out "$8,416.70," and insert in lieu thereof "$10,291.70."

Mr. OVERMAN. That simply increases the appropriation $2,500. If the Senator will change it by striking out "$2,500" and inserting "$1,800," I will accept it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to state that this is a new department, and this office has been recommended by the Secretary. All the others have an appointment clerk, and the position in the other cases carries with it a salary of $2,500. It looks like a discrimination against a department that is of sufficient importance for us to create. I think it should be made as efficient as all the others have been.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Secretary himself estimates only $1,800 for this man. In a letter which the Senator gave to me he said $1,800 was a sufficient amount. If the Senator will make it $1,800, I shall be willing to let it go in. Otherwise, I can not consent to it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Will not the Senator split the difference and let us make it $2,000?

Mr. OVERMAN. Not when the Secretary has asked for only $1,800.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think it needs explanation beyond the statement made by the chairman of the committee. I am not going to argue it any further, however.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am going by the Secretary's letter; that is all. In a letter from the Secretary himself he says $1,800 is sufficient. I can not stand here and agree to give a man $2,000 when the Secretary says $1,800 is enough.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think the Senator will understand that there were quite a number of others that were of less importance which caused him to reduce it to $1,800.

Mr. OVERMAN. We will have a legislative appropriation bill here—

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will accept the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina strikes out "$2,500" and inserts "$1,800." The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I withdrew my demand for a division, and the amendment which I offered was left in that position without further action. Since then the Senate has agreed to the item proposed by the Senator from Georgia, giving a certain amount to an Italian who was killed in the State of Florida. I am asking this for American citizens killed on American soil by foreigners on the other side of the line. No point of order can be raised against it, because the bill has passed the Senate once, and the item has been put on an appropriation bill once, and has been favorably reported by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to inquire of the Senator from Arizona whether he reintroduces his former amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Certainly I reintroduce it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to state that I gave the Senate notice that I would not raise a point of order on this amendment. It is subject to a point of order, but I will not raise it, since the amendment of the Senator from Georgia has been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona, which has been heretofore stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 18, page 8, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

Washington, D. C., Office of Supervising Architect: For the preparation of designs and estimates for National Archives Building, as authorized by the act of March 4, 1913, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will accept that amendment, because the Secretary has estimated for it, and it is provided for in a bill that has been passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 56, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

The salaries of the clerk and messengers to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department, from August 16, 1913, are hereby made available for payment of services rendered by Thomas B. Stallings, Richard M. Nelson, and Thomas A. Speight from the above date until their successors are appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, the following:

The expenditure authorized to be made from the reclamation fund by public resolution No. 56, approved August 24, 1912, entitled "Joint resolution appropriating money for the payment of certain claims on account of labor, supplies, materials, and cash furnished in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel," is hereby increased $15,750, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purposes enumerated in said resolution and paying for the spillway to said tunnel: Provided, That claims on account of the construction of the Corbett Tunnel and Spillway not presented to the Secretary of the Interior for investigation before the passage of this act shall be forever barred; and no assignment of such claims after date of public resolution No. 56, approved August 24, 1912, shall be recognized: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall deduct from the amounts to be certified for payment hereunder and under the said resolution to each claimant a proportionate sum to cover the expense of and fair compensation for the person or persons through whose time and services this matter has been laid before Congress, except such claimants as have agreed with such person or persons for compensation; and such deductions shall be certified for payment to such person or persons in like manner as other claims.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am bound to make the point of order on that, that it is not estimated for. When the amount is fully ascertained the Senator probably will get it—next fall or next spring; but it is subject to a point of order now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MYERS. I regret very much that the point of order is made, as I believe it is as germane as some other amendments, but I will have to submit to the ruling.

Mr. JONES. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 51, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

Bureau of Statistics: For continuing investigations and collection of data relating to wages, hours of labor, and other information affecting labor, $15,000.

Mr. JONES. In view of some information that has come to me, I hope the chairman will allow this to go in and be considered in conference. It has been estimated for.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has it been estimated for?

Mr. JONES. Yes; $50,000 was estimated for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that is all, except the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer the following amendment to the amendment of the committee:

I move to strike out, after the word "Provided," in line 10, page 37, the remainder of that line and all of lines 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, and in line 19 down to and including the word "aforsaid," and to substitute therefor the matter which I send to the desk.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that that is practically the language of the interstate-commerce law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, in the amendment proposed by the committee, it is proposed to strike out all after the word

"Provided," in line 10, down to and including the word "aforsaid," in line 19, and to insert:

That in cases where irreparable damage would otherwise ensue to the petitioner a majority of said three judges concurring may, on hearing, after no less than three days' notice to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Attorney General, allow a temporary stay or suspension in whole or in part of the operation of the order of the Interstate Commerce Commission for not more than 60 days from the date of the order of said judges pending the application for the order or injunction, in which case the said order shall contain a specific finding, based upon evidence submitted to the judges making the order and identified by reference thereto, that such irreparable damage would result to the petitioner and specifying the nature of the damage. The said judges may at the time of hearing such application, upon a like finding, continue the temporary stay or suspension in whole or in part until decision upon the application.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand from the Senator that that is substantially the language of the present interstate-commerce act.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is substantially the language of the present interstate-commerce act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before this matter is disposed of I wish to recur for a moment to the subject of venue, to which I referred in my remarks some time ago.

I have prepared an amendment which I think will cover the requirements of the case. I do not desire to press it unless the Senate feels that it is desirable to perfect the bill. I feel that to give the carrier an opportunity to make a choice of the venue is a privilege which it ought not to be given.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope the Senator will introduce his amendment, and I will let it go into conference and be considered in conference. I will accept it.

Mr. WALSH. I move, then, to strike out all of line 16, page 34, after the word "district," and also all of line 17, to and including the word "destination," and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Wherein is the residence of the party or any of the parties upon whose petition the order was made.

Mr. OVERMAN. I accept that amendment.

Mr. WALSH. In line 18, after the word "transportation," I move to insert the following:

Or is not made upon the petition of any party.

Mr. OVERMAN. I accept that.

Mr. WALSH. Then it will be necessary, in order to perfect it, to strike out the sentence commencing on the last line on page 34 and going to and including line 3 on page 35.

Mr. OVERMAN. I accept that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34 it is proposed to strike out all of line 16 after the word "district," also all of line 17, to and including the word "destination," or to strike out the following words:

Where some or all of the transportation covered by the order has either its origin or destination—

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Wherein is the residence of the party, or any of the parties, upon whose petition the order was made.

Also, in line 18, after the word "transportation," it is proposed to insert:

Or is not made upon the petition of any party.

Also, in line 25, beginning with the word "In," it is proposed to strike out:

In case such transportation relates to a through shipment, the term "destination" shall be construed as meaning final destination of such shipment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that I shall ask for a separate vote on section 4, page 70, when the bill gets into the Senate, and I shall also make the point of order against it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to give notice that when the bill gets into the Senate I shall resist the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] by which these four circuit judges were to be kept in existence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments to be proposed as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of those which have been reserved.

The amendments, except those reserved, were concurred in.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I make the point of order, if I understand the situation correctly, upon section 4, on page 70, which was transposed in the bill, I think, to another section. The point of order is that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill, and is in violation of clause 3 of Rule XVI of the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What page is it?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The last page in the bill. It is the civil-service matter. It is the amendment which authorizes internal-revenue collectors and United States marshals to appoint deputies irrespective of the civil-service law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is the same question upon which the Vice President has previously ruled?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course that has been reserved. I ask for a separate vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon concurring in the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Which amendment is it, Mr. President?

Mr. OVERMAN. The amendment that was adopted this morning—the civil-service amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to call attention to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33 of the bill the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] offered an amendment, which was modified by the Senator from Montana, as follows:

On page 33, line 18, after the word "repealed," strike out the bill down to and including line 12, page 34, and in lieu of the words stricken out insert the following words:

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to affect the tenure of any of the judges now acting as circuit judges by appointment under the terms of said act, but such judges shall continue to act under assignment, as in the said act provided, as judges of the district courts and circuit courts of appeals, and in the event of and on the death, resignation, or removal from office of any of such judges his office is hereby abolished, and no successor to him shall be appointed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words in addition to what I said this afternoon. I called attention this afternoon to the fact that the Constitution placed in Congress the power to control from time to time the creation and establishment of inferior courts of the United States. I undertook to urge the fact that this language contemplated in Congress the right to determine just what inferior courts there should be, just what inferior judges there should be, and from time to time to change the same. I urged that the additional language in that paragraph which declared that one of these judges should hold during good behavior must be construed in connection with the power given to Congress to change from time to time, as Congress saw fit, the inferior courts of the country, and construing it in connection with the power vested in Congress the only logical construction must be that this right to hold office during good behavior was conditioned upon Congress leaving the office in existence.

If the right to hold during good behavior fastened upon Congress the obligation to maintain the office during the life of an appointee, you would shackle Congress in its authority to change the inferior judiciary of the country from time to time as Congress saw fit. I insist that it is in the power of Congress to abolish the entire circuit court of appeals if it sees fit. It has control of the creation, establishment, and suspension of the inferior courts of the country. The fact that Congress may have the power should not shock anybody. It does not mean, and we are not to suppose, that Congress would recklessly tear to pieces the judiciary system of the country in so far as it concerns all the inferior courts.

Now, let us see what class these particular judges fall under. When I turn to the act I find that positions for five additional circuit-court judges were created to the end that they might be assigned to the Commerce Court. They were not like the other circuit judges. They were appointed under an entirely different system.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will be glad if the Senator will just let me go on a little further. The other circuit judges are appointed as circuit judges from circuits with their jurisdiction limited to those circuits. The circuit court judge of the fifth circuit and the circuit court judge of the first circuit are appointed as such and commissioned as such, and their jurisdiction is limited to the fifth and the first circuits unless by special assignment the judge is sent elsewhere. He can not grant an injunction outside of his circuit. He can not exercise jurisdiction outside of the circuit to which he is appointed, except where he is designated as the statute permits to add the holding of court somewhere else. He has no general jurisdiction throughout the United States simply as the result of his commission, but he has jurisdiction in the specific circuit to which he is appointed.

Now, these men have no jurisdiction anywhere except in the Commerce Court unless a specific order attaches to them sending them somewhere. The law makes them circuit court judges of no particular place. They are entirely a class by themselves. They were created to establish this Commerce Court and for nothing else, as the language of the law clearly shows. They were limited to sit upon the court for five years, and then to be assigned somewhere else to sit and hold court; but they do not go back when they cease to sit upon the Commerce Court to the circuit in which they lived and become a circuit court judge of that circuit. They never, under the terms of the law, take their place in the judiciary of this country along with the other circuit court judges appointed for the specific circuits in which they reside. They are mere floats, created solely for the purpose of creating this Commerce Court. They stand by themselves in that respect; and now when we come in our wisdom or nonwisdom and decide that we no longer need a Commerce Court, that we are going to abolish this one of our inferior tribunals, and when we provide, further, that these men turned loose and afloat can not longer be assigned wherever the Chief Justice thinks well to assign them to go into some other circuit, to come down into our circuit and hold court as circuit court judges—when we propose to say that they shall no longer be assigned, the Senator from Montana comes forward with an amendment providing that they shall be preserved, though the object of their creation has ceased, and that they still shall be assigned as circuit judges differing from all others, out of the class of the others.

Mr. President and Senators, what the House has done is this: It has abolished the court and it has provided that these men, appointed solely for that court, shall not be assigned anywhere else to hold court as circuit court judges.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has the Senator at hand the language of the act which created these judges and this court?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have it, I think.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The House provision in the bill says "five additional circuit judges provided for by act of Congress approved June 18, 1910," and so forth. Will the Senator cite the language of that act, if he has it there?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The act is quite lengthy. This is the paragraph that created it—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator read simply that portion of it?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (reading):

The five additional circuit judges authorized by the act to create a Commerce Court, and for other purposes, approved June 18, 1910, shall hold office during good behavior, and from time to time shall be designated and assigned by the Chief Justice of the United States for service in the district court of any district, or the circuit court of appeals for any circuit or in the Commerce Court, and when so designated and assigned for service in a district court or circuit court of appeals shall have the powers and jurisdiction in this act conferred upon a circuit judge in his circuit.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator is reading from the Code?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I asked for the language of the original act creating the judgeship.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not the original act in my hand.

Mr. WALSH. I have it here, if the Senator wants to hear it read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to have it in the Record.

Mr. WALSH. There are three paragraphs of the act which deserve consideration in this connection. One is as follows:

The said court—

That is, the Commerce Court—shall be composed of five judges to be from time to time designated and assigned thereto by the Chief Justice of the United States, from among the circuit judges of the United States, for the period of five years, except that in the first instance the court shall be composed of the five additional circuit judges to be appointed as hereinafter provided.

That refers to this paragraph:

The President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint five additional circuit judges—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator give me the paragraph from which he is reading?

Mr. WALSH. I read now from public print, page 2, the third paragraph:

The President shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint five additional circuit judges, no two of whom shall be from the same judicial circuit, who shall hold office during good behavior, and who shall be from time to time designated and assigned by the Chief Justice of the United States for service in the circuit court for any district or the circuit court of appeals for any circuit or in the Commerce Court.

And finally this:

If at any time the business of the Commerce Court does not require the services of all the judges, the Chief Justice of the United States may, by writing, signed by him and filed in the Department of Justice, terminate the assignment of any of the judges or temporarily assign him for service in any circuit court or circuit court of appeals.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That language is not substantially different from the language which I read. So these circuit court judges are not circuit court judges of a circuit. They stand off in a class utterly distinct from the other circuit court judges. They have no circuits. They are five floats created for the purpose of establishing this Commerce Court. They have no jurisdiction anywhere unless assigned to go. They have no continuing jurisdiction in the circuit in which they reside. They can not try a case in the circuit in which they reside or entertain an application for an injunction unless they are assigned there to sit on a court. There is no difficulty to differentiate them from the others.

And now we are abolishing the Commerce Court. We are dispensing with one of our inferior judicial tribunals, and as we abolish it, the amendment of the Senator from Montana seeks to perpetuate the men in office, who were put in office solely because we needed this court, not only on account of the present instance but on account of the general power of the Congress to regulate the inferior judiciary—to make a new court or to abolish a new court as the exigencies of the country require—I object to seeking to perpetuate in office five men, whose office is gone and whose services are not necessary according to the terms of their creation.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I join with the Senator from Georgia in opposing the continuance in office of these judges who have been serving upon the Commerce Court, not only because I am convinced of the constitutional power and legislative right of Congress to abolish the office and to do away with the tenure of the judges who have been holding the offices, but as a matter of public policy.

Why is it that the Senate has three times, I believe, voted for the abolishment of this Commerce Court? Why is it that the House of Representatives has three times voted for the abolishment of this Commerce Court? It is because of their decisions. It is because these particular men sitting as judges on this court have ignored and disregarded the public interest, and their decisions have been unworthy of public support and public approval, and the most convenient way of doing away with their positions of power and trust was to abolish the court. The other House and the Senate have been fully justified in their action with regard to these men.

In the bill it is provided that any case coming up with regard to the Interstate Commerce Commission shall go before three judges, at least one of whom shall be a circuit judge, and since there are proposed to be left by the terms of this amendment these four itinerant judges, what more natural than that these very men shall be assigned by the Supreme Court or called for by a judge having a case to pass upon? Then we would have the spectacle of a judge taking up a case involving the affairs of the Interstate Commerce Commission being aided by two of these gentlemen, with a majority of the court controlling, and while we are doing away with the court we are continuing the very men in a position where they can do the very thing which led to the abolishment of the court. I am amazed at the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator can not be more amazed at the amendment than I am amazed at the doctrine he announced in the Senate. The Senator states a proposition the logic of which would naturally follow from the argument of the Senator from Georgia, that we can abolish the ninth circuit and abolish the judges who are judges of that circuit, and we could the next day create the ninth circuit and have a new judge and the same circuit. It places in our hands, if they are correct, the power to get rid of any judge that Congress might think we ought not to have, and the next day pass an act which would create the same jurisdiction and the same court and the President would be called on to name a new judge.

Now, Mr. President, that, in my judgment, is precisely the logic of the argument of the Senator from Georgia, but not stated quite so earnestly and clearly as by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. President, I do not want to enter upon a discussion of this matter at this late hour, but if we should adopt the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] we will simply be passing upon a question of policy. If we should refuse to adopt it, we would then be construing the Constitution in reference to a matter which has been a subject of debate for more than a hundred years. It has been one of the things upon which the great men of this country have at times differed. It has been a power that has never been exercised but once in the history of the country. It was exercised under conditions and circumstances and environments which have always been looked upon as such as not to be regarded as a calm determination of the power which was sought to be exercised. I am not willing, therefore, to have this matter determined in this way at this hour of the night with this portion of the Senate and no more here. If the Senate were here in full and if, when the attendance is complete, in its wisdom it should determine that it has power to abolish these judges, whenever it gets ready to do so, so far as I am concerned, of course I will abide by the judgment of the Senate.

But I do not propose to have it said that the Congress of the United States can abolish any Federal judge that the Congress sees fit to abolish at a time when there is less than a quorum here, when we are carrying it through on an appropriation bill, and establishing a precedent which, while once established, has never been exercised in the whole history of the country.

I do not propose, either, to criticize that particular precedent which was established, but I only need to remind the readers of history that the most earnest advocates, the most earnest eulogists of the men who were responsible for that have never hesitated to speak of it in words of apology, and that the great lawyers of the country have never since given their approval of it either upon the bench or in matters of legislation.

So if we are going to establish a precedent let us do it after a full consideration, at a time when the Senate is here, when the membership is complete, and we will establish a precedent that we will not have to reconsider in a few years.

Mr. President, this entire legislation in regard to the Commerce Court illustrates how unsatisfactory it is to deal with these questions as we are dealing with this particular matter. This Commerce Court was created under the lash. It did not represent the judgment of the Senate or of Congress at the time it was created. It was created under the influence of the Executive authority and against the judgment of the Legislature which enacted the law.

It has never been satisfactory because it did not receive the deliberate judgment and the deliberate affirmation of Congress in the first place. It was not asked for by the people. There was no public demand for it. Now, we are undertaking, in order to amend the situation, to abolish the court at a time when we are not prepared to consider it as such a measure ought to be considered. While this may be adopted here tonight, I want to suggest that if the conference report comes back, the Senate will have to be here in its complete membership before this body establishes the rule that the Congress of the United States can work its will upon any Federal judge that it sees fit. So profound a precedent should only be established after the most deliberate consideration by a full Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] as modified by the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]?

Mr. SMITH of GEORGIA. Mr. President, I only want to say to Senators just one word. Twice this subject was debated at the last Congress before the Senate, and the Senate voted in favor of the provision that the House has now sent us, to strike out the authority to assign these judges throughout the country after the Commerce Court was abolished.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I will not take more than one minute. Section 1 of Article III of the Constitution provides:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation, which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

If it is admitted that Congress has established the circuit court and the Constitution having reposed a part of the judicial power of the United States in the circuit court, and these gentlemen, four of them—if that be the number—being duly commissioned as circuit court judges, whether they are attached to a particular territorial circuit or not, I do not see how we can abolish the particular judgeships held by those circuit judges unless we abolish the institution of the circuit court. Therefore I voted for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana, and shall vote for it again.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, there has been great doubt expressed from time to time during the history of our Government as to whether the power resided in Congress to do what is contemplated by this proposed act. Only once, as has been stated, has Congress attempted to exercise the power. From such consideration as I have given to the question, I entertain no doubt in my own mind as to the existence of a power in the Congress of the United States to do what is provided for in this bill. The power expressly conferred upon Congress to ordain and establish inferior courts carries with it, by necessary implication, the right to maintain, regulate, modify, change, or abolish. If, for instance, it were deemed necessary at one time to create eight or nine or more circuits, and the business of the country could subsequently be provided for with fewer circuits and fewer judges, where would be the power, if not in Congress under the constitutional provision, to make the necessary change?

I desire, however, to say, Mr. President, although this is my view of the law involved, I have no hesitation in expressing my earnest approval of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], because I can conceive of no greater injury that could be done to the judicial department of the country than to have it adopted as the policy of Congress to use this great constitutional prerogative as a substitute for impeachment.

These judges who have been the subject of comment during this discussion have not been heard in their own defense. It is not conceivable that a President of the United States would have appointed these judges if he did not believe them worthy citizens and able lawyers.

The reason that the Commerce Court has failed to receive the favor of the public is largely the reason stated a moment ago by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. There was no popular demand for the court at the time of its creation; the bill proposing to establish the court found no hearty support in the very Congress that passed it with reluctance. I think it would be very unfair—after four or five lawyers have accepted a commission from the President of the United States to take what they had a right to understand was a life position, subject to good behavior—that within 3 or 4 or 5 years the Congress for the first time in 111 years should undertake to exercise a power confessedly used as a substitute for the impeachment process. If any of these judges have been found untrue or unworthy, we have a familiar procedure established by the Constitution for removing them. That they have not been guilty of offense justifying impeachment is clear from the circumstance that at no time has such a proceeding been threatened against them.

I think this Congress would do an unwise act in rejecting the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana. It should do something to preserve that love for law and order which is so essential in these days. No great harm can be threatened, no wrong can be done, no mischief can go beyond correction if the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana is adopted; and I shall vote for it, not, as I say, that I have any doubt as to the power of Congress, but I think, in fairness and in justice to these men, whose names and reputations are trembling in the balance to-night, I should give my support to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there can be no doubt to my mind of the right of Congress to abolish a court which it has the right and power to create. If Congress does not possess that right, then we had better be careful hereafter about creating new courts or judicial districts in the United States. If Congress were to create an additional district in the State of New York and that additional district were to be filled by a judge, and afterwards, because of the failure of business, Congress were to discover that that court was wholly unnecessary, could there be any question as to the power of Congress to abolish that district and unite it with some other district? Manifestly there would be no question as to that power.

If the power exists to abolish a given district, then, by the abolition of the office, the tenure of the officeholder is clearly determined and ends when the office ends. If Congress has the power to create an additional district, and under the law it is filled by a judge, and then it has the power to abolish the district and by that act to end the tenure of the judge, surely Congress has the power, for the same reason, to create additional circuit judges, and when the hour has arrived that those judges are no longer necessary, in the opinion of Congress, to abolish the office of additional circuit judge. If the power exists in the first case I mentioned it exists in the latter case.

Mr. President, I put my vote upon this proposition upon a different ground than that mentioned by my good friend the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I put it upon the ground, first, that Congress has the power, and has the right to exercise that power, to abolish the office of additional circuit judge, which it created and which it can abolish. I am in favor of abolishing the Commerce Court, and with it the office of judge of the Commerce Court, not upon the ground that the individual occupants of that office may or may not have decided questions of law as I think they should have been decided, but upon the ground that the court itself ought never to have been created and ought no longer to exist; and because I believe the court no longer ought to exist I shall vote to abolish the court; and since I shall vote to abolish the only thing which made a judge necessary and shall vote to terminate the very office he fills, I shall therefore, in logical sequence, vote to abolish the office of additional circuit judge, a thing not heard of before.

Mr. President, about the human side of this question, we are told that men were appointed to office and had a right to expect that they should hold it for life. Not so, Mr. President. No man has any right to any office, as a matter of natural right, in this country. When he is placed in an office he has the right to expect to hold that office so long as the law gives him the right to hold it; and when a man is appointed to the office of additional circuit judge, he takes it with the full knowledge that if the law is changed the office may fall, and his tenure of office thereby also fall. There is no contract when we appoint a man judge of a United States court that the court will never be abolished. If there were such a monstrous doctrine as that, then this Government had better never create another court or another district, or place in office another man who can claim you have no right to abolish the court, however useless it may have become.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, one moment will be the sum of the time I shall occupy to address myself to what is either a misconception on the part of the able Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] as to the meaning of the provision or to confess that I myself have indulged in so great an error as to have some responsibility for this amendment. If the position of this bill were that it left the judges where they could again exercise a final jurisdiction in the matter of commerce and render such orders as were complained of, the strictures of the Senator from Oklahoma should be very weighty with us, for we would be abolishing the court only in name and yet be establishing it in power in another form. I beg to inform the Senator that my construction of the provision is—and I think its letter and its spirit will bear out that construction—that they are now judges merely assigned on circuit to district court duty and if they render an opinion touching commerce matters an appeal may be taken from them to the Circuit Court of Appeals and from there to the Supreme Court of the United States, in appropriate cases, whereas formerly their decisions were filed unless, on their invitation, the Supreme Court of the United States should review their decision. That being so, this new provision makes a very considerable change and avoids the very evil which the Senator rightly apprehends would be dangerous if continued.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole upon the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] as modified by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" seem to have it, and the amendment as modified is concurred in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask for a division.

There were, upon a division—ayes 25, noes 23.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON], and withhold my vote unless it should be necessary to make a quorum. Then I will vote.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. As that Senator is not present I do not feel at liberty to vote.

Mr. JAMES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. In his absence I withhold my vote unless it should be necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. KERN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY], except in case my vote is necessary to make a quorum. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. LEA (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. NEWLANDS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. THORNTON (when Mr. RANDELL's name was called). I announce the necessary absence from the city of my colleague. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have the privilege of voting to make a quorum. As it appears now that my vote is necessary, I will vote. If, later on, I find that it is not necessary, I will withdraw it. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (after having voted in the negative). I should like to have the RECORD show that I make the same declaration. I voted, under the right reserved to me, in order to make a quorum. If there is a quorum present without my vote, I will withdraw it.

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], with the privilege, however, of voting if necessary to make a quorum. I inquire whether a quorum has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not yet.

Mr. WALSH. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRISTOW. I was requested to announce that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is necessarily detained from the Chamber to-night.

Mr. BANKHEAD (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently. I have a pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. REED. I desire to say, in explanation of my vote, that when I voted I knew, or felt, that my vote would be necessary in order to make a quorum. My pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] gives me that right.

While I am on my feet I desire again to announce the necessary absence from the city of my colleague [Mr. STONE].

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], but when he left the Chamber he insisted upon my voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is necessarily absent from the city. He is paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. KERN. My vote being necessary to make a quorum, I vote "nay."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 22, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not a quorum has voted. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the Secretary be directed to call the roll of absent Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a right to ask that the names of absent Senators be called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. THORNTON. I again announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. RANDELL]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to the roll call—not a quorum. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to compel the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. BACON. I think there ought to be an exception made of such of them as are known to be ill.

Mr. KERN. The Sergeant at Arms will probably exercise some discretion in the matter. I am using the language of the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to compel the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms is directed to compel the attendance of absent Senators who are well.

At 10 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m. Mr. PITTMAN entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

At 10 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m. Mr. HITCHCOCK entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

At 11 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m. Mr. GOFF entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is now present. Without objection, proceedings under the call will be vacated.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. The roll call having begun under the order of the Senate, it was suspended for lack of a quorum, and that is still the order of business and excludes debate.

Mr. BORAH. When the roll had been called, it was found that there was no quorum, and there being no quorum there was no roll call. Besides, the Senator from Idaho has the floor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I rise to a point of order, which I can make when the Senator from Idaho has the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My point of order is that the Senator from Idaho is out of order, and that the business before the Senate is the roll call, which was begun. There was no completed roll call, because there was no quorum present, and the calling of the roll is the continuing order when a quorum is announced until it is finished.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. The moment the roll call disclosed that there was no quorum, the roll call and everything else ended and was a nullity until there was a quorum present. It could not attach to that which happened when there was no quorum, but that which happened after there was a quorum and made it complete.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator then claim that there has been no roll call?

Mr. BORAH. I do not.

Mr. OVERMAN. There ought not to have been any call. The Vice President ordered it himself. It is the first time I have ever known that to be done in the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There was a call for a vote by yeas and nays on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and the Chair decided that the Senate had sustained the call for the yeas and nays and the roll call proceeded. A quorum not having voted the roll call was not complete.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is mistaken about that. The vote was taken on the amendment by a division, and the vote stood 25 to 23, I think, and no quorum having voted on the roll call, the Chair ordered the roll to be called.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from North Carolina is mistaken.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from North Carolina asked that the names of the absentees be called when the roll was called on the amendment. The Senator is right about that. Then there was no quorum. I suggested that the absentees be called, and the Chair very discourteously to me ordered that the roll be called when he had no right to order a roll call.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho is in order and will proceed.

[Mr. BORAH addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me to make a request?

Mr. BORAH. I will yield to the Senator for a request if the Senator will not take advantage of the fact that I yield the floor to him.

Mr. OVERMAN. This bill involves some $4,000,000 of urgent deficiencies of the Government, actual deficiencies. The Government must have the money in order to keep house. We have a quorum here, but we lack about 10 of a voting quorum. In order that this bill may pass and the Government may have its money to keep house, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the yeas and nays be vacated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I object.

Mr. OVERMAN. The objection comes too late. It has been ordered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, did the Senator from North Carolina ask unanimous consent?

Mr. OVERMAN. I did.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I take it the Senator would not ask for unanimous consent until I have an opportunity to object, under the circumstances under which he got the floor?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly not. I thought the Senator from Idaho was perfectly willing.

Mr. BORAH. I do not yet know what the request was.

Mr. OVERMAN. Frankly, I asked that unanimous consent be given to vacate the order for the yeas and nays in order that we might have a viva voce vote or a division.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to the vacation of the order. I did not understand what was the unanimous consent asked.

Mr. OVERMAN. My purpose in asking unanimous consent was that we might do something to-night, and it is impossible to do it without a voting quorum. If we could get unanimous consent to vacate the order for the yeas and nays, then we could take a viva voce vote or a vote by division.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, I am perfectly willing, and shall not object to unanimous consent that the order now pending for the yeas and nays may be vacated; but I do not want to be understood as consenting that whenever we do vote, we vote viva voce. We will determine that when we reach it, but I am willing now that this particular order may be vacated, and I shall not object.

Mr. OVERMAN. I said either by viva voce vote or by a rising vote—a division.

Mr. BORAH. I am perfectly willing that the order for a yea-and-nay vote shall be vacated as the order now stands. I will not object to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make a motion to adjourn?

Mr. BORAH. I will.

Mr. JAMES. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not do that.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is absolutely impossible to get a voting quorum to-night.

Mr. BORAH. May I make a suggestion, Mr. President? If this matter could be put in such condition that the conference committee could consider it, so far as I am concerned I would be willing to defer the argument until such time as we can make it under more convenient circumstances.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this is not the end of this matter, even if the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] be adopted. That, of course, would send it to conference. The House is very insistent upon this bill as it came from that body. The vote there was two to one in favor of the abolition of these judges. It will probably come back here, and we could have a discussion of the matter when we have a quorum; but it ought to go to conference at once, if possible.

Mr. BORAH. Well, as I have said, so far as I am concerned, I have no desire, Mr. President, to do what might be considered by my colleagues an unseemly or improper thing; but I feel so earnestly about the matter that I am not willing that it shall pass off under the circumstances under which it is passing now. If it goes to conference and comes back here, and there is a Senate here, I shall be perfectly willing and perfectly content to submit as briefly as I can my objections and let the Senate pass upon the matter; but I say, without, of course, any feeling toward any particular Member, that I would not consent, if I could prevent it, to the Senate of the United States under these peculiar conditions establishing this precedent. When it comes, it must come as the result—as the deliberate judgment of a full Senate of the United States after full discussion. If that can not be had, one thing will be had, the debate of 1802 will go completely into this Record if I have the physical ability to stand here and put it into the Record.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, the Senator understands that the only thing that would go to conference would be the Senate amendments. That part of the bill which abolishes the Commerce Court would not be in conference.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no; that has been adopted by the Senate and does not go to conference. The only thing that would go to conference would be the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and the amendments we have put on the bill in the Senate to-day.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator and I agree exactly. He has said just what I said.

[Mr. BORAH addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I desire to ask the Senator if he is willing to yield for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. BORAH. I am always willing to accommodate the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It would be an accommodation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Before the motion is made, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed by the Senate to telegraph Senators who are absent from the city that their presence is needed here to attend to the important business of the Senate, that there is urgent and important business before the Senate, and that their presence is desired here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will be instructed to telegraph absent Senators to return.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, October 4, 1913, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, October 3, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Great Jehovah, Architect and Builder of the Universe, Father of all souls, enter Thou more completely into our hearts and enlarge them by Thy grace, that our sympathies may have a wider sweep, going out to our fellow men in all the conditions and circumstances of life, that as workers with Thee we may hasten the coming of Thy kingdom, that evil may take wings and fly away, wars cease to be, peace and goodwill reign in every heart. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3321) to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate amendment No. 609 and had receded from Senate amendment No. 609 to said bill.

NETTIE JACKE.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of House resolution 259, to pay the funeral expenses of the late Arthur C. Jacke, who for nearly three years was an efficient Capitol policeman, and also to pay to his widow the usual six months' salary—the usual resolution in cases of this kind.

The SPEAKER. Is that a resolution from the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. GOULDEN. It is not; but I have the consent of the acting chairman, Mr. SMITH of Texas, and others of the Committee on Accounts to make this request this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read House resolution 259, authorizing the Clerk of the House to pay to Nettie Jacke, widow of Arthur C. Jacke, six months' salary and funeral expenses of said Arthur C. Jacke, late a United States Capitol policeman, as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Nettie Jacke, widow of Arthur C. Jacke, late United States Capitol policeman, a sum equal to six months of his salary as such policeman, and an additional amount not exceeding $332.50 for the funeral expenses of said Arthur C. Jacke.

With the following amendment:

In line 6 strike out "$332.50" and insert in lieu thereof "$250."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

THE TARIFF—COTTON FUTURES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the Speaker lay before the House the tariff bill, H. R. 3321.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the tariff bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARDWICK. For what purpose does the Chair lay this bill before the House?

The SPEAKER. He lays it before the House because the gentleman from Alabama requests it.

Mr. HARDWICK. For what purpose does he lay it before the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its amendment to Senate amendment 609, and agree to the action of the Senate in receding from said Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House recede from its amendment to Senate amendment No. 609 to House bill 3321, and agree to the recession of the Senate from that amendment.

Mr. HINDS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that procedure is unnecessary and might be dangerous.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the further point of order that the amendment is not before the House and is not subject to any action by the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen will hear me a moment—of course all I desire is to pass this bill in such a way that there can be no question about it. I recognize that there is a parliamentary question that has been raised in the past, but never directly decided, as to whether when the Senate recedes from a Senate amendment that has been passed by the House the recession of the Senate carries the whole thing out of the bill. Of course, there are two sides to it. I recognize that; but I would not be performing my duty to the country properly, in my opinion, if I left any question or any doubt about this bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In a moment.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is right on that point, or I would not interrupt.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I prefer not to be interrupted.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right; I will speak in my own time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, the situation is this, Mr. Speaker: The Senate agreed to an amendment to this tariff bill, an entirely new matter, independent of the subject matter of the bill. It came to the House, and the House amended it by striking out the Senate amendment and substituting an entirely new amendment. The bill then went back to the Senate, and, so far as this particular item is concerned, the Senate itself recognized that there was something in issue by disagreeing to the House amendment and then receding from its own amendment.

Mr. Speaker, if a recession on the part of the Senate carried this whole matter out of controversy, it would not have been necessary for the Senate to disagree to the House amendment; but the Senate has disagreed to the House amendment, thereby making an issue, and it then receded from its amendment. I am not concerned about this matter in respect to the parliamentary situation, except that I want no doubt about it. I should have been glad to see action by the two Houses on the subject matter of the controversy. I was unwilling to agree to the Senate amendment, because I thought it was both dangerous and radical, but I did believe that the amendment which was sent to the Senate by the House was safe, and would have produced remedial legislation which would have been satisfactory to the country. Realizing the fact, however, that this great piece of legislation is pending before the country, and the necessity for immediate action, and realizing the fact that the subject matter of Senate amendment 609 can be taken up in the House at a later day and legislated upon, I also realize that this is no time for anyone to stand in the way of the legislation becoming a law, simply because of this Senate amendment. The two Houses are in absolute disagreement. Legislation can not be reached along the line that is proposed in the Senate amendment to either tax out of existence the cotton exchanges of the country or regulate them, whichever line you desire to take. That is impossible at this time. Therefore, it is necessary for us to recede from our action in reference to the matter in order that the two Houses may reach a concurrent opinion and pass this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to go into a lengthy argument in reference to the parliamentary situation. I recognize the fact that Mr. Reed at one time, when a similar question had been raised, wrote a letter to the Senate in which he stated that where the Senate receded from its original amendment to an appropriation bill it carried with it the House amendment but, as a matter of fact, that question has never been lawfully decided in this House.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, it had to be decided at that time, because the bill went on to conference and became a law without that provision being considered again.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the issue was never directly raised. I make this motion, Mr. Speaker, and if the Chair desires to hold that any further action is unnecessary, of course that is for the Chair to decide. I make the motion, however, which will bring the two Houses together at once, as I believe it to be the desire of every Member here, and then there can be no question about the matter, there can be no issue in respect to it. I do not suppose that any gentlemen on this side of the House who desires to see the bill pass, or on that side of the House if he is favorable to the passage of this bill, desires to do otherwise at this stage of the procedure than to bring the two Houses together and produce an immediate passage of this legislation. Therefore my purpose in making the motion is simply to avoid any controversy that may arise in the future. I take it that if we sent a bill relating to cotton futures to the Senate, or if the Senate should send a bill to the House, and the House should take the bill and adopt an entirely new substitute, that the Senate would not dispose of that bill until there had been a concurrence of opinion between the two Houses in reference to the House substitute. This proposition stands in the same relation, in my judgment, but I am willing to have the Speaker rule upon it without any extended argument.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I think all are agreed in the desire to see the pending tariff bill become a law as early as possible—certainly no one is more desirous of that than I am—but in the judgment of some of us there is nothing that this House can or need now do, and the only thing required to make the bill a law is for it to receive the signatures of the Speaker of the House, the Vice President of the United States, and the President of the United States. The situation is this: The Senate adopted various amendments to the bill, the House disagreed to the Senate amendments, and the bill went to conference. The conferees agreed on all items of the bill except one Senate amendment, relating to cotton futures. As to that the conferees reported an inability to agree. The matter came back to the House. The partial conference report was adopted and then the House agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment. It went back to the Senate. The Senate disagreed to the House amendment to its amendment and then receded from its own amendment. In my judgment, the action of the Senate in disagreeing to the House amendment was entirely unnecessary and improper, because when it once receded from its own amendment, cutting away the foundation carried with it all of the superstructure. Now, the trouble with the motion of the gentleman from Alabama is that it is predicated upon the assumption that there was an affirmative individual act of the House in amending the Senate amendment.

But that seems to me an error in that the House amendment to the Senate amendment of necessity rested on the Senate amendment and can not exist except by virtue of that amendment. Now, if it were in order for the House to recede from its amendment, it would be in order not only to recede from the amendment, but to agree to the Senate amendment to which it is an amendment, and then you would have the position of the House of Representatives agreeing to an amendment that did not exist. Now, the gentleman says that it would not be possible, if the Senate had passed an original bill and it had come to the House and they had stricken all out except the enacting clause and then had agreed to a substitute, for the Senate to have disposed of the matter without considering the House substitute. Why, the Senate could have laid its own bill on the table and it would have ended then and there, and their act of recession from the amendment they adopted is in effect laying it on the table and disposing of it forever. Now, the precedent is clear, and the fact that there was no ruling by the Chair does not take away from the binding effect of it. In the Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, when a bill relating to appropriations for the District of Columbia was up, it went to conference with a disagreement between the two Houses. There was an amendment known as amendment numbered 74, upon which the conferees could not agree. That amendment came back to the House and was agreed to by the House with an amendment. It went back to the Senate, and the Senate thereupon disagreed to the House amendment and receded from its own amendment. The bill then went to further conference on other disagreements between the two Houses. Those disagreements were solved, and the two Houses came into accord and the bill became a law and was never questioned. Now, the gentleman from Alabama says, and properly says, that in a matter of this great importance no one desires to have any doubt about the matter, but there is no doubt about the matter.

The Supreme Court of the United States has expressly settled any doubt that might exist as to whether the question could be raised afterwards. When this bill receives the signature of the Speaker of the House, of the presiding officer of the Senate, and of the President of the United States, and when the Journals of the Houses show, as they will show, that this has occurred, the matter is beyond collateral attack and there is no more possibility of involving the validity of this act by virtue of our step here than there is involving the validity of any other act about which no question is ever raised, and to entertain a motion about a matter that has ceased to exist I believe sets a precedent that is fraught with very great danger in the future. In regard to this motion the gentleman may be in a position to know what the House will do, but in a parliamentary sense the House could do several things. It could refuse to agree to the gentleman's motion and it would be in order to agree to some other motion that would find us much further from a final solution of the tariff matter than we are at this moment.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will permit, the Chair would like to ask the gentleman what harm could possibly be to pass the motion which the gentleman from Alabama offers—

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I do not think that the House—

The SPEAKER (continuing). Even if it is superfluous?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think that the House is confronted with the proposition of what harm it will do. The House is confronted with the question of power. In my judgment it can not do it because the matter is not before the House and can not be before the House, and while it might in this instance do no harm to go through what I believe to be a perfectly void action, there are conceivable instances in which it might do great harm, and I again suggest to the Chair this, that if the Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman from Alabama is in order and that motion should not be agreed to, then there are other motions which are also in order that if adopted might present a situation where you would have a very serious tangle touching the passage of this bill, and for that reason I am not willing, without at least voicing a protest, to see the House take an action that I believe is without warrant.

There is nothing before the House. You can not have this House amendment, like Mahomet's coffin, suspended between heaven and earth. It only existed as an amendment to the Senate amendment, and when that amendment disappeared the superstructure went with it, the House amendment went with it, and there is nothing before the House now to consider, and the Chair has nothing to lay before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] is recognized.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, it is with reluctance that I rise to take a few moments of the time of the House to oppose the point of order made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS]. But I believe the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is the correct motion for the final passage or disposition of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with the citation from Hinds' Precedents, quoted in this case, holding that under existing conditions it is not necessary for the House to take further action. I will not discuss the case in detail, for the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has ably narrated the facts relative to such citation. I wish to add, however, that the decision is in no way binding as a precedent, for it was clearly obiter, as the Speaker never made a ruling in the House on the subject.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is fundamental that before any act can pass Congress the minds of both Houses must agree upon all details of the legislation. Now, what is the history of this bill? The House passed it, it went to the Senate, and the Senate adopted a number of amendments. All of those amendments became a part and parcel of this bill. As to the Clarke amendment, while the House did not originally legislate on the subject, the Senate did legislate on it, and it was built onto the tariff bill and became as much a part of the tariff bill as a room built on an existing house. The Senate amendments were all referred to conference, the House disagreeing to the Clarke amendment with the other amendments. The conferees met and reached a final agreement on all the amendments, each of them being a part of the tariff bill save the Clarke amendment, and they reported a disagreement on that amendment. The Journal of the House will show that the House adopted a conference report which disposed of all the amendments save the Clarke amendment. The Clarke amendment was a part of this tariff bill as much as any other item in it, and by it the bill was held up and could not go to the President until both Houses of Congress had reached an agreement as to that.

The Senate having incorporated in this bill legislation on this subject, the House, acting within its powers, saw fit to add additional formative legislation on that subject, that subject being a part of this tariff bill, and they adopted the Underwood-Lever amendment. The Journal of this House shows that the House has agreed with the Senate in everything pertaining to this bill, save this Clarke amendment. But the House Journal shows that the House adopted formative legislation on it, adopting a part of the Clarke amendment and adding a new legislative proposition. And if the contention of the gentleman is sound, when this tariff bill is enacted into law, the bill will show that it does not include this Underwood-Lever proposition, and the Journal of the House will show that the House did adopt that legislative proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. CRISP. With pleasure.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not true, as decided by the Supreme Court in connection with the McKinley tariff law, that when the Journal of the House shows the approval of the Speaker of the House and the Journal of the Senate shows the approval of the presiding officer of the Senate to a bill and the bill has received the approval of the President, the court will not go into the question as to the correctness of the passage of the bill, but will hold it a valid law? Was not that expressly decided where an entire paragraph was involved in the McKinley tariff law?

Mr. CRISP. I think that is true; but the Journal did not affirmatively show that the House had adopted the legislative proposition, and the Journal failed to show any recession of the House from that legislative affirmative proposition it had previously adopted.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman answer me another inquiry? What is now before the House? The Senate amendment amended?

Mr. CRISP. The proposition before the House is the disagreement of the Senate to the House amendment to the Clarke amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. You have only an amendment to a Senate amendment. Now, if the Senate amendment has disappeared, as it clearly has, where is your House amendment? I repeat: Is it in the air?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman from Georgia will allow me just a moment, I think clearly the proposition before the House is not a question of the Senate amendment, but that the question before the House is the action of the Senate on the amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] allow me to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is it the Speaker laid before the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, by the permission of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], I wish to propound this inquiry to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. In numerous instances there were amendments placed upon this bill by the Senate, and those amendments went to conference, and the conferees reported an agreement upon the Senate amendments with amendments. That action of the conference was brought to the House and was ratified by the House.

Now, suppose the Senate had not ratified one of these items, but had receded from the Senate amendment. Would that have left the matter up in the air? What would have been the result?

Mr. SHERLEY. That would have the result of destroying the conference report. Upon a new conference being asked, it would be asked only as to any matters upon which there were disagreements, and that that particular amendment would have been eliminated.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Suppose there had been no further conference asked?

Mr. SHERLEY. Then there would have been no final action on the bill. But that does not touch the point. Here is a case where a complete agreement has been reached except as to one matter. Now, the Senate, after action by the House as to the disagreement, withdraws the subject matter of that disagreement; and under those circumstances I contend there is nothing respecting that disagreement before the House.

Mr. CRISP. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to yield further to the gentleman in discussing this question.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Georgia permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CRISP. I will.

Mr. ADAMSON. Is not the only issue here between the gentlemen the question as to whether or not the Senate, without consent of the House, can end a matter in issue between the two Houses by receding from its own proposition after the House has concurred in it with an amendment?

Mr. CRISP. Yes; that is the proposition.

Mr. ADAMSON. Can the Senate, after the House has concurred in its amendment with an amendment, take it out of issue without the consent of the House?

Mr. CRISP. I do not think so; and that was exactly the point I was proceeding to address myself to when the gentleman from Kentucky asked me to yield.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the House had not amended the Senate amendment, it is clear that the gentleman from Kentucky would be right in his position and the Chair would be right in sustaining the point of order. But inasmuch as the House has amended the Senate amendment and made it an issue, it is in issue between the two Houses and can not cease to be an issue until it has been disposed of by the two Houses.

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CRISP. I regret I can not yield. I want to finish my speech.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. CRISP. Now, Mr. Speaker, as I said, it was fundamental for the two Houses to agree on the same legislation before it was passed. The House has legislated upon a part and parcel of this tariff bill by saying that it favored the regulation of the New York Cotton Exchange. The House is on record, through its Journal, through the votes of the Members, as advocating that legislation. The Senate is opposed to that legislation.

Now, I believe that the House is coordinate with the Senate and has every right and power for the purpose of legislation that the Senate has, and that the contention—

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I decline to yield further. I have already yielded to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. CRISP. And if the Senate can withdraw its amendment, then it destroys the power of the House—it having started to legislate upon this proposition—to do so.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this is the greatest bill that has passed Congress in many decades, and I have always believed as a lawyer in pursuing the policy of safety. If it is essential that the House recede from its amendment, the Smith-Lever amendment—and I believe it is, because the Journal shows that is the action of the House; the Journal does not show that the minds of the two Houses have met on every detail—if it is essential to recede, and if you do not recede, the bill is not lawfully passed. If on the other hand the contention of my friends on the other side, for whom I have the profoundest respect, is correct, and it is not essential to recede, then if we did recede it is mere surplusage and hurts nothing, and I believe that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama is in order and proper. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. SHERLEY. With the courtesy of the Chair and the permission of the gentleman from Georgia, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CRISP. I will answer it if I can.

Mr. SHERLEY. If it be proper to recede from the House amendment, would it not be possible also for the House to recede and agree to the Senate amendment which it has amended?

Mr. CRISP. It probably would; but, if so, it would be necessary for the Senate to take further action in receding from their action, in receding from that amendment, because until both Houses unite and agree upon the same legislative proposition contained in the bill the bill is not legally passed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then, if the gentleman will permit, you put yourself in the position of agreeing to an amendment that does not exist. Does the gentleman consider that the Senate action has disposed of the Senate amendment?

Mr. CRISP. I do not concede that the Senate has the right to take away from the House the power to legislate upon this proposition. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, harmless action taken in parliamentary bodies frequently results in disaster in the future; and the result of the entertainment of the motion proposed by the gentleman from Alabama is fraught with great danger to this House in its future practice.

I made a point of order, and no one except the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has addressed himself to that point of order; that there is nothing before this House to which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] can attach his motion. The Senate adopted its amendment No. 600 and the House disagreed to it. It went to conference. A disagreement was reported. The House then receded from its disagreement and amended the Senate amendment, and then adopted the Senate amendment as amended. It went to the Senate, and the Senate receded from its amendment and sent to the House a message stating that it had receded from the Senate amendment. What is the Speaker laying before the House? The papers? What papers? This bill is agreed to as effectively as both Houses can ever agree to it. There is no action that this House can take upon any part of the bill not contained in the so-called Clarke amendment. That amendment no longer exists.

The confusion of gentlemen about this matter is due to the fact that the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the Clarke amendment was in the nature of a substitute. Suppose his amendment, instead of being a substitute, had been a change in the amount of the tax imposed upon transactions in future trading. Suppose instead of 50 cents a bale the gentleman from Alabama had proposed an amendment making it $50 a bale and had agreed to the Clarke amendment with that amendment and then sent it to the Senate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think it concerns anything, but the gentleman is not correctly quoting my amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was assuming a supposititious amendment. The gentleman's amendment was a substitute for the Clarke amendment; but to make this matter clearer, suppose that instead of offering a substitute the amendment had consisted in striking out the tax of 50 cents a bale and making it $50 a bale, and that amendment went to the Senate and the Senate then receded from its amendment and sent a message to the House announcing that fact. What would be before the House? Not the House amendment to the Senate amendment, because there is no Senate amendment. The House amendment does not exist apart from the Senate amendment upon which it had been ingrafted.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy to illustrate this situation so that there will be no misunderstanding. A offers to sell his house to B for $5,000. B says, "I will accept your offer if you will include the barn on the adjoining lot." A says, "I withdraw my offer." In law that is not necessary. The mere suggestion of an independent proposition terminates the offer. B could not afterwards withdraw his conditional acceptance and accept the original offer. The proffer of a new offer is not an acceptance of the original one. It does not constitute an agreement between the parties.

The Speaker, in order to entertain the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, must determine that, although the Senate receded from its amendment, that amendment is still before the House. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has pointed out what may happen if that be done. The House may recede from its amendment to the Senate amendment, as proposed by the gentleman from Alabama.

If it does, that must leave the Senate amendment before us. We have amended the Senate amendment. If we recede from our amendment to it the Senate amendment must then be before the House. Then, suppose the House should concur in the Senate amendment? We would have the House concurring in an amendment from which the Senate has receded. If the House sent such a message to the Senate, what would the Senate do? The House would say, "The House has concurred in your amendment"; the Senate would say, "But we have no amendment. We have receded from our amendment." Where would the tariff bill be then? The Senate had withdrawn its amendment; the House had concurred in it after the Senate had withdrawn it. Who would act next? Would the Senate send back a message? What could its message be? There was no Senate amendment before the House in which to concur. The Senate had withdrawn the suggestion that that amendment be placed in the bill. Mr. Speaker, the philosophy and the logic of our whole parliamentary procedure is inconsistent with the suggestion that any such motion can be entertained. There is nothing before this House now, so far as this tariff bill is concerned; nothing to be done except to await the report of the Committee on Enrolled Bills and to have the Speaker affix his signature to the enrolled bill. The bill is passed as effectively as it may or can be passed.

This motion can not do any harm now, can not affect this bill; but the decision that any motion at all is in order at this time, that any motion can be made, will rise in the future to plague this House and to involve the Congress in interminable difficulty. We should not do things merely because they will do no harm. We should act only because it is necessary and essential to do the things that are necessary to enact legislation.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York this question: Where is the disagreement of the Senate with the amendment proposed by the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no disagreement.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Did not the Senate disagree with the amendment proposed by the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was a motion made in the Senate to disagree to the amendment of the House to the Senate amendment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I just wish to catch the procedure, if I can, and therefore I repeat my question: Did the Senate agree to the amendment adopted by the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They disagreed.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then where is that disagreement now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is not any. It is wiped out because the Senate has withdrawn its amendment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I just wish to get the gentleman's attitude.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. The Senate adopted an entirely unnecessary motion in first disagreeing to the amendment proposed by the House to its amendment, and then receding from its own amendment. The Senate proposed a change in a tariff bill. The House declined to accept that change, but said that it would accept it upon certain conditions. The Senate then said that it would withdraw its proposed change. Then what is left?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. When the bill was returned to the House from the Senate, it contained the Clarke amendment. When the House the other day adopted the Underwood amendment, the bill went back to the Senate with the Underwood amendment to the Clarke amendment contained in it. Does the gentleman contend that the Senate, by receding from a thing which the House had already concurred in, and added to, namely, the Underwood amendment, can now, without consent of the House, undo what the House did, and take out of issue the action of the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman, if he will pardon me for saying so, does not understand the philosophy of the action of bringing the two Houses together.

Mr. ADAMSON. I may not know much about parliamentary law, for I have always had something more important to do, but I know the common sense of it. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I have heard other gentlemen applaud equally inapt statements regarding parliamentary procedure.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; the gentleman has had that sort of applause himself many times. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; Mr. Speaker, I have had that kind of applause, but there was some assumption for the belief that I knew what I was speaking about when I was discussing parliamentary procedure.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. I interrupt in this manner because it seems to me reasonable. I may not know much about parliamentary law, but the question I desire to ask is this: Have the two Houses ever yet so far passed the same bill? We sent a bill over there with certain amendments. They sent it back without the amendments, we having sent the bill over there as we passed it. The Senate did not agree to it up to this time. The Senate has never up to this time passed the same bill that the House passed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think they have now, and I think I can illustrate it. Let us assume that the House passed a tariff bill and that the only amendment made by the Senate is the so-called Clarke amendment.

Mr. HARDY. Let me supplement that question. Have we ever passed a bill up to this time just as it comes to us from the Senate now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Both Houses have passed the bill.

Mr. HARDY. As it comes from the Senate now?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; as it now comes from the Senate. Let me assume this case, to eliminate what might be confusing: Assume that the House passed a tariff bill and the Senate made but one amendment to it, and suppose that to be the so-called Clarke amendment. The Senate returns the bill, and after going into conference there is a disagreement reported. Then let us suppose that the House recedes from its disagreement to the Clarke amendment with an amendment and that is sent to the Senate, and that the Senate then recedes from its amendment. I contend that passes the bill.

The Senate proposes this change. What does the action of the House mean? It says that it will not accept this change, but that it will accept it upon condition that the Senate agree to certain modifications, and then the Senate says that it withdraws the suggestion it made. The counter proposition falls with such a withdrawal. That leaves the House in a position where it can not make any change in its bill. There is nothing upon which it can act.

Mr. HARDY. We passed the bill the last time with the Underwood amendment on it, did we not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is an amendment to the Senate amendment.

Mr. HARDY. But we passed it that way. We have never passed it just as it comes back to us from the Senate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We did not pass it that way at all. We had not passed it then.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Is not the situation this: The House concurred in the Clarke amendment with the Underwood amendment to it; then it went back to the Senate, the Senate receded from the Clarke amendment, and then they disagreed to the Underwood amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They did that first.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. And they sent it back to us with the notification that they disagreed to that, and that is the question before the House now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. The RECORD shows the motion was made to disagree to the amendment of the House to the Senate amendment known as the Clarke amendment—

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. But did not the report from the Senate, made by the Secretary, state that they receded from the Clarke amendment and disagreed to the Underwood amendment, which leaves that still in disagreement?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not read the message, but I know what happened, because it could not have been any other way. If it receded from its amendment, there was no amendment to the amendment to which they could disagree, because it fell to the ground. Mr. Speaker, if there were any doubt in my mind as to the necessity of any motion made at this time I should not—

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Can the Senate recede from an amendment it had first adopted until the House has disagreed to that amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course it can.

Mr. BARKLEY. How?

Mr. FITZGERALD. By a vote. That is a simple parliamentary proposition that the Senate can recede from its amendment, take advantage of the House, and prevent it from agreeing to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. It might do so, could it not, before the House acted upon that specific amendment? But after the House has agreed to that amendment, although in an amended form, can the Senate recede from it without a specific disagreement on the part of the House?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It can, because the House—

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. POWERS. I desire to know if the Chair does not think that it would be a splendid idea to dispatch the Sergeant at Arms for JIM MANN?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think we have any necessity for him here.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York permit an inquiry?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. If this House amendment is before the House now for some substantial action, why can not we move to change the terms of it and then adhere?

Mr. FITZGERALD. We can do so if that contention be correct.

Mr. SIMS. I would like very much to make a motion that where it says 50 cents a bale to make it $10, and accept it and send it back to the Senate, because I believe that will be good legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the Speaker must find before he can entertain this motion that the Senate amendment is before the House, for the so-called House amendment does not exist apart from the Senate amendment. It is an amendment to the Senate amendment, and before the House can take any action upon it he must decide that it is laid before the House and that the House has some right to take action, and if it has the right to take action it has the right to agree to the amendment that the Senate has already receded from.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will yield.

Mr. ALEXANDER. This is a proposition that comes from the Senate to which the House agrees with an amendment. Now, is it not within the power of the House to prevent the Senate from withdrawing the original proposition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Only by agreeing to it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is it in the power of the House to prevent the Senate from withdrawing the original resolution?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It could have done so if it agreed to it.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It did not agree to it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It did not agree to it. There never has been an agreement. The action of the House in concurring with the amendment is not an agreement between the Houses. It is a counter proposition which it offers to the Senate as a basis for agreement. The Senate then withdraws its original proposition and there is no counter proposition then existing.

Mr. Speaker, if there were any doubt about it I would not discuss it, but this House should never take any action merely on the theory that it is harmless and will have no effect or that it will not in any way jeopardize things. Our procedure should be so fixed, so definite, and so positive, and it is so fixed and definite and positive, that unnecessary, harmless action is not only unnecessary but would be very dangerous if it be indulged in. I hope the Chair will not entertain the motion.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. The gentleman from New York states that the Senate has power to withdraw this amendment because the House never agreed to it. I suggest to the gentleman from New York that the House never disagreed to it. The House did agree to it with an amendment. That is the status. There were portions of the Clarke amendment embodied in the substitute amendment adopted by the House, and if we take no further action in the premises the records of this House will not show where we ever disagreed to the Clarke amendment or receded from the substitute adopted by the House in lieu of the Clarke amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is withdrawn. We do not have either to agree or disagree. It is withdrawn. It is taken from us.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. The record submitted here this morning of the action of the Senate shows that the Senate withdrew the Clarke amendment and disagreed to the House amendment, and that disagreement is shown by the report now before this House. Now, what harm could come from the adoption of the motion made by Mr. UNDERWOOD if no further attempt is made to modify it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the danger of the gentleman's argument.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. You say the danger is in establishing a precedent?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes, sir.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. If your position is correct, then you establish what I would consider a more dangerous precedent, and that is this, that whenever the Senate offers amendments to House bills, and they offer sometimes hundreds of them, and did in this case, then it is within the power of the Senate, if your contention is correct, to defeat the will of the House as to every Senate amendment, which the House has seen fit to amend by merely withdrawing it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The assumption is, of course—I do not know what the gentleman's theory is—that changes made by the other body are not what the House wishes, because it has passed the bill as it desires it. I can not understand the theory upon which the gentleman argues; that when the Senate is willing to withdraw their amendments they are defeating the will of the House by not permitting the House to agree to something which the House did not propose.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. My proposition is this: In case the Senate has offered an amendment to a House bill, to which the House is unwilling to agree in the form in which it was offered, but if the House desires to attach additional provisions to that and agrees to it in an amended form, which becomes the action of the House, you should not permit the Senate, then, by withdrawing its own amendment to defeat affirmative legislation attempted in the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not, Mr. Speaker, because the consent of the Senate would be required to that modification. If the gentleman's theory were correct, that the mere adoption by the House of an amendment would make it a part of the bill, regardless of what action the Senate would take, his contention would be correct; but it would require the assent of the Senate to this proposed modification, and the House could not compel that assent unless the Senate did it.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice by the RECORD that in the Senate proceedings there were two motions—one, first, to disagree to the House amendment. Now, the Journal of the Senate will show those two motions, namely, that the Senate had disagreed to the House amendment and then receded from its own amendment—a separate action upon the two propositions. Now, then, the House Journal will not show any action by the House upon the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, a study of any standard work on parliamentary law and of the procedure and practice of either body will not justify the action of the Senate in disagreeing to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate. The motion that was proper in the Senate was that the Senate either insist upon its own amendment or recede from its amendment or agree to the amendment of the House to its amendment, and no other motion can properly, within parliamentary precedents, be made.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the Record show that the House still had an interest in that amendment that it sent to the Senate?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. What assurance has the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] or anybody else that the House will agree to his motion? And if the House did not agree to his motion, but receded from its own amendment and agreed to the Senate amendment, which no longer exists, what position would we be in then? [Applause and cries of "Rule!" "Rule!"]

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is one other point, Mr. Speaker, to which I wish to call attention. If I understood the gentleman from Alabama correctly, he moved that the House recede from the amendment of the House to the Senate amendment, the so-called Clarke amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the amendment as sent up. I read:

I move to concur in the action of the Senate relating to Senate amendment No. 609.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the latter part of it.

The SPEAKER. That is the whole of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The point to which I call attention is that the House is asked to concur in the Senate's action on its own amendment. If such action as that is necessary to be entertained, there would never be an end to the proceedings of the two Houses. I submit that the motion proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is not in order.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Chair promised to recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma and will now do it. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this question is a question of whether the bill is constitutionally passed rather than a question of whether it is parliamentarily passed.

Now, replying to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], I wish to call attention to the fact that there is a distinction, both in essence and parliamentarily, between a substitute and a mere amendment. If this had been a mere amendment to the Senate provision, then the amendment would have failed with the failure of the provision. But the essence of legislation, to illustrate by a figure of the law of contract, is to bring the mind of this House together with the mind of the Senate upon a given question, and the question arises whether their minds have met upon the bill itself.

Now, we know that when they submitted amendments and we submitted other amendments, some of those amendments may have been predicated upon other amendments; and I concede that if the Senate had only offered the Clarke amendment and none other and then we had offered a substitute to the Clarke amendment and the Senate had receded, then the bill would have been disposed of, because our minds would have met upon the remaining portion of the bill. But we know there are other amendments and modifications; and since that is so, the question arises whether our minds have met.

That brings us to this question: Had this House, to begin with, the right to offer a substitute to the Clarke amendment? It certainly did. Then if this House had the right to do it, has the Senate the right to repeal it without our consent? That is the issue. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. No. Wait until I get through. Then I will answer. We have the right to offer an amendment. They have sought to change their position. But they have no right to assume that because we change their amendment we did not adopt the individual amendment predicated upon other amendments in this bill. I see no way by which this question can be brought before the House except as by the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

It will require either the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] or a ruling by the Chair, which is tantamount to its adoption if such ruling is not appealed from, because, under the powers of the three coordinate branches of our Government, the courts will have to hold that on a parliamentary question the Congress has the right to construe for itself the terms of the Constitution. I might recite in that connection an Arkansas case, where for 10 years they had fought over a capitol bill. The constitution of Arkansas provided that no appropriation could be passed, except a general appropriation, without a two-thirds vote. Under that provision of the constitution Speaker Vandeventer ruled that a capitol appropriation put into the general appropriation bill was an appropriation under "general provisions," and the court upheld the appropriation under that authority. So I say if the Chair will rule that it is passed, and that ruling is not appealed from, that is tantamount to the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], but one or the other must be done. It is, however, decidedly better to vote upon the question, that no doubt may exist.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has doubtless observed that the Senate, contrary to the view advocated by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], did not content itself with receding from its original amendment, but deemed it necessary to go further and disagree with the Underwood amendment, thereby leaving the matter in issue. Now, if this House had a right to put the Underwood amendment into that bill and the Senate has disagreed to it, is it not yet in issue in the bill, and has not this House the right to insist upon it if it wants to or recede if it wants to?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is exactly true.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. If this House had the right to put it there, the fact that the Senate disagreed is an acknowledgment on the part of the Senate that the House had a right to put it there to begin with, and this House, therefore, must take it away.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Suppose, instead of being an amendment, the Senate had passed as an original bill the terms of the Clarke amendment, that it had come back to the House and we had agreed to it with an amendment striking out all of that bill after the enacting clause and substituting the Underwood amendment. Then it goes back to the Senate and the Senate disagrees to the action of the House, and then lays its own bill on the table. Would you not have just as much reason to argue, as you have been arguing here to-day, that the Senate has no right to prevent the House from proceeding with a matter that it has once started to proceed with? It takes two bodies to legislate.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That case is not parallel with the one before the House. The only question is whether the minds of the two Houses have met. They have not met upon all of these amendments.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Rule! Rule!

The SPEAKER. The Chair promised to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] for three minutes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I want just a word; first, to call attention to the fact that the course of action of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has been eminently fair and just in this matter, as it has been in connection with the progress of this tariff bill which bears his name through this House. If he had not made the motion, I feel sure the point of order would have been raised against the enrollment and signing of the bill, so that a ruling would have been had at this time. But it seems to me this question has already been decided in section 44 of Jefferson's Manual, which is regarded as an authority here and is a part of the rules, under Rule XLIII. It states that—

Either House may recede from its amendment and agree to the bill; * * * but the House can not recede from or insist on its own amendment with an amendment, for the same reason that it can not send to the other House an amendment to its own act after it has passed the act.

[Applause.]

That is a clear and plain explanation of the proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I can not yield in three minutes. The proposition is clear and plain, and no precedent can show a ruling which would hold this motion out of order. In 1868 Senator Sherman—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I can not yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Simply to call the attention of the gentleman to something he has overlooked.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I have not overlooked the facts. In 1868 Senator Sherman had this same proposition under consideration, and the case is cited in section 6217 of Hinds' Precedents. After a careful study he declared that such action as is contemplated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and others is improper and contrary to parliamentary law, and it was necessary in that case to ask for a conference in order to settle the disagreement. The only other precedent is cited in section 6227, on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and no action was ever taken by the House.

The matter was brought in and amendments 143 to 169 were agreed to, and amendment 74, the amendment in point, was never considered. The history of House procedure shows not a single additional precedent that has any bearing on this question and that a ruling has never been made.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman consider the Senate's action in disagreeing to this amendment valid or void?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The Senate had a right to disagree to the House amendment, but the House still is interested in the matter until it recedes from its amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Suppose we recede from our amendment and concur in the Senate amendment, what then?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. We have a right to do that.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the Senate says there is no such amendment.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Then the matter is in issue between the Houses yet, for no disposition has been made of our amendment to the Senate amendment. The point of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in making the illustration of the price of $5,000 for a house and an offer which it was not necessary to refuse is not apropos, for the reason that the offer has been made here by the Senate to the House and has been accepted by the House, with, however, a preference, just as though the purchaser should say, "I will accept your price of $5,000 for the house, but I would prefer to have you give me time on $500." It is simply a preference and the offer is accepted, and the contract holds until both parties finally disagree. The Senate action in receding must be approved by the House before it is conclusive and binding. Both justice and parliamentary law declare that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama is in order and is the only proper method of procedure in this instance.

The SPEAKER. In order to get this record straight the Chair lays before the House the bill H. R. 3321, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 3321. An act to revise tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to concur in the action of the Senate relating to Senate amendment No. 609 to House bill 3321. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS] makes the point of order against the motion. The history of the transaction stated in brief is that the conferees agreed to this entire bill except the so-called Clarke cotton-futures amendment. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute to the Clarke amendment, which passed the House, and the Underwood amendment went to the Senate. The Senate disagreed to the Underwood amendment, and also receded from the Clarke amendment. The only question in issue is whether the two Houses have ever come to an agreement—to the same state of mind.

It is suggested that the Supreme Court has decided, in Field v. Clark (143 U. S.), as follows, reading from the syllabus:

The signing by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and by the President of the Senate in open session of an enrolled bill is an official attestation by the two Houses of such bill as one that has passed Congress, and when the bill thus attested receives the approval of the President and is deposited in the Department of State according to law its authentication as a bill that has passed Congress is complete and unimpeachable.

That opinion was rendered by Mr. Justice Harlan. Mr. Justice Lamar dissented.

Mr. BARTLETT. But not upon that point, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Not upon that point. The Chair reads now from the case of United States v. Ballin (144 U. S., p. 9). The Supreme Court in that case, on the question of counting a quorum, said:

Summing up this matter, this law is found in the Secretary of State's office properly authenticated. If we appeal to the Journal of the House, we find that a majority of its Members were present when the bill passed, a majority creating by the Constitution a quorum, with authority to act upon any measure; that the presence of that quorum was determined in accordance with a valid rule theretofore adopted by the House; and that of that quorum a majority voted in favor of the bill. It therefore legally passed the House, and the law as found in the office of the Secretary of State is beyond challenge.

Of course, the Speaker, as well as everyone else, has great respect for a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, but a man does not have to forget everything he knows in order to pass on a parliamentary point, and the Chair knows and a great many others know that the Supreme Court has changed its opinion in days gone by and may do so in days to come. That was notably the case in the Legal Tender cases. Since the rendition of the cases cited the personnel of the Supreme Court has been changed almost completely.

What is the situation? Did the Senate by disagreeing to the Underwood amendment and receding from its own amendment clear up the whole matter? If so, where is the Underwood amendment. What is its status? The House passed it. The House has never receded from it, the two Houses have never come to an agreement on this proposition, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HINDS]. The question is on concurring in the action of the Senate relating to Senate amendment 609.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMS. If I caught the gentleman's motion, was it not to recede and concur in the action of the Senate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; my motion was that the House concur in the action of the Senate.

Mr. SIMS. Without receding from its own action?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senate disagreed to our amendment and receded from their own. My motion is that the House concur in the action of the Senate.

Mr. SIMS. I do not think the gentleman ought to put it in that shape, to concur in the action of the Senate. Those of us who are in favor of the Clarke amendment do not wish to concur in the Senate receding. I am perfectly willing to vote to recede and concur in the action of the Senate on the House substitute.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand; but the gentleman from Tennessee at present is not making this motion.

Mr. SIMS. But I want to make such a motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it is a very important matter, and it is for the gentleman from Alabama, if it is in order, to submit a motion that is in order upon which the House is to act and not on some action of the Senate. His motion must be something that applies to the so-called Underwood substitute to the Clarke amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that we must recede from our own action before we can concur in the Senate's action on our substitute.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the motion of the gentleman from Alabama prevails, what becomes of the House amendment to the Senate amendment, it not having been acted upon by the House since the Senate's action?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this motion of the gentleman from Alabama is equivalent to receding and concurring.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the other day the point was made that a motion to recede and concur was divisible, and we must first recede before we can concur by way of amendment or do anything else.

The SPEAKER. That would be true if a motion was made in that form.

Mr. SIMS. Then I want to make the point of order it must be made in that form to be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. [Applause.]

If the House will pardon the Chair for just one moment. There is no question whatever in the mind of the Chair that the last motion of the gentleman from Alabama removes even a shadow of doubt from the integrity of the passage of this bill. It is a bill of too vast importance to leave even the shadow of doubt upon it, and it should be so cautiously passed as to prevent skilled lawyers from picking flaws in this bill after it is passed. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the Chair stated the motion, I believe, that is pending?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] whether he desires any time on the pending motion, because I do not desire to discuss the pending motion, and unless the gentleman from New York desires time I shall therefore move the previous question.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think anyone here cares to discuss it, and I desire to say only one word myself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Speaker in what he has said, that it would be a calamity to have any litigation over the integrity of this bill. Whatever view I may take of it, I think the conditions will be a great deal worse if there are differences in the immediate future as to whether this bill was the law or whether the present law was the law in regard to the collection of import duties. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would like to yield 10 minutes—

[Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman wants two minutes I will yield that to him.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I have a request for 10 minutes from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MacDONALD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves the previous question on his motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The motion was agreed to.

[Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

On motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. THOMAS, by unanimous consent, was granted an indefinite leave of absence.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Hannah M. Brodock (H. R. 24847, 62d Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

PRINT OF TARIFF BILL.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the Speaker has just signed the tariff bill, and it will go to the President before night. I know that there will be a demand on every Member of the House for copies of this bill. I therefore ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, providing for the printing of copies of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 10.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That there be printed for the use of Congress 80,000 copies of the tariff law of 1913 in pamphlet form, indexed, with covers, to be apportioned as follows:

Thirty-five thousand copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Twenty thousand copies for the use of the Senate.

Five thousand copies for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives.

Five thousand copies for the use of the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

Ten thousand copies for the use of the House document room.

Five thousand copies for the use of the Senate document room, and that the Public Printer be authorized to print for sale such copies of said law as in his discretion may be necessary.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question as to how these are going to be distributed?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It provides that most of them shall go into the folding room, a few of them into the document room, and some of them to the committees.

Mr. EDWARDS. I did not catch the reading of the resolution that stated they would be distributed through the folding room.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The Clerk will read the resolution again.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that when a resolution does not specifically say where the copies shall go, they go to the folding room.

Mr. EDWARDS. And in that way they are prorated among the Members of the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. That is all right.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There are a certain number of these that will go to the document room, but a greater part will go to the folding room, where each Member will have a share.

Mr. PALMER. It has been suggested to me that there will be a large demand for copies of the income-tax law from persons who have no interest in the tariff features of this bill. Would it not be possible and advisable to have a number of copies of the income-tax provision printed separately?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understood that under this resolution they could be printed separately from the general bill.

Mr. PALMER. How many of them could be printed separately?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That would be discretionary with the printer.

Mr. PALMER. It could be done that way?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They so informed me when I drew the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL TUESDAY NEXT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman from Alabama indicate whether any important business is expected to be transacted on that day?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that it is probable that the urgent deficiency bill will be back here by Tuesday.

Mr. MOORE. Is it contemplated that we shall run along on the three days' program, as usual?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I had intended, when this proposition was agreed to, to propose a pact to the leadership on the other side of the House.

CONSERVATION EXPOSITION AT KNOXVILLE, TENN.

The SPEAKER. Some time ago the House authorized the Chair to appoint a committee to attend the Knoxville Conservation Exposition, which he did. The Chair desires to make the following announcement with reference to the members of that committee: He appoints Mr. STRINGER, of Illinois, in lieu of Mr. UNDERHILL, of New York; Mr. WHALEY, of South Carolina, in lieu of Mr. PEPPER, of Iowa; Mr. ADAMSON, of Georgia, in lieu of Mr. JONES, of Virginia; Mr. McKELLAR, of Tennessee, in lieu of Mr. KONOP, of Wisconsin; Mr. JOHNSON, of Washington, in lieu of Mr. WOODS, of Iowa; and Mr. RAKER, of California, in lieu of Mr. HAMLIN, of Missouri. Those names will be inserted in the RECORD.

ENGINEERS' REPORT UPON FLOODS IN THE OHIO RIVER (H. DOC. NO. 246.)

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that there be printed as many copies of the report of the United States engineers upon the Ohio flood situation as can be printed under the $500 limit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK] asks unanimous consent to print as many copies of the report of the engineers on the Ohio flood situation as can be printed under the $500 limit. Is there objection?

Mr. ELDER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the reason why I objected yesterday to this same request was that all the copies were to go to the document room and none to the folding room. On account of the present situation, where the Members are arranging to leave, most of them intending to go to the West Virginia district, I wish to say that I shall not insist upon my objection to-day; but I will say now that hereafter at any time I am on the floor, unless a reasonable proportion of these documents goes to the folding room, where all the Members can get some of them, I shall object. The reason for it is this: Since I have been here, at least, a few Members, when they go to the document room, go there and gobble up the entire edition, and others when they desire to procure copies can not get any of them. I think it is an unfair way to distribute such documents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MIGRATORY BIRDS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a House document as many copies of the Government rules regarding the right to kill migratory birds as can be printed under the usual limit. Many requests are coming from California and elsewhere for that document. Inasmuch as the law affects the game law of the State, and the national law is supreme, people want to know what they have to do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to have printed as many copies as can be printed under the $500 limit of the law relating to migratory birds.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that unless an order be adopted, a mere request for unanimous consent will not print anything. The gentleman must have an order of the House. A request for unanimous consent is not effective.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York object? Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not object. I was just stating the fact.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to make an inquiry of the gentleman from California whether he has gone to the Agricultural Department to get copies of this law that he speaks of?

Mr. RAKER. In answer to the gentleman from Texas, I may say that one can get some few copies there; but there are numerous requests coming in from people who want to go to California to hunt, and we want to be able to inform them about the law in regard to it.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] objects.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the Members of the House on both sides have been working here all summer doing their duty. I believe they are tired. I think it will be some time before the currency bill will come back from the Senate. I would like to see if we can enter into a pact with the gentlemen on the other side of the House for an agreement to do no business except pass the urgent deficiency bill for a certain length of time, three or four weeks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the gentleman from Alabama and the Members on this side of the House that a quorum will probably be required to pass the urgent deficiency bill. There are certain matters in it, inserted by the Senate, in which Members on this side are vitally interested, and I believe the presence of a quorum will be required.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from New York suggests that there will have to be a quorum here to pass the urgent deficiency bill. I suspect that if the gentleman gets that quorum he will have to call Members back here. It has been quite difficult to keep a quorum here to pass the tariff bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Other Members are interested more than I am in what is in the bill. The Senate committee has recommended one amendment which takes from the classified service deputy marshals and deputy collectors required by law or regulation to give bond. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am inclined to believe that Members will be required to vote upon that proposition, and unless there is a quorum here the bill will not pass.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to supplement what the gentleman says. If that amendment is in the bill when it comes here, it will not be passed without a record vote, if I can get a record vote on it.

Mr. BARTLETT. The amendment will be in the bill when it comes here, in all probability.

Mr. GARNER. The result will be that when the bill comes back into the House there will not be a quorum here. There are enough gentlemen in this Hall now who have made arrangements to go home and who, in my judgment, are entitled to go home. There will not be a quorum here next Tuesday. Now, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that if there is a quorum here next Tuesday, with the knowledge that after that there will be no necessity for the House to meet for 30 days, why can not this House take a recess for 30 days and give the membership an opportunity to go home?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The reason we can not is that the Senate will not pass such a resolution.

Mr. GARNER. Has the gentleman submitted that matter to the Senate for the purpose of ascertaining that fact?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am satisfied, from information I get—

Mr. GARNER. I would like to put that up to the Senate and let them say whether they want to keep us here while they are doing the work it is necessary for them to do.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will communicate with the Senate and can bring to me assurances that they will agree to it, I am sure I shall be in accord with it.

Mr. GARNER. It would not humiliate the House very much to pass a resolution and send it over to them officially and give them an opportunity to pass on it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it can be ascertained without that difficulty.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. PAYNE. I want to suggest to the gentleman that he defer this matter until next Tuesday. In the meantime, I would like to have some conversation with him on the subject. There are some reasons why I can not consent to it this morning.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman states that he can not consent to the arrangement to-day and asks that it be deferred until Tuesday or later. I therefore withdraw the request.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the currency question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the currency question. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RHETTA WILLIAMS.

Mr. BELL of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 274.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Miss Rhetta Williams the sum of $125 for services rendered during the month of September, 1913, as clerk of Hon. S. A. Roddenberry, late a Member of the House from the second congressional district of the State of Georgia.

With the following amendment:

Line 6, after the word "Georgia," insert the following: "The same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House; and House resolution No. 264 adopted September 27, 1913, is hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER. Is that a committee amendment?

Mr. BELL of Georgia. No.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House that this resolution as first read was passed by the House some time ago and that the officer refuses to pay the money on it because it did not appropriate it out of the contingent fund. The proposed amendment is to make it payable out of the contingent fund, and also to repeal the other resolution. The Chair had that repealing clause added so as to remove any doubt about there being two resolutions adopted for the payment of the same sum of money to the same person. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

INCOME TAX.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Speaker, I am clear that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] providing for copies of the tariff law permits no discretion on the part of the Public Printer. He will be required to print the entire bill, and House officials who have had experience in the matter confirm that. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 20.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of Congress 30,000 copies of the income-tax section of the tariff law of 1913, in pamphlet form—20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 10,000 copies for the use of the Senate; and that the Public Printer be authorized to print for sale such copies of said income-tax section of such law as in his discretion may be necessary.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would suggest to the gentleman that I have understood from the public prints that the Secretary of the Treasury or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or both, were about to print copies of the income-tax section of the law, with directions to individuals, interpreting the law and presenting, probably, forms for their application. It seems to me that if that is correct, it would be better in this connection to print the whole thing than to print simply the income-tax sections, because the gentleman will probably agree that it requires a legal mind to interpret exactly what the income-tax provisions are.

Mr. PALMER. Undoubtedly the Treasury Department will prepare and print regulations governing the collection of the tax, but my thought is that the demand upon Members will be supplied by having the income-tax section printed by itself.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection to that, but I think it will be better to have the two things coupled.

Mr. PALMER. I think it might be desirable, but I do not know what that is or how large it is or of what it consists. I would not like to put it into this resolution without knowing.

Mr. PAYNE. Would not the gentleman consider a proposition to let it go over until next Tuesday, in which time he might consult the Treasury Department?

Mr. PALMER. I should not personally have any objection, but we may not have a quorum here at that time, and we may not be able to do anything. That could be done by another resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. It would have to be done by unanimous consent then, as now, of course.

Mr. PALMER. I think this ought to go through now.

Mr. PAYNE. I am not going to make any cautious objection.

Mr. PALMER. If the Treasury Department prints such a thing, it can easily be published as a public document for distribution.

Mr. PAYNE. I shall make no objection.

Mr. ELDER. I would like to ask the gentleman where these copies go?

Mr. PALMER. I understand under the statute they go to the folding room.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PALMER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE TUESDAY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair designates Mr. SHERLEY, of Kentucky, to preside on next Tuesday.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 255.

Resolved, That the Committee on Enrolled Bills be allowed a clerk at the rate of $6 per day for such time as is needed during the remainder of the first session of the Sixty-third Congress, said clerk to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on certification of the chairman of said committee that service has actually been rendered and the number of days of said service.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 2, strike out the words "allowed a" and insert in lieu thereof the words "authorized to appoint an additional," so that it will read, "That the Committee on Enrolled Bills be authorized to appoint an additional clerk at the rate of $6 per day," etc. Line 6, after the word "that," insert the word "such," and after the word "service," insert the words "was necessary and," so that it will read, "to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on certification by the chairman of said committee that such service was necessary and has actually been rendered and the number of days of said service."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the gentleman for what purpose the Committee on Enrolled Bills needs an additional clerk for the balance of this session when practically all the bills that will be passed have been passed up to this time, and it is generally understood among the Members of the House now that for the balance of this session up to the 1st of December there will be very few bills that will become law necessary to be enrolled, and I do not believe—

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that is true; but this tariff bill that is now to be enrolled—

Mr. FOSTER. It has already been enrolled, I will say to the gentleman, and it has been signed by the Speaker and will go to the President in a very few hours.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. I did not know that, and if that is true—

Mr. GARNER. It has been signed and—

Mr. FOSTER. It may have been necessary before, but I do not believe it is now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to make this statement and have the resolution changed so as to fit, even though it is rather unusual procedure for the Chair to take. The chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills came to the Chair three or four days ago or four or five days ago and said it was absolutely necessary to have an additional man to enroll this tariff bill in any reasonable time, and the chairman of the Committee on Accounts had gone and it seemed impossible to get a meeting of the committee, and the Chair told him to go on and employ the man for the number of days necessary and that the House would take care of him; and if it does not, the Chair will take care of the matter himself.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I think the Speaker did exactly right in the case, and I believe the House will be perfectly willing to pay whatever has been necessary to have this bill enrolled; but as I understood the resolution, it gave the right to employ him in the future.

The SPEAKER. That is true in reference to this resolution.

Mr. GARNER. Why not amend the resolution, Mr. Speaker, so as to cover the identical services rendered which have been authorized by the Speaker—reimburse him for whatever has been paid out extra on account of the enrollment of the tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest, if the gentleman will permit, to let the entire matter go over until Tuesday.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Illinois about the enrollment of the tariff bill I will ask for the present to withdraw this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas withdraws the resolution. The Chair has been requested to state from the chair that it is very desirable and even necessary to have a quorum here next Tuesday for the transaction of public business. [Applause.]

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS RULES.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of history—and we have made history to-day in the passage of what is probably the lowest tariff bill ever passed—I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the Democratic caucus rules under which this work was so successfully done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to publish in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the caucus rules of the Democratic Party in the House of Representatives. Is there objection?

Mr. ELDER. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 132. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make an exhibit at the Sixth National Corn Exposition to be held at Dallas, Tex., during the month of February, 1914.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business has not been transacted.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the morning business will not be called at this time. The Chair hears no objection.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had, on October 3, 1913, approved and signed the following acts:

S. 99. An act to fix the times and places of holding district court for the district of Arizona;

S. 2254. An act to amend chapter 1, section 18, of the Judicial Code; and

S. 2727. An act to create an additional land district in the State of Nevada.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senate to resume the consideration of House bill 7898, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7898. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7898) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies for the fiscal year 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the clerks may be authorized to correct the totals after the passage of the bill. Certain amendments have been made to the bill which changed the totals as the bill came from the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has heard the request of the Senator from North Carolina. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will state the pending question.

The SECRETARY. The pending question is upon concurring in the Senate in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], as modified by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to vacate the order for the yeas and nays granted last night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the order directing that the yeas and nays be called on the adoption of this amendment be vacated. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate and still open to amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a short amendment from the committee to offer which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] and adopted it is proposed to insert, before the word "borne," the words "and the employees on the maintenance roll of the Senate Office Building."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will necessitate a reconsideration of the amendment heretofore adopted. Unless there is objection such will be the order. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. Before the word "borne" insert "and the employees on the maintenance roll of the Senate Office Building" and a comma.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection the amendment will be agreed to. The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to. The amendment as amended will now be agreed to, unless there is objection. The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that finishes the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there be further amendments the amendments will be ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I have listened with much interest to the arguments which have been presented here upon the question whether Congress has or has not the constitutional right to abolish the Commerce Court. Also to the contention that, once having authorized the appointment of the judges of said court, it is the duty of Congress to refrain from any action which would deprive them of their positions of trust as the representatives of this Government, it being urged that to do so would be unfair treatment meted out to men who had been led to believe that their tenure of office was to continue during the period of their natural lives, and I do not wish to vote upon this question without first having given my reasons for voting to abolish the Court of Commerce.

It is urged as one argument in favor of retaining the court that but once in the history of this Government has action of a like character been taken by Congress, and ever since that time the lawyers of this country have only dared to refer to it on rare occasions and then only with averted heads and bated breath.

Not being a member of that learned profession, I find myself not only unable to properly appreciate the full enormity of that act but impiously filled with a sense of satisfaction in learning that some one did actually do something which caused a blush to mantle their cheeks.

Laying aside any expression of personal feeling in the matter, however, it seems to me that the question is a simple one and easy of solution. We as members of this body are merely the agents of the people of this country. Acting as their agents, we have the constitutional right, and it is our duty as well, to create as many courts of this kind as are required to meet the needs of the people. By the same token we have not only the same constitutional right, but also it is our duty to abolish any and all of such courts whenever it is for the best interests of the people of this country for us to do so.

It is a question of whether or not it is best for us to do so. No personal motives or question of personal emotions of benevolence or prejudice either for or against the court or the judges should be allowed to weigh with us in deciding the question.

If the members of the court, by the acts of the Congress, have been placed in a position whereby they will suffer personal loss if the court is abolished, it is unfortunate, and it may be that they should be retired on pension. In the last analysis, however, the interests of the people of this country are the only ones which are or can be legitimately concerned, and I deprecate the idea that any personal feeling of benevolence should cause us to continue any man or set of men in office at the expense of the people of this country after those people have expressed their wish to be rid of their services.

The suggestion that impeachment provides a proper remedy for the situation does not appeal to me, for the reason that it is a remedy which it is almost impossible to apply. As agents of the people it is our imperative duty to exercise our full authority to speedily create courts when needed and to as speedily abolish them when they become either unnecessary or inimical to the welfare of the country.

At this time in the history of the country, when the courts are coming to be viewed by many honest people with questioning glances, to say the least, it is our duty to all honorable courts, in order that they may retain the high estate of respect and honor which is due them, and the retention of which means so much to the liberties of the people, that we free them from the odium and the burden which unnecessary, arbitrary, and unjust courts place upon them.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. VARDAMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator from Mississippi kindly yield to me?

Mr. VARDAMAN. With a great deal of pleasure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would like to have the attention for a minute of the Senator from North Carolina in charge of the bill, in relation to the order that was passed by the Senate last night that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to procure the attendance of Senators who are out of town. Telegrams are being received constantly by the secretaries of absent Senators asking them if it is absolutely necessary for them to come here. I am informed that there is some prospect that the bill can be passed without the question of a quorum being raised, and the order should be vacated if it is no longer necessary.

Mr. OVERMAN. In a few minutes the Senator will have the information he wants.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It will be a great convenience to absent Senators.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will wait a few minutes, he will have that information.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I was absent from the Chamber and I rise for the purpose of asking what disposition was made of the amendment moved by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] as modified by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has been adopted and is now a part of the bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the attitude of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the final passage of the bill. It has been read the third time, and the question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am not going to consume much of the time of the Senate this morning in the discussion of this measure, but I can not support this bill with the amendment which perpetuates the tenure of the judges of the Commerce Court. The court, I understand, has been abolished, but the judges who formed the court and who were the offensive feature of that much discredited tribunal are to be retained and kept upon the pay roll of the Government. Now, we may dispute as to the right of the Congress to legislate a judge out of office save by impeachment proceedings, but there is no ground for dispute on the question as to the duty of the Congress, if Congress has the power to do so, in removing the officer after the function which he was appointed to perform has been abolished.

It was stated by the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] yesterday that these men ought to be retained in the service of the Government because some of them made sacrifices in accepting the places, and now to be parted from the pay roll would be an act of injustice. I would not be unjust to anyone, but the injustice was done when this court failed of the purpose of its creation. It is a self-imposed penalty, for which this Senate is in no way responsible.

I was very much amused when the distinguished Senator, in commending the personnel of the Commerce Court, stated that it was inconceivable that the President of the United States would name a man for this place who would misuse its functions in any way, when, as a matter of fact, the echoes from the impeachment trial of one of the members of that court had not died out in this Hall, wherein that distinguished gentleman referred to by the Senator from New York had been convicted and put out of office.

My friend the learned Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] was not in favor of retaining in the service the members of the Commerce Court if the court had not been abolished, but since their power for harm has been minimized by the abolition of the court and these men consigned to the limbo of "innocuous desuetude" he is in favor of retaining them.

Mr. President, a public office is a public trust and not a private perquisite. When the functions of the office to which these men were appointed have been destroyed their use to the Government no longer exists, and no Senator can justify his vote in retaining them on the pay roll after the office has been abolished. I am going to vote against this bill for another reason, namely, the appropriation of $25,000 to make preliminary plans for a memorial bridge across the Potomac River. There is no necessity for this bridge, and I deem it an unwarranted prodigality of the public funds.

I am going to vote against the bill because of an appropriation it contains of $7,000 to buy an automobile for the Vice President. I do not believe it is the duty of the Government of the United States to furnish automobiles and other luxuries for its officers, with the possible exception of the President. I think the time has come when these unnecessary expenditures should cease. I want to go back to the old Democratic simplicity of Thomas Jefferson. I believe in the reduction of expenditures in all public matters to the necessities of the Government.

Now, I do not want to do anything distasteful to the Senators who are in charge of this bill. There seems to be a disposition here to pass it. While I disapprove of it most heartily, I am not going to use dilatory tactics to prevent its passage, and therefore shall not insist upon a roll call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

PETITION.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Commercial Club of Oakland, Cal., praying for additional aids to navigation in Alaskan waters, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ADOLPH UNGER.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to authorize the reinstatement of Adolph Unger as a cadet in the United States Military Academy, and I submit a report (No. 119) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution has been passed by the House. It provides for the readmission of the young man named therein to the Military Academy. It is desirable, if he can be entered, that it be done just as soon as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon for the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the joint resolution S. J. Res. 62, which is identical with the House joint resolution just passed, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 3195) granting a pension to Victoria A. Parsons; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A bill (S. 3196) for the relief of heirs or estate of John C. McMahon, deceased (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

FLOOD CONTROL OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER (S. DOC. NO. 204).

Mr. THORNTON. At the request of my colleague from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], I ask unanimous consent for the printing as a Senate document of a report of the engineer of the Mississippi River Commission made to the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army by instruction of the Chief of Engineers in connection with flood prevention in the Mississippi River. Attached to it is a copy of an address by Col. C. McD. Townsend on the flood control of the Mississippi River, which has already been published as a Senate document, but which is referred to and which makes this report more comprehensible; also a copy of another address by Col. C. McD. Townsend, president of the Mississippi River Commission, on the flood control of the Mississippi River and delivered before the National Drainage Congress at St. Louis, Mo. The report and addresses are linked together, and for that reason it is desired that they be printed, with the illustrations, as a single Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that certain papers, together with the illustrations, be printed as a public document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7207.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask for order, Mr. President. It is impossible to hear what is going on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair admonishes Senators to preserve order.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. The Senator from Nevada, as I understand, has moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a certain bill. That motion, as I understand, is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Nobody is debating it, as the Chair understands.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Nevada is the regular order.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I make a suggestion to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield for that purpose, with pleasure.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to state that it will be impossible to dispose of the matter referred to by the Senator from Nevada to-day. There will be a lengthy debate on it, and it does not seem to me that it is fair to the Senate, tired and worn as it is, to precipitate a controversy at this time in regard to this matter. I simply want to ask the Senator from Nevada not to impose upon a worn-out Senate at this late period after such a long—

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, there is so much confusion immediately in the rear of the Chamber that we can not hear one word that is being said. This confusion has continued all the morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no power to compel Senators to observe the rules and to keep order. The Chair can only admonish them that other Senators insist that they shall do so; and the Chair indicates that to the Senate very emphatically, and hopes that they will observe it. The Senator from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I was merely suggesting to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] that the bill moved by him will precipitate a long debate. There is a great deal of objection to this measure throughout the country, and it is not fair to a tired and worn Senate, struggling as we have been for months and months here and late at night for two nights, to precipitate this matter on this Saturday afternoon. So I hope the Senator will not insist upon his motion being put.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I should like to comply with the request of the Senator from Kansas. I know the bill involves an important question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the title of the bill indicated by the Senator from Nevada be read to the Senate, so that the Senate may understand what the request is.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 7207) granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way in, over, and through certain public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and Stanislaus National Forest, and certain lands in the Yosemite National Park, the Stanislaus National Forest, and the public lands in the State of California, and for other purposes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this is the bill that is known as the Hetch Hetchy bill, a bill to provide a right of way for carrying water from the Hetch Hetchy Valley to San Francisco. I know there will be some debate on the bill, but I do not think that the Senator from Kansas is right as to the extensiveness of the debate. I think that if the debate—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the rule of the Senate which provides that a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill before 2 o'clock is not debatable.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am not debating that question. I was only—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can not debate anything until his motion is disposed of. The question is on the adoption of the motion made by the Senator from Nevada that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7207. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will suspend. There is unusual disorder prevailing this morning in the Chamber, which the Chair is wholly unable to account for. If Senators do not desire that business be conducted in such a way that it can be understood, let them say so in some definite form. The Chair admonishes them to preserve order. The Secretary will proceed with the roll call.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is impossible to hear even what the President pro tempore says.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. SHAFROTH (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from the State of California [Mr. WORKS] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I only have the right to vote in case my vote is necessary to make a quorum. I therefore refrain from voting at present.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I inquire if the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a pair with that Senator, and for the present I will withhold my vote, but there is an understanding that I may vote when it is necessary to make a quorum. If later on that fact develops, I shall avail myself of the privilege of voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY] and vote "yea."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] to the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently, without announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANDELL] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey (after having voted in the negative). I voted "nay," but I desire to change my vote to "yea" in order that the question may be brought up.

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "yea."

While I am on my feet I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. STONE] is unavoidably absent. If he were present, I am satisfied he would vote "yea." In his absence he is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. TILLMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently. I have a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON], and therefore I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to withdraw my vote, in the absence of my general pair, the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. KERN. I desire again to announce the illness of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY]. He is unavoidably detained from the Senate on that account. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. McCUMBER] is necessarily absent from the city on important business.

Mr. WEEKS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. LODGE] is absent on account of illness. He has a general pair, as has already been stated, with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

I wish also to state that the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is absent from the Senate on account of important business. I desire to have these statements stand for the day.

Mr. THORNTON. I desire again to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. RANDELL]. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). A moment ago I voted, transferring my pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. I now understand that he has already voted, which I did not know. I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 15, as follows:

So Mr. PITTMAN's motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7207) granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way in, over, and through certain public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and Stanislaus National Forest, and certain lands in the Yosemite National Park, the Stanislaus National Forest, and the public lands in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the city and county of San Francisco, a municipal corporation in the State of California, all necessary rights of way along such locations and of such width, not to exceed 250 feet, as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior may be required for the purposes of this act, in, over, and through the public lands of the United States in the counties of Tuolumne, Stanislaus, San Joaquin, and Alameda, in the State of California, and in, over, and through the Yosemite National Park and the Stanislaus National Forest, or portions thereof, lying within the said counties, for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining aqueducts, canals, ditches, pipes, pipe lines, flumes, tunnels, and conduits for conveying water for domestic purposes and uses to the city and county of San Francisco and such other municipalities and water districts as, with the consent of the city and county of San Francisco, or in accordance with the laws of the State of California in force at the time application is made, may hereafter participate in the beneficial use of the rights and privileges granted by this act; for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining power and electric plants, poles, and lines for generation and sale and distribution of electric energy; also for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining telephone and telegraph lines, and for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining roads, trails, bridges, tramways, railroads, and other means of locomotion, transportation, and communication, such as may be necessary or proper in the construction, maintenance, and operation of the works constructed by the grantee herein; together with such lands in the Hetch Hetchy Valley and Lake Eleanor Basin within the Yosemite National Park, and the Cherry Valley within the Stanislaus National Forest, irrespective of the width or extent of said lands, as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be actually necessary for surface or underground reservoirs, diverting and storage dams; together with such lands as the Secretary of the Interior may determine to be actually necessary for power houses, and all other structures or buildings necessary or properly incident to the construction, operation, and maintenance of said water-power and electric plants, telephone and telegraph lines, and such means of locomotion, transportation, and communication as may be established; together with the right to take, free of cost, from the public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and the Stanislaus National Forest adjacent to its right of way, within such distance as the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture may determine, stone, earth, gravel, sand, tuff, and other materials of like character actually necessary to be used in the construction, operation, and repair of its said water-power and electric plants, its said telephone and telegraph lines, and its said means of locomotion, transportation, or communication, under such conditions and regulations as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, within their respective jurisdictions, for the protection of the public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and the Stanislaus National Forest: Provided, That said grantee shall file, as hereinafter provided, a map or maps showing the boundaries, location, and extent of said proposed rights of way and lands for the purposes hereinabove set forth: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall approve no location or change of location in the national forests unless said location or change of location shall have been approved in writing by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Sec. 2. That within three years after the passage of this act said grantee shall file with the registers of the United States land offices, in the districts where said rights of way or lands are located, a map or maps showing the boundaries, locations, and extent of said proposed rights of way and lands required for the purposes stated in section 1 of this act; but no permanent construction work shall be commenced on said land until such map or maps shall have been filed as herein provided and approved by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That any changes of location of any of said rights of way or lands may be made by said grantee before the final completion of any of said work permitted in section 1 hereof, by filing such additional map or maps as may be necessary to show such changes of location, said additional map or maps to be filed in the same manner as the original map or maps; but no change of location shall become valid until approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of said map or maps showing changes of location of said rights of way or lands shall operate as an abandonment by the city and county of San Francisco to the extent of such change or changes of any of the rights of way or lands indicated on the original maps: And provided further, That any rights inuring to the grantee under this act shall, on the approval of the map or maps referred to herein by the Secretary of the Interior, relate back to the date of the filing of said map or maps with the register of the United States Land Office as provided herein, or to the date of the filing of such maps as they may be copies of as provided for herein: And provided further, That with reference to any map or maps heretofore filed by said city and county of San Francisco or its grantor with any officer of the Department of the Interior or the Department of Agriculture, and approved by said department, the provisions hereof will be considered complied with by the filing by said grantee of copies of any of such map or maps with the register of the United States Land Office as provided for herein, which said map or maps and locations shall as in all other cases be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 3. That the rights of way hereby granted shall not be effective over any lands upon which homestead, mining, or other existing valid claim or claims shall have been filed or made and which now in law constitute prior rights to any claim of the grantee until said grantee shall have purchased such portion or portions of such homestead, mining, or other existing valid claims as it may require for right-of-way purposes and other purposes herein set forth, and shall have procured proper relinquishments of such portion or portions of such claims, or acquired title by due process of law and just compensation paid to said entrymen or claimants, and caused proper evidence of such fact to be filed with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the right of such entrymen or claimants to sell and of said grantee to purchase such portion or portions of such claims are hereby granted: Provided, however, That this act shall not apply to any lands embraced in rights of way heretofore approved under any act of Congress for the benefit of any parties other than said grantee or its predecessors in interest.

Sec. 4. That the said grantee shall conform to all regulations adopted and prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior governing the Yosemite National Park and by the Secretary of Agriculture governing the Stanislaus National Forest, and shall not take, cut, or destroy any timber within the Yosemite National Park or the Stanislaus National Forest, except such as may be actually necessary in order to construct, repair, and operate its said reservoirs, dams, power plants, water power and electric works, and other structures above mentioned, but no timber shall be cut or removed from lands outside of the right of way until designated by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, respectively; and it shall pay to the United States the full value of all timber and wood cut, injured, or destroyed on or adjacent to any of the rights of way and lands, as required by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That no timber shall be cut by the grantee in the Yosemite National Park except from land to be submerged or which constitutes an actual obstruction to the right or rights of way or to any road or trail provided in this act: Provided further, That for and in consideration of the rights and privileges hereby granted to it the said grantee shall construct and maintain in good repair such bridges or other practicable crossings over its rights of way within the Stanislaus National Forest as may be prescribed in writing by the Secretary of Agriculture, and elsewhere on public lands along the line of said works, and within the Yosemite National Park as may be prescribed in writing by the Secretary of the Interior; and said grantee shall, as said waterworks are completed, if directed in writing by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, construct and maintain along each side of said right of way a lawful fence of such character as may be prescribed by the proper Secretary, with such suitable lanes or crossings as the aforesaid officers shall prescribe: And provided further, That the said grantee shall clear its rights of way within the Yosemite National Park and the Stanislaus National Forest and over any public land of any debris or inflammable material as directed by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, respectively; and said grantee shall permit any road or trail which it may construct over the public lands, the Yosemite National Park, or the Stanislaus National Forest to be freely used by the officials of the Government and by the public, and shall permit officials of the Government, for official business only, the free use of any telephone or telegraph lines, or equipment, or railroads that it may construct and maintain within the Yosemite National Park and the Stanislaus National Forest, or on the public lands, together with the right to connect with any such telephone or telegraph line; private telephone wires for the exclusive use of said Government officials: And provided further, That all reservoirs, dams, conduits, power plants, water power and electric works, bridges, fences, and other structures not of a temporary character shall be slightly and of suitable exterior design and finish so as to harmonize with the surrounding landscape and its use as a park; and for this purpose all plans and designs shall be submitted for approval to the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 5. That all lands over which the rights of way mentioned in this act shall pass shall be disposed of only subject to such easements: Provided, however, That the construction of the aforesaid works shall be prosecuted diligently, and no cessation of such construction shall continue for a period of three consecutive years, and in the event that the Secretary of the Interior shall find and determine that there has not been diligent prosecution of the work or of some integral and essential part thereof, or that there has been a cessation of such construction for a period of three consecutive years, then he may declare forfeited all rights of the grantee herein as to that part of the works not constructed, and request the Attorney General, on behalf of the United States, to commence suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California for the purpose of procuring a judgment declaring all such rights to that part of the works not constructed to be forfeited to the United States, and upon such request it shall be the duty of the said Attorney General to cause to be commenced and prosecuted to a final judgment such suit: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall make no such finding and take no such action if he shall find that the construction or progress of the works has been delayed or prevented by the act of God or the public enemy, or by engineering or other difficulties that could not have been reasonably foreseen and overcome, or by other special or peculiar difficulties beyond the control of the said grantee: Provided further, That, in the exercise of the rights granted by this act, the grantee shall at all times comply with the regulations herein authorized, and in the event of any material departure therefrom the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, respectively, may take such action as may be necessary in the courts or otherwise to enforce such regulations.

Sec. 6. That the grantee is prohibited from ever selling or letting to any corporation or individual, except a municipality or a municipal water district or irrigation district, the right to sell or sublet the water or the electric energy sold or given to it or him by the said grantee: Provided, That the rights hereby granted shall not be sold, assigned, or transferred to any private person, corporation, or association, and in case of any attempt to do so sell, assign, transfer, or convey, this grant shall revert to the Government of the United States.

Sec. 7. That for and in consideration of the grant by the United States as provided for in this act the said grantee shall assign, free of cost to the United States, all roads and trails built under the provisions hereof; and further, after the expiration of five years from the passage of this act the grantee shall pay to the United States the sum of $15,000 annually for a period of 10 years, beginning with the expiration of the five-year period before mentioned, and for the next 10 years following $20,000 annually, and for the remainder of the term of the grant shall, unless in the discretion of Congress the annual charge should be increased or diminished, pay the sum of $30,000 annually, said sums to be paid on the first day of July of each year. Until otherwise provided by Congress, said sums shall be kept in a separate fund by the United States, to be applied to the building and maintenance of roads and trails and other improvements in the Yosemite National Park and other national parks in the State of California. The Secretary of the Interior shall designate the uses to be made of sums paid under the provisions of this section under the conditions specified herein.

Sec. 8. That the word "grantee" as used herein shall be understood as meaning the city and county of San Francisco and such other municipalities or water district or water districts as may, with the consent of the city and county of San Francisco or in accordance with the laws of the State of California, hereafter participate in or succeed to the beneficial rights and privileges granted by this act.

Sec. 9. That this grant is made to the said grantee subject to the observance on the part of the grantee of all the conditions hereinbefore and hereinafter enumerated:

(a) That upon the completion of the Hetch Hetchy Dam or the Lake Eleanor Dam, in the Yosemite National Park, by the grantee, as herein specified, and upon the commencement of the use of any reservoirs thereby created by said grantee as a source of water supply for said grantee, the following sanitary regulations shall be made effective within the watershed above and around said reservoir sites so used by said grantee:

First. No human excrement, garbage, or other refuse shall be placed in the waters of any reservoir or stream or within 300 feet thereof.

Second. All sewage from permanent camps and hotels within the watershed shall be filtered by natural percolation through porous earth or otherwise adequately purified or destroyed.

Third. No person shall bathe, wash clothes or cooking utensils, or water stock in, or in any way pollute, the water within the limits of the Hetch Hetchy Reservoir or any reservoir constructed by the said grantee under the provisions of this grant, or in the streams leading thereto, within 1 mile of said reservoir; or, with reference to the Hetch Hetchy Reservoir, in the waters from the reservoir or waters entering the river between it and the "Early intake" of the aqueduct, pending the completion of the aqueduct between "Early intake" and the Hetch Hetchy Dam site.

Fourth. The cost of the inspection necessary to secure compliance with the sanitary regulations made a part of these conditions, which inspection shall be under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be defrayed by the said grantee.

Fifth. If at any time the sanitary regulations provided for herein shall be deemed by said grantee insufficient to protect the purity of the water supply, then the said grantee shall install a filtration plant or provide other means to guard the purity of the water. No other sanitary rules or restrictions shall be demanded by or granted to the said grantee as to the use of the watershed by campers, tourists, or the occupants of hotels and cottages.

(b) That the said grantee shall recognize the prior rights of the Modesto Irrigation District and the Turlock Irrigation District as now constituted under the laws of the State of California, or as said districts may be hereafter enlarged to contain in the aggregate not to exceed 300,000 acres of land, to receive 2,350 second-feet of the natural daily flow of the Tuolumne River, measured at the Lake Grange Dam, whenever the same can be beneficially used by said irrigation districts, and that the grantee shall never interfere with said rights.

(c) That whenever said irrigation districts receive at the La Grange Dam less than 2,350 second-feet of water, and when it is necessary for their beneficial use to receive more water the said grantee shall release free of charge, out of the natural daily flow of the streams which it has intercepted, so much water as may be necessary for the beneficial use of said irrigation districts not exceeding an amount which, with the waters of the Tuolumne and its tributaries, will cause a flow at La Grange Dam of 2,350 second-feet; and shall also recognize the rights of the said irrigation districts to the extent of 4,000 second-feet of water out of the natural daily flow of the Tuolumne River for combined direct use and collection into storage reservoirs as may be provided by said irrigation districts, during the period of 60 days immediately following and including April 15 of each year, and shall during such period release free of charge such quantity of water as may be necessary to secure to the said irrigation districts such 4,000 second-feet flow or portion thereof as the said irrigation districts are capable of beneficially directly using and storing below Jawbone Creek: Provided, however, That at such times as the aggregate daily natural flow of the watershed of the Tuolumne and its tributaries measured at the La Grange Dam shall be less than said districts can beneficially use, and less than 2,350 second-feet, then and in that event the said grantee shall release, free of charge, the entire natural daily flow of the streams which it has under this grant intercepted.

water, such costs to be computed in accordance with the currently accepted practice of public cost accounting as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, including, however, a fair proportion of the cost to said grantee of the conduit, lands, dams, and water-supply system included in the Hetch Hetchy and Lake Eleanor sites; upon the express condition, however, that the said grantee may require the said irrigation districts to purchase and pay for a minimum quantity of such stored water, and that the said grantee shall be entitled to receive compensation for a minimum quantity of stored water and shall not be required to sell and deliver to the said irrigation districts more than a maximum quantity of such stored water to be released during any calendar year: Provided, however, That if the said irrigation districts shall develop sufficient water to meet their own needs for beneficial use and shall so notify in writing the Secretary of the Interior, the said grantee shall not be required to sell or deliver to said irrigation districts the maximum or minimum amount of stored waters hereinbefore provided for, and shall release the said districts from the obligation to pay for such stored water: And provided further, That said grantee shall without cost to said irrigation districts return to the Tuolumne River above the La Grange Dam for the use of the said irrigation districts all surplus or waste water resulting from the development of hydroelectric energy generated by the said grantee.

(e) That such minimum and maximum amounts of such stored water to be so released during any calendar year as hereinbefore provided and the price to be paid therefor by the said irrigation districts are to be determined and fixed by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the provisions of the preceding paragraph.

(f) That the Secretary of the Interior shall revise the maximum and minimum amounts of stored water to be supplied to said irrigation districts by said grantee as hereinbefore provided, whenever the said irrigation districts have properly developed the facilities of the Davis Reservoir of the Turlock Irrigation District and the Warner-Dallas Reservoir of the Modesto Irrigation District to the fullest practicable extent up to a development not exceeding in cost $15 per acre-foot storage capacity, and whenever additional storage has been provided by the said irrigation districts which is necessary to the economical utilization of the waters of said watershed, and also after water losses and wastes have been reduced to such reasonable minimum as will assure the economical and beneficial use of such water.

(g) That the said grantee shall not be required to furnish more than the said minimum quantity of stored water hereinbefore provided for until the said irrigation districts shall have first drawn upon their own stored water to the fullest practicable extent.

(h) That the said grantee shall not divert beyond the limits of the San Joaquin Valley any more of the waters from the Tuolumne watershed than, together with the waters which it now has or may hereafter acquire, shall be necessary for its beneficial use for domestic and other municipal purposes.

(i) That the said grantee shall, at its own expense, locate and construct, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, such weirs or other suitable structures on sites to be granted, if necessary, by the United States, for accurately measuring the flow in the said river at or above La Grange Dam, and measuring the flow into and out from the reservoirs or intakes of said districts, and into and out from any reservoirs constructed by the said grantee, and at any other point on the Tuolumne River or its tributaries, which he may designate, and fit the same with water-measuring apparatus satisfactory to said Secretary and keep such hydrographic records as he may direct, such apparatus and records to be open to inspection by any interested party at any time.

(j) That by "the flow," "natural daily flow," "aggregate daily natural flow" and "what is naturally flowing," as are used herein, is meant such flow as on any given day would flow in the Tuolumne River or its tributaries if said grantee had no storage or diversion works on the said Tuolumne watershed.

(k) That when the said grantee begins the development of the Hetch Hetchy Reservoir site, it shall undertake and vigorously prosecute to completion a dam at least 200 feet high, with a foundation capable of supporting said dam when built to its greatest economic and safe height.

(l) That the said grantee shall, upon request, sell or supply to said irrigation districts, and also to the municipalities within either or both said irrigation districts, for the use of any land owner or owners therein for pumping subsurface water for drainage or irrigation, or for the actual municipal public purposes of said municipalities (which purposes shall not include sale to private persons or corporations) any excess of electrical energy which may be generated, and which may be so beneficially used by said irrigation districts or municipalities, when any such excess of electric energy may not be required for pumping the water supply for said grantee and for the actual municipal public purposes of the said grantee (which purposes shall not include sale to private persons or corporations) at such price as will actually reimburse the said grantee for developing and maintaining and transmitting the surplus electrical energy thus sold and no power plant shall be interposed on the line of the conduit except by the said grantee, or the lessee, as hereinafter provided, and for the purposes and within the limitations in the conditions set forth herein: Provided, That said grantee shall satisfy the needs of the landowners in said irrigation districts for pumping subsurface water for drainage or irrigation, and the needs of the municipalities within such irrigation districts for actual municipal public purposes, after which it may dispose of any excess electrical energy for commercial purposes.

(m) That the right of said grantee in the Tuolumne water supply to develop electric power for either municipal or commercial use is to be made conditional for 20 years following the completion of any portion of the works adapted to the generation of electrical energy, as follows: The said grantee shall within 3 years from the date of completion of said portion of the works install, operate, and maintain apparatus capable of developing and transmitting not less than 10,000 horsepower of electric power for municipal and commercial use, said 10,000 horsepower to be actually used or offered for use; and within 10 years from the completion of said portion of the works not less than 20,000 horsepower; and within 15 years therefrom not less than 30,000 horsepower; and within 20 years therefrom not less than 60,000 horsepower, unless in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior the public interest will be satisfied with a lesser development. The said grantee shall develop and use hydroelectric power for the use of its people and shall, at prices to be fixed under the laws of California or, in the absence of such laws, at prices approved by the Secretary of the Interior, sell or supply such power for irrigation, pumping, or other beneficial use, said prices not to be less than will return to said grantee the actual total costs of providing and supplying said power, which costs shall be computed in accordance with the currently accepted practice of public cost accounting, as shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, including, however, a fair proportion of cost of conduit, lands, dams, and water-supply system; and further, said grantee shall, before using any of said water for the purpose of developing hydroelectric power, file such maps, surveys, field notes, or other data as may be required by law, and shall conform to any law existing and applicable to said subject of development of said hydroelectric power for municipal or commercial uses.

(n) That after the period of 20 years hereinbefore provided for the development, transmission, use, and sale of electric power, the Secretary of the Interior, under authorization hereby given, may require the grantee, within a time fixed by the Secretary, to develop, transmit, and use, or offer for sale, such additional power, and also such power less than 60,000 horsepower as the grantee may have failed to develop, transmit, use, or sell, within the 20 years aforesaid, as in the judgment of said Secretary the grantee may or ought to develop under this grant, and which in his judgment the public interest demands or convenience requires; and in case of the failure of the grantee to carry out any such requirements of the Secretary of the Interior the latter is hereby authorized so to do, and he may, in such manner and form and upon such terms and conditions as he may determine, provide for the development, transmission, use, and sale of such additional power and such power not so developed, transmitted, or used by the grantee at the end of said 20 years up to 60,000 horsepower; and for that purpose the Secretary of the Interior may take possession of and lease to such person or persons as he may designate such portion of the rights of way, structures, dams, conduits, and other property acquired or constructed by the grantee hereunder as may be necessary for the development, transmission, use, and sale of such power.

(o) That the rates or charges to be made by the grantee or by any lessee under the last preceding paragraph for the use of power for commercial purposes shall at all times conform to the laws of the State of California or, in the absence of any such statutory law, be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and in the absence of such law no rates or charges shall be made, fixed, or collected without such approval, and the grantee shall at any time, upon the demand of the Secretary of the Interior, allow the latter or such person or persons as he may designate full and free access, right, and opportunity to examine and inspect all of the grantee's books, records, and accounts, and all the works constructed and property occupied hereunder by the grantee.

(p) That this grant is upon the further condition that the grantee shall construct on the north side of the Hetch Hetchy Reservoir site a scenic road or trail, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, above and along the proposed lake to such point as may be designated by the said Secretary, and also lending from said scenic road or trail a trail to the Tiltill Valley and to Lake Vernon, and a road or trail to Lake Eleanor and Cherry Valley via McGill Meadow; and likewise the said grantee shall build a wagon road from Hamilton or Smiths Station along the most feasible route adjacent to its proposed aqueduct from Groveland to Portulaca or Hog Ranch and into the Hetch Hetchy Dam site, and a road along the southerly slope of Smiths Peak from Hog Ranch past Harden Lake to a junction with the old Tioga Road, in section 4, township 1 south, range 21 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, and such roads and trails made necessary by this grant, and as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. Said grantee shall have the right to build and maintain such other necessary roads or trails through the public lands, for the construction and operation of its works, subject, however, to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture in the Stanislaus National Forest, and the Secretary of the Interior in the Yosemite National Park. The said grantee shall further lay and maintain a water pipe, or otherwise provide a good and sufficient supply of water for camp purposes at the Meadow, one-third of a mile, more or less, southeasterly from the Hetch Hetchy Dam site.

That all trail and road building and maintenance by the said grantee in the Yosemite National Park and the Stanislaus National Forest shall be done subject to the direction and approval of the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture according to their respective jurisdictions.

(q) That the said grantee shall furnish water at cost to any authorized occupant within 1 mile of the reservoir, and in addition to the sums provided for in section 7 it shall reimburse the United States Government for the actual cost of maintenance of the above roads and trails in a condition of repair as good as when constructed.

(r) That in case the Department of the Interior is called upon, by reason of any of the above conditions, to make investigations and decisions respecting the rights, benefits, or obligations specified in this act, which investigations or decisions involve expense to the said Department of the Interior, then such expense shall be borne by said grantee.

(s) That the grantee shall file with the Secretary of the Interior, within six months after the approval of this act, its acceptance of the terms and conditions of this grant.

(t) That the grantee herein shall convey to the United States, by proper conveyance, a good and sufficient title, free from all liens and encumbrances of any nature whatever, to any and all tracts of land which are now owned by said grantee within the Yosemite National Park or that part of the national forest adjacent thereto not actually required for use under the provisions of this act, said conveyance to be approved by and filed with the Secretary of the Interior within six months after the said grantee ceases to use such lands for the purpose of construction or repair under the provisions of this act.

(u) That the city and county of San Francisco shall sell to the United States, for the use of the War Department, such water as the War Department may elect to take, and shall deliver the same through its system in or near the city of San Francisco to the mains or systems of such military reservations in that vicinity as may be designated by the Secretary of War, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. In payment for such water and the delivery thereof the United States shall pay to the said city and county of San Francisco a rental, to be calculated at a fixed rate per 1,000 gallons, said rate not to exceed the actual cost of said water to said city and county for all the water so furnished, as determined by meter measurements: And provided further, That payment of said rental shall be made by the local disbursing officer of the War Department in the usual manner: Provided, however, That the grantee shall at all times comply with and observe on its part all the conditions specified in this act, and in the event that the same are not reasonably complied with and carried out by the grantee, upon written request of the Secretary of the Interior, it is made the duty of the Attorney General in the name of the United States to commence all necessary suits or proceedings in the proper court having jurisdiction thereof, for the purpose of enforcing and carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 10. That this grant, so far as it relates to the said irrigation districts, shall be deemed and held to constitute a binding obligation upon said grantee in favor of the said irrigation districts, which said districts, or either of them, may judicially enforce in any court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 11. That this act is a grant upon certain express conditions specifically set forth herein, and nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting or intending to affect or in any way to interfere with the laws of the State of California relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation or for municipal or other uses, or any vested right acquired thereunder, and the Secretary of the Interior, in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall proceed in conformity with the laws of said State.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on House bill 7898, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent without displacing the pending bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on House bill 7898 and the amendments thereto, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Chair appoints the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], and the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. The order instructing the Sergeant at Arms to direct Senators to return to Washington was made last night. I ask unanimous consent that that order be now vacated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection the order will be vacated. The Chair hears none.

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall have to object to the vacation of that order until the passage of the pending bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. The Chair having made the announcement, will recall it. The Senator from Nevada objects, and the request of the Senator from North Carolina will not be granted. The pending bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7207) granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way in, over, and through certain public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and Stanislaus National Forest, and certain lands in the Yosemite National Park, the Stanislaus National Forest, and the public lands in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If no amendment be proposed as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does that refer to the bill that has just been read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir; the bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If no amendment be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to inquire whether an effort is to be made to pass this bill through the Senate without consideration in Committee of the Whole and without debate upon it?

Mr. PITTMAN. It will not be.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If that be so, I want to demand a quorum right now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin is probably misinformed about what has taken place. The bill has been read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am aware that the bill was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Chair stated that the bill is now in Committee of the Whole and unless amendments be offered it will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am aware of that. I followed the proceedings up to that point. I raise the question of a quorum.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is in his right in making that point, but the Chair thought that he might have proceeded under a misapprehension and does not want him to think that at this end of the Senate there is anything improper being done.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; but I expected that the reading of the bill would be followed by some explanation of the bill—some discussion of it in Committee of the Whole. However, if there is a disposition to put this bill through in that manner—

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment? I am sure there is no disposition on the part of those in favor of this bill to prevent a discussion of the bill and of any amendment. There is no intention, so far as I know, to limit the debate or in any way interfere with any debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin having suggested the absence of a quorum, debate is not in order. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. PITTMAN. Will the Senator from Wisconsin withdraw it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I can not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Bacon	Hughes	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	James	O'Gorman	Swanson
Borah	Johnson	Overman	Thomas
Bradley	Jones	Perkins	Thompson
Bristow	Kern	Pittman	Thornton
Bryan	La Follette	Poindexter	Tillman
Burton	Lane	Pomerene	Vardaman
Chamberlain	Lea	Reed	Walsh
Chilton	Lewis	Shafer	Weeks
Clarke, Ark.	McLean	Sheppard	Williams
Crawford	Martin, Va.	Shields
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Hitchcock	Myers	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I should like very much to respect the requests of some of the Senators on the other side of the Chamber with regard to a postponement of this matter, but I do not believe there is any reasonable ground for such postponement. This subject has been under consideration, more or less, for a period of 12 years. It has been considered by committees of Congress on two separate occasions. It was considered in the House of Representatives on a former occasion, and again at this session of Congress.

There is a persistent lobby against the passage of the bill, and I regret to say that that lobby is affecting the minds and the judgment of Members of this body, of people in public life, and of citizens all over the country. That lobby has not only appeared before the Public Lands Committee of the other House and given its testimony, but after that testimony had been weighed in the balance by a committee composed of the members of three parties, and the verdict of that committee was unanimously against them, they were not satisfied, but they came before the Public Lands Committee of this body and again made the same effort, with the result that again an impartial committee, composed of all parties and Senators from all parts of the United States, decided unanimously against them.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Nevada has stated that there is a lobby in opposition to this bill and that it is affecting the minds of some of the Members of Congress. Would the Senator object to putting into the Record the names of those who constitute the lobby in order that it may not appear that this is an "insidious lobby"?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no objection whatever to that, and I think it is perfectly fair that their names should be put into the Record. I refer particularly to Mr. Underwood Johnson, to a Mr. Whitman, who represents a society for the protection of national parks, and to a Mr. Parsons, who, I believe, represents some civic body, the name of which I do not recollect at the present time. I do not mean to charge that this lobby is an "insidious lobby" in such sense as the word is generally used; but I think, nevertheless, that the effectiveness of the lobby is far greater than if its methods were of an insidious character. Its methods, however, consist in misrepresenting the facts which affect this bill. Whether those misrepresentations are willful or through ignorance, the fact remains that Senators in this body, Representatives in the other House of Congress, and public officials in Washington are receiving thousands and thousands of letters from people throughout this country protesting against the passage of this bill, basing that opposition upon statements that they have received from the lobby to which I have referred.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. If I understood the Senator from Nevada correctly, he stated that on all occasions the reports of committees having had this bill under consideration had been unanimous?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator is mistaken. I did not say on all occasions; I said at the last hearing.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator from Nevada stated "at the last hearing," then I will stand corrected, Mr. President; but I want, if the Senator will permit me, to make the statement that when I was a member of the other House I was a member of the Committee on the Public Lands of that body. I had the opportunity of hearing both those who are for and those are against this measure.

There was great opposition to it; and, designate it as you please, whether you choose to call it a lobby or something else, there was great opposition to the bill from people who live in the State of California, and I was one of the members of the Committee on the Public Lands in the other House who at that time made an adverse report on this particular measure.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I know that at one time—

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator from Nevada permit me to make a statement in that connection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. MYERS. I am informed and understand that the pending bill in many material particulars is very different from the former bill which was reported adversely by the House Committee on the Public Lands when the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] was a member of that committee. I am informed that many of the objections that were made to that bill then have been obviated and overcome in the pending bill. I merely wanted to call attention to the fact that the bills are not identical.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] will permit me, that statement can not go unchallenged. The provisions of the bill have not been changed. It may be that some arrangement has been made that is satisfactory to certain people; but I will say to the Senator from Montana that if he will take the bill which the Committee on the Public Lands of the House had under consideration at that time and compare it with the pending bill, I believe he will find that the provisions of the two bills are about the same.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, of course the object of the bill is in the main the same—to get a water supply for the city of San Francisco. While I was not in Congress when the former bill was before the House, I am told by those who are interested that there are many material points of difference between the two bills.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I realize that at one time there was violent opposition to this bill. That opposition might have been based upon conditions in the bill or have been occasioned by reason of absence of provisions that should be in the bill or by reason of an ignorance of the actual conditions surrounding it, but let me state that there has been a change of mind going on the more that this subject has had publicity. I believe that those who are opposing this bill are, in nearly every case, opposing it through ignorance of the exact conditions, and I am simply striving to bring about greater information on the subject.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield further to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. Does the Senator from Nevada think that it is fair, then, to try to railroad this bill through without giving those of us who may perhaps be ignorant of the conditions and surroundings an opportunity to investigate the matter?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am not trying to railroad this bill through, and I do not understand how the Senator could ask that question, when years and years ago he says he sat upon a committee that had a thorough hearing on this same subject.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not admit that I am ignorant about the bill; but that was the charge of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I want to say also that this bill has been on the table of the Senate, together with the report and the hearings in relation to it, for two or three months, and I want to know how long it is going to take the Senator to equip himself with regard to this matter?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let us have a little order in the procedure. Does the Senator from Nevada yield further to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Nevada this question: Did the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate at this time consider the question whether there were any other available sources—

Mr. PITTMAN. They did.

Mr. GRONNA. Whereby the city of San Francisco and other bay cities of the Pacific coast were to be supplied with water?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will answer that question very fully. The Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, when those opposed to this bill first came before them, asked them if there was to be a hearing in the matter before the Public Lands Committee of the House, and they stated that there would be. It was therefore understood by the Public Lands Committee of the Senate that there would be no hearings before the Public Lands Committee of the Senate, but that we would act upon the hearings before the Public Lands Committee of the House, permitting, of course, arguments and statements with regard to it by anyone. There has been printed as a House document a report on the Hetch Hetchy Valley by the advisory board of the Army engineers to the Secretary of the Interior on investigations relative to sources of water supply for San Francisco and bay communities, under date of February 13, 1913. That report contains a description of all the available water supplies of San Francisco, with a discussion of the relative costs and advantages.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does it contain a report on the Eel River source of supply?

Mr. PITTMAN. It does. As I was saying, Mr. President, the view taken by those of us on this side who are at this time urging the consideration of the bill is that there has been ample time for investigation and study of this question; that there have been full hearings on several various occasions; that there has been an examination by a board of Army engineers of the United States into the sources of water supply for San Francisco, and a full report on that subject, which is available to any Senator here or to anyone else who may be interested in the matter; that there is a full report of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House discussing this subject in detail; that all the hearings have been printed and are within the reach of the Members of the Senate; that everyone has had an ample opportunity to be heard either for the purpose of giving testimony or for the purpose of debating this question; and it seems to us that the request for further time in this matter is unreasonable, that it can accomplish no good purpose whatever, and that it will simply mean an endless delay to legislation that ought to be enacted.

We have been crowded out by the tariff bill; we have been crowded on further by the appropriation bill, and the minute the currency bill comes into the Senate we will be crowded on and on again; and each time after one of these important measures is finished Senators fly from this Hall and we cease to have a quorum. It seems to me that unless there is some serious question, unless there is something suggested that might be in the nature of new evidence that would change this whole situation, we ought to go on with the discussion at this time.

I am sure that there is no one on the Public Lands Committee of the Senate who has any desire whatever to railroad this bill through. In fact, I want to say to you that there is not a member of the Public Lands Committee of the Senate who has any interest whatever, to my knowledge, in the State of California, except the junior Senator from California. This matter has been considered purely from a disinterested and unselfish standpoint.

I know that when the facts are placed clearly before this body there will be Senators here who are now inclined to oppose this measure who will recognize that they have been mistaken. I am satisfied that they will see that the declarations scattered throughout the country, which have been influencing the minds of the people to the effect that this work is going to destroy a great national park, are not only untrue, but that there is nothing upon which to base the statement, and that the statement in itself is absolutely absurd. I think that if they will investigate the evidence and listen to the facts presented here they will find out that some of those men who have written those letters have never been in the Hetch Hetchy Valley.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have not been disposed to delay unnecessarily the consideration of this bill. I wanted to know the facts as nearly as I could before I voted upon it, and upon that theory I objected to its consideration on two former occasions. But there has a phase arisen concerning the controversy which it seems to me we ought to consider while we are considering the necessity of disposing of it at this time. I have a telegram here from the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] as to the necessity of postponement, and presenting a phase of the matter, which I understand was not known in its fullness to the committee. While I do not desire to interrupt the Senator to read it, unless he consents; but I will do so if the Senator will permit me at this time.

Mr. PITTMAN. I consent that the telegram be read.

Mr. BORAH. The telegram is dated Coronado, Cal., October 2, 1913, and is as follows:

Hon. REED SMOOT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

I have sent the following telegram to Senator MYERS. I have satisfied myself that the Hetch Hetchy bill should not pass without further investigation. Ninety-nine per cent of water users in the irrigation districts are strongly opposed to it and claim that they were betrayed by those who consented to the compromise measure. They claim that thousands of acres of lands in their districts and outside of them will be deprived of water to which they are entitled, and that they can show that this sacrifice of the best and most fertile lands in the State is not necessary in the interest of San Francisco. Because of this compromise, that they indignantly repudiate, this phase of the question has not been investigated. The bill should not be rushed through this session under such circumstances. It is too serious not only to the parties directly interested but to the whole State.

JOHN D. WORKS.

I did not know of that telegram until last evening, Mr. President, and I do not know what the committee has to say with reference to that feature of it; but it is evident that there are a great many people vitally interested in the proposition who will be deprived of a hearing if we pass the bill at this particular time.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Nevada to yield to me, as chairman of the Public Lands Committee of the Senate, while I make a preliminary statement before the debate opens up. I had intended to do so at the first opportunity, as soon as the Senator from Nevada yielded the floor; but as long as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has mentioned that phase of the matter, I think it best to do so at this time, and to say now what I intended to say as soon as I could get an opportunity.

In regard to the matter of taking up the bill for consideration and putting it upon its passage in the Senate at this time, I had intended to say before the debate progressed far and at the first opportunity, and now take occasion to say what I think I ought to say, that there are two Senators who have expressed a strong desire to be present during the consideration of the bill and a desire to have the bill postponed until they could be present. They are the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS].

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] went to his home in Utah immediately after the vote on the tariff bill. He wanted the matter postponed, both in the committee and before the Senate, until he could return. The date of his intended return was somewhat indefinite, and the committee postponed consideration of the bill on his account for one week, hoping that he would be back in that time and understanding that he probably would be; but at the end of that time the majority of the committee did not see fit to postpone consideration any further, for a number of reasons. One of those reasons was that a large number of people, both for and against the bill, had come here to appear before the committee. The majority of the committee thought it best to proceed with the hearing, and did so.

After the bill had been reported out of committee by the unanimous vote of all in attendance at the hearing, in order to ascertain the feeling of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] about its consideration on the floor of the Senate, I wired him and asked him if he insisted on postponement of consideration in the Senate until he could be here, and, if so, to let me know, and state when he would be here. The answer that I received to that telegram simply stated that he could not be here until the 12th day of this month, and did not state whether or not he insisted on postponement until that time. It left my mind in a rather uncertain condition as to whether or not he wanted a postponement until he could be here.

That is all I have heard from the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I did not consider his telegram sufficiently clear to authorize me to protest against the consideration of the bill at this time. That is, I did not take it as an insistence on his part for further postponement.

I heard nothing about the matter from the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] until about day before yesterday. Within the last two days I have received two telegrams from the junior Senator from California, one of which is about like the telegram just read by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], saying in effect that the bill ought not to be considered at this time, that there were strong objections to it, and expressing opposition to its passage unless it should be amended.

As I understand, the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] is in favor of the passage of the bill as it now is, unamended, and is in favor of the immediate consideration of the bill and of putting it upon its passage at this time. One of the Senators from California being in favor of the bill as it is and desiring its immediate consideration, and living in San Francisco, and the other being opposed to the bill as it is now and opposed to its present consideration, I did not feel disposed to take any part as between their conflicting views. As long as California is represented here on the floor of the Senate by one Senator to speak for that State, I did not feel like getting in and undertaking to speak for the State, especially when, as I understand, the two Senators from the State maintain different views.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. MYERS. With great pleasure.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to state that as soon as the committee reported I wired to Los Angeles to my colleague that the committee had unanimously reported in favor of the passage of this bill and that it would undoubtedly be taken up the first of this week. I sent that telegram a week ago yesterday. I have received no reply; and therefore I have assumed that he is no longer interested in the bill.

Mr. MYERS. I know from my conversations with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] that he is strongly in favor of the bill, and he has been insisting for some days that it ought to be brought up for immediate consideration, while, as I say, the junior Senator from the State is opposed to that course. All of the Representatives from California of all three political parties who have spoken to me about the matter—and quite a number of them have done so—have expressed a strong desire that the bill be brought up at once for consideration, and have expressed the opinion that it ought to be put upon its passage and passed without any further delay; and, of course, they are strongly in favor of the bill. The majority of the Senate Committee on Public Lands was strongly in favor of the bill, and was of the opinion that it ought to be brought up and put upon its passage without any further delay.

Under these circumstances I did not feel that it was incumbent on me to make a fight in behalf of anyone against the consideration of the bill at this time, or to take any part in the matter either for or against the consideration of the bill at this time; and therefore I have not done so. But the bill having been taken up for consideration, I will say that I am unqualifiedly and most heartily in favor of its passage at this time in an unamended form. As to that, I have no hesitancy in expressing my personal attitude toward the bill. As to the question of taking it up at this time, I took no part further than merely to cast my individual vote in accordance with my views of what ought to be done.

At this time I ask that the telegrams which I have received from the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] may be printed in the Record in connection with the discussion of the bill, and, further, that the report of the House Committee on the Public Lands may be published in the Record as a part of the discussion of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to hear the telegrams read.

Mr. MYERS. They are at my office. I will go and get them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should be glad to hear the telegram from the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I understand the telegram from the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] is the same as the one that has been read here by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. MYERS. Yes. I ask leave at this time to have the telegrams and the report printed in the Record; and I assure the Senator from Wisconsin that I will go and get the telegrams and read them as soon as I can do so. There is no objection, as I understand, to my request for the printing.

The report referred to is as follows:

[House Report No. 41, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]
HETCH HETCHY GRANT TO SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. RAKER, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 7207:

The Committee on the Public Lands has had under consideration bill H. R. 7207, a bill "granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way in, over, and through certain public lands, the Yosemite National Park, Stanislaus National Forest, and certain lands in the Yosemite National Park, the Stanislaus National Forest, and the public lands in the State of California, and for other purposes." Having had the same under consideration and after full hearing and due consideration thereof, the committee unanimously reports that the bill do pass. The bill as finally passed upon and unanimously approved by the committee is as follows:

"[H. R. 7207, Sixty-third Congress, first session.]

"A bill granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way in, over, and through certain public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and Stanislaus National Forest, and certain lands in the Yosemite National Park, the Stanislaus National Forest, and the public lands in the State of California, and for other purposes.

"Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the city and county of San Francisco, a municipal corporation in the State of California, all necessary rights of way along such locations and of such width, not to exceed 250 feet, as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior may be required for the purposes of this act, in, over, and through the public lands of the United States in the counties of Tuolumne, Stanislaus, San Joaquin, and Alameda, in the State of California, and in, over, and through the Yosemite National Park and the Stanislaus National Forest, or portions thereof, lying within the said counties, for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining aqueducts, canals, ditches, pipes, pipe lines, flumes, tunnels, and conduits for conveying water for domestic purposes and uses to the city and county of San Francisco and such other municipalities and water districts as, with the consent of the city and county of San Francisco, or in accordance with the laws of the State of California in force at the time application is made, may hereafter participate in the beneficial use of the rights and privileges granted by this act; for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining power and electric plants, poles, and lines for generation and sale and distribution of electric energy; also for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining telephone and telegraph lines, and for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining roads, trails, bridges, tramways, railroads, and other means of locomotion, transportation, and communication, such as may be necessary or proper in the construction, maintenance, and operation of the works constructed by the grantee herein; together with such lands in the Hetch Hetchy Valley, and Lake Eleanor Basin within the Yosemite National Park, and the Cherry Valley within the Stanislaus National Forest, irrespective of the width or extent of said lands, as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be actually necessary for surface or underground reservoirs, diverting and storage dams; together with such lands as the Secretary of the Interior may determine to be actually necessary for power houses, and all other structures or buildings necessary or properly incident to the construction, operation, and maintenance of said water-power and electric plants, telephone and telegraph lines, and such means of locomotion, transportation, and communication as may be established; together with the right to take, free of cost, from the public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and the Stanislaus National Forest adjacent to its right of way, stone, earth, gravel, sand, tufa, and other materials of like character actually necessary to be used in the construction, operation, and repair of its said water-power and electric plants, its said telephone and telegraph lines, and its said means of locomotion, transportation, or communication, under such conditions and regulations as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, within their respective jurisdictions, for the protection of the public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and the Stanislaus National Forest: Provided, That said grantee shall file, as hereinafter provided, a map or maps showing the boundaries, location, and extent of said proposed rights of way and lands for the purposes hereinabove set forth: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall approve no location in the national forests unless said location shall have been approved in writing by the Secretary of Agriculture.

"Sec. 2. That within three years after the passage of this act said grantee shall file with the registers of the United States land offices in the districts where said rights of way or lands are located a map or maps showing the boundaries, locations, and extent of said proposed rights of way and lands required for the purposes stated in section 1 of this act; but no permanent construction work shall be commenced on said land until such map or maps shall have been filed as herein provided, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That any changes of location of any of said rights of way or lands may be made by said grantee before the final completion of any of said work permitted in section 1 hereof, by filing such additional map or maps as may be necessary to show such changes of location, said additional map or maps to be filed in the same manner as the original map or maps; but no change of location shall become valid until approved by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, as his jurisdiction may appear; and the approval by the Secretary of the Interior of said map or maps showing changes of location of said rights of way or lands shall operate as an abandonment by the city and county of San Francisco to the extent of such change or changes of any of the rights of way or lands indicated on the original maps: And provided further, That any rights inuring to the grantee under this act shall, on the approval of the map or maps referred to herein by the Secretary of the Interior relate back to the date of the filing of said map or maps with the register of the United States Land Office as provided herein, or to the date of the filing of such maps as they may be copies as provided for herein: And provided further, That with reference to any map or maps heretofore filed by said city and county of San Francisco or its grantor with any officer of the Department of the Interior or the Department of Agriculture, and approved by said department, the provisions hereof will be considered complied with by the filing by said grantee of copies of any of such map or maps with the register of the United States Land Office as provided for herein, which said map or maps and locations shall, as in all other cases, be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

"Sec. 3. That the rights of way hereby granted shall not be effective over any lands upon which homestead, mining, or other existing valid claim or claims shall have been filed or made and which now in law constitute prior rights to any claim of the grantee until said grantee shall have purchased such portion or portions of such homestead, mining, or other existing valid claims as it may require for right-of-way purposes and other purposes herein set forth, and shall have procured proper relinquishments of such portion or portions of such claims, or acquired title by due process of law and just compensation paid to said entrymen or claimants, and caused proper evidence of such fact to be filed with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the right of such entrymen or claimants to sell and of said grantee to purchase such portion or portions of such claims are hereby granted: Provided, however, That this act shall not apply to any lands embraced in rights of way heretofore approved under any act of Congress for the benefit of any parties other than said grantee or its predecessors in interest.

"Sec. 4. That the said grantee shall conform to all regulations adopted and prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior governing the Yosemite National Park and by the Secretary of Agriculture governing the Stanislaus National Forest, and shall not take, cut, or destroy any timber within the Yosemite National Park or the Stanislaus National Forest, except such as may be actually necessary in order to construct, repair, and operate its said reservoirs, dams, power plants, water power and electric works, and other structures above mentioned, or is actually necessary in the construction, repair, and operation thereof, but no timber shall be cut or removed from lands outside of the right of way until designated by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, respectively; and it shall pay to the United States the full value of all timber and wood cut, injured, or destroyed on or adjacent to any of the rights of way and lands, as required by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That no timber shall be cut by the grantee in the Yosemite National Park except from land to be submerged or which constitutes an actual obstruction to the right or rights of way or to any road or trail provided in this act: Provided further, That for and in consideration of the rights and privileges hereby granted to it the said grantee shall construct and maintain in good repair such bridges or other practicable crossings over its rights of way within the Stanislaus National Forest as may be prescribed in writing by the Secretary of Agriculture, and elsewhere on public lands along the line of said works, and within the Yosemite National Park, and such as may be prescribed in writing by the Secretary of the Interior; and said grantee shall, as said water-works are completed, if directed in writing by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, construct and maintain along each side of said right of way a lawful fence of such character as may be prescribed by the proper Secretary, with such suitable lanes or crossings as the aforesaid officers shall prescribe: And provided further, That the said grantee shall clear its rights of way within the Yosemite National Park and the Stanislaus National Forest and over any public land of any debris or inflammable material as directed by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, respectively; and said grantee shall permit any road or trail which it may construct over the public lands, the Yosemite National Park, or the Stanislaus National Forest to be freely used by the officers of the Government and by the public, and shall permit officers of the Government, for official business only, the free use of any telephone or telegraph lines, or equipment, or railroads that it may construct and maintain within the Yosemite National Park and the Stanislaus National Forest, or on the public lands, together with the right to connect with any such telephone or telegraph lines private telephone wires for the exclusive use of said Government officers: And provided further, That all reservoirs, dams, conduits, power plants, water power and electric works, bridges, fences, and other structures not of a temporary character shall be slightly and of suitable exterior design and finish so as to harmonize with the surrounding landscape and its use as a park; and for this purpose all plans and designs shall be submitted for approval to the Secretary of the Interior.

"Sec. 5. That all lands over which the rights of way mentioned in this act shall pass shall be disposed of only subject to such easements: Provided, however, That the construction of the aforesaid works shall be diligently prosecuted without cessation of such construction for a period of three consecutive years, and in the event that the Secretary of the Interior shall find and determine that there has not been diligent prosecution of the work or of some integral and essential part thereof, or that there has been a cessation of such construction for a period of three consecutive years, then he may declare forfeited all rights of the grantee herein as to that part of the works not constructed, and request the Attorney General, on behalf of the United States, to commence suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California for the purpose of procuring a judgment declaring all such rights forfeited to the United States, and upon such request it shall be the duty of the said Attorney General to commence and prosecute to a final judgment such suit: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall make no such finding and take no such action if he shall find that the construction or progress of the works has been delayed or prevented by the act of God or the public enemy, or by engineering or other difficulties that could not have been reasonably foreseen and overcome, or by other special or peculiar difficulties beyond the control of the said grantee: Provided further, That, in the exercise of the rights granted by this act, the grantee shall at all times comply with the regulations herein authorized, and in the event of any material departure therefrom the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, respectively, may take such action as may be necessary in the courts or otherwise to enforce such regulations.

"Sec. 6. That the grantee is prohibited from ever selling or letting to any corporation or individual, except a municipality or a municipal water district or irrigation district, the right for such corporation or individual to sell or sublet the water or the electric energy sold or given to it or him by the said grantee: Provided, That the rights hereby granted shall not be subject to sale, assignment, or transfer to any private person, corporation, or association.

"Sec. 7. That for and in consideration of the grant by the United States as provided for in this act the said grantee shall assign, free of cost to the United States, all roads and trails built under the provisions hereof; and further, after the expiration of five years from the passage of this act the grantee shall pay to the United States the sum of $15,000 annually for a period of 10 years, beginning with the expiration of the 5-year period before mentioned, and for the next 10 years following $20,000 annually, and for the remainder of the term of the grant shall, unless otherwise provided by Congress, pay the sum of $30,000 annually, said sums to be paid on the 1st day of July of each year. Said sums shall be kept in a separate fund by the United States, to be applied to the building and maintenance of roads and trails and other improvements in the Yosemite National Park and other national parks in the State of California. The Secretary of the Interior shall designate the uses to be made of sums paid under the provisions of this section under the condition specified herein.

"Sec. 8. That the word 'grantee' as used herein shall be understood as meaning the city and county of San Francisco and such other municipalities or water district or water districts as may, with the consent of the city and county of San Francisco or in accordance with the laws of the State of California, hereafter participate in or succeed to the beneficial rights and privileges granted by this act.

"Sec. 9. That this grant is made to the said grantee subject to the observance on the part of the grantee of all the conditions hereinbefore and hereinafter enumerated:

"(a) That upon the completion of the Hetch Hetchy Dam or the Lake Eleanor Dam, in the Yosemite National Park, by the grantee, as herein specified, and upon the commencement of the use of any reservoirs thereby created by said grantee as a source of water supply for said grantee, the following sanitary regulations shall be made effective within the watershed above and around said reservoir sites so used by said grantee:

"First. No human excrement, garbage, or other refuse shall be placed in the waters of any reservoir or stream or within 300 feet thereof.

"Second. All sewage from permanent camps and hotels within the watershed shall be filtered by natural percolation through porous earth or otherwise adequately purified.

"Third. No person shall bathe, wash clothes or cooking utensils, water stock, or in any way pollute the water within the limits of the Hetch Hetchy Reservoir or any reservoir constructed by the said grantee under the provisions of this grant, or in the streams leading thereto, within 1 mile of said reservoir; or, with reference to the Hetch Hetchy Reservoir, in the waters from the reservoir or waters entering the river between it and the 'Early Intake' of the aqueduct, pending the completion of the aqueduct between 'Early Intake' and the Hetch Hetchy Dam site.

"Fourth. The cost of the inspection necessary to secure compliance with the sanitary regulations made a part of these conditions, which inspection shall be under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be defrayed by the said grantee.

"Fifth. If at any time the sanitary regulations provided for herein shall be deemed by said grantee insufficient to protect the purity of the water supply, then the said grantee shall install a filtration plant or provide other means to guard the purity of the water. No other sanitary rules or restrictions shall be demanded by or granted to the said grantee as to the use of the watershed by campers, tourists, or the occupants of hotels and cottages.

"(b) That the said grantee shall recognize the prior rights of the Modesto Irrigation District and the Turlock Irrigation District, as now constituted under the laws of the State of California, or as said districts may be hereafter enlarged to contain in the aggregate not to exceed 300,000 acres of land to receive 2,350 second-feet of the natural daily flow of the Tuolumne River, measured at the La Grange Dam, whenever the same can be beneficially used by said irrigation districts, and that the grantee shall never interfere with said rights.

"(c) That whenever said irrigation districts receive at the La Grange Dam less than 2,350 second-feet of water, and when it is necessary for their beneficial use to receive more water, the said grantee shall release free of charge, out of the natural daily flow of the streams which it has intercepted, so much water as may be necessary for the beneficial use of said irrigation districts not exceeding an amount which, with the waters of the Tuolumne and its tributaries, will cause a flow at La Grange Dam of 2,350 second feet; and shall also recognize the rights of the said irrigation districts to the extent of 4,000 second-feet of water out of the natural daily flow of the Tuolumne River for combined direct use and collection into storage reservoirs as may be provided by said irrigation districts during the period of 60 days immediately following and including April 15 of each year, and shall during such period release free of charge such quantity of water as may be necessary to secure to the said irrigation districts such 4,000 second-feet flow or portion thereof as the said irrigation districts are capable of beneficially directly using and storing below Jawbone Creek: Provided, however, That at such times as the aggregate daily natural flow of the watershed of the Tuolumne and its tributaries measured at the La Grange Dam shall be less than said districts can beneficially use and less than 2,350 second-feet, then and in that event the said grantee shall release free of charge the entire natural daily flow of the streams which it has under this grant intercepted.

"(d) That the said grantee whenever the said irrigation districts desire water in excess of that to which they are entitled under the foregoing, shall on the written demand of the said irrigation districts sell to the said irrigation districts from the reservoir or reservoirs of the said grantee such amounts of stored water as may be needed for the beneficial use of the said irrigation districts at such a price as will return to the grantee the actual total costs of providing such stored water, such costs to be computed in accordance with the currently accepted practice of public cost accounting as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, including, however, a fair proportion of the cost to said grantee of the conduit, lands, dams, and water-supply system included in the Hetch Hetchy and Lake Eleanor sites; upon the express condition, however, that the said grantee may require the said irrigation districts to purchase and pay for a minimum quantity of such stored water, and that the said grantee shall be entitled to receive compensation for a minimum quantity of stored water and shall not be required to sell and deliver to the said irrigation districts more than a maximum quantity of such stored water to be released during any calendar year: Provided, however, That if the said irrigation districts shall develop sufficient water to meet their own needs for beneficial use and shall so notify in writing the Secretary of the Interior, the said grantee shall not be required to sell or deliver to said irrigation districts the maximum or minimum amount of stored waters hereinbefore provided for, and shall release the said districts from the obligation to pay for such stored water: And provided further, That said grantee shall without cost to said irrigation districts return to the Tuolumne River above the La Grange Dam for the use of the said irrigation districts all surplus or waste water resulting from the development of hydroelectric energy generated by the said grantee.

"(e) That such minimum and maximum amounts of such stored water to be so released during any calendar year as hereinbefore provided and the price to be paid therefor by the said irrigation districts are to be determined and fixed by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the provisions of the preceding paragraph.

"(f) That the Secretary of the Interior shall revise the maximum and minimum amounts of stored water to be supplied to said irrigation districts by said grantee as hereinbefore provided, whenever the said irrigation districts have properly developed the facilities of the Davis Reservoir of the Turlock Irrigation District and the Warner-Dallas

Reservoir of the Modesto Irrigation District to the fullest practicable extent up to a development not exceeding in cost $15 per acre-foot storage capacity, and whenever additional storage has been provided by the said irrigation districts which is necessary to the economical utilization of the waters of said watershed, and also after water losses and wastes have been reduced to such reasonable minimum as will assure the economical and beneficial use of such water.

"(g) That the said grantee shall not be required to furnish more than the said minimum quantity of stored water hereinbefore provided for until the said irrigation districts shall have first drawn upon their own stored water to the fullest practicable extent.

"(h) That the said grantee shall not divert beyond the limits of the San Joaquin Valley any more of the waters from the Tuolumne watershed than, together with the waters which it now has or may hereafter acquire, shall be necessary for its beneficial use for domestic and other municipal purposes.

"(i) That the said grantee shall, at its own expense, locate and construct, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, such weirs or other suitable structures on sites to be granted, if necessary, by the United States, for accurately measuring the flow in the said river at or above La Grange Dam, and measuring the flow into and out from the reservoirs or intakes of said districts, and into and out from any reservoirs constructed by the said grantee, and at any other point on the Tuolumne River or its tributaries, which he may designate, and fit the same with water-measuring apparatus satisfactory to said Secretary and keep such hydrographic records as he may direct, such apparatus and records to be open to inspection by any interested party at any time.

"(j) That by 'the flow,' 'natural daily flow,' 'aggregate daily natural flow,' and 'what is naturally flowing,' as are used herein, is meant such flow as on any given day would flow in the Tuolumne River or its tributaries if said grantee had no storage or diversion works on the said Tuolumne watershed.

"(k) That when the said grantee begins the development of the Hetch Hetchy Reservoir site it shall undertake and vigorously prosecute to completion a dam at least 200 feet high, with a foundation capable of supporting said dam when built to its greatest economic and safe height.

"(l) That the said grantee shall, upon request, sell or supply to said irrigation districts, and also to the municipalities within either or both said irrigation districts, for the use of any land owner or owners therein for pumping subsurface water for drainage or irrigation, or for the actual municipal public purposes of said municipalities (which purposes shall not include sale to private persons or corporations) any excess of electrical energy which may be generated, and which may be so beneficially used by said irrigation districts or municipalities, when any such excess of electric energy may not be required for pumping the water supply for said grantee and for the actual municipal public purposes of the said grantee (which purposes shall not include sale to private persons or corporations) at such price as will actually reimburse the said grantee for developing and maintaining and transmitting the surplus electrical energy thus sold; and no power plant shall be interposed on the line of the conduit except by the said grantee, or the lessee, as hereinafter provided, and for the purposes and within the limitations in the conditions set forth herein: Provided, That said grantee shall satisfy the needs of the landowners in said irrigation districts for pumping subsurface water for drainage or irrigation, and the needs of the municipalities within such irrigation districts for actual municipal public purposes, after which it may dispose of any excess electrical energy for commercial purposes.

"(m) That the right of said grantee in the Tuolumne water supply to develop electric power for either municipal or commercial use is to be made conditional for 20 years following the completion of any portion of the works adapted to the generation of electrical energy, as follows: The said grantee shall within 3 years from the date of completion of said portion of the works install, operate, and maintain apparatus capable of developing and transmitting not less than 10,000 horsepower of electric power for municipal and commercial use, said 10,000 horsepower to be actually used or offered for use; and within 10 years from the completion of said portion of the works not less than 20,000 horsepower; and within 15 years therefrom not less than 30,000 horsepower; and within 20 years therefrom not less than 60,000 horsepower, unless in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior the public interest will be satisfied with a lesser development. The said grantee shall develop and use hydroelectric power for the use of its people and shall, at prices to be fixed under the laws of California or, in the absence of such laws, at prices approved by the Secretary of the Interior, sell or supply such power for irrigation, pumping, or other beneficial use, said prices not to be less than will return to said grantee the actual total costs of providing and supplying said power, which costs shall be computed in accordance with the currently accepted practice of public cost accounting, as shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior, including, however, a fair proportion of cost of conduit, lands, dams, and water-supply system; and, further, said grantee shall, before using any of said water for the purpose of developing hydroelectric power, file such maps, surveys, field notes, or other data as may be required by law, and shall conform to any law existing and applicable to said subject of development as said hydroelectric power for municipal or commercial uses.

"(n) That after the period of 20 years hereinbefore provided for the development, transmission, use, and sale of electric power, the Secretary of the Interior, under authorization hereby given, may require the grantee, within a time fixed by the Secretary, to develop, transmit, and use, or offer for sale, such additional power, and also such power less than 60,000 horsepower as the grantee may have failed to develop, transmit, use, or sell, within the 20 years aforesaid, as in the judgment of said Secretary the grantee may or ought to develop under this grant, and which in his judgment the public interest demands or convenience requires; and in case of the failure of the grantee to carry out any such requirements of the Secretary of the Interior the latter is hereby authorized so to do, and he may, in such manner and form and upon such terms and conditions as he may determine, provide for the development, transmission, use, and sale of such additional power and such power not so developed, transmitted, or used by the grantee at the end of said 20 years up to 60,000 horsepower; and for that purpose the Secretary of the Interior may take possession of and lease to such person or persons as he may designate such portion of the rights of way, structures, dams, conduits, and other property acquired or constructed by the grantee hereunder as may be necessary for the development, transmission, use, and sale of such power.

"(o) That the rates or charges to be made by the grantee or by any lessee under the last preceding paragraph for the use of power for commercial purposes shall at all times conform to the laws of the State of California or, in the absence of any such law, be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and in the absence of such law no rates or charges shall be made, fixed, or collected without such approval, and the grantee shall at any time, upon the demand of the Secretary of the Interior, allow the latter or such person or persons as he may designate full and free access, right, and opportunity to examine and inspect all of the grantee's books, records, and accounts, and all the works constructed and property occupied hereunder by the grantee.

"(p) That this grant is upon the further condition that the grantee shall construct on the north side of the Hetch Hetchy Reservoir site a scenic road or trail, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, above and along the proposed lake to such point as may be designated by the said Secretary, and also leading from said scenic road or trail to the Tiltill Valley and to Lake Vernon, and a road or trail to Lake Eleanor and Cherry Valley via McGill Meadow; and likewise the said grantee shall build a wagon road from Hamilton or Smiths Station along the most feasible route adjacent to its proposed aqueduct from Groveland to Portulaca or Hog Ranch and into the Hetch Hetchy Dam site, and a road along the southerly slope of Smiths Peak from Hog Ranch past Harden Lake to a junction with the old Tioga Road, in sec. 4, T. 1 S., R. 21 E., Mount Diablo base and meridian, and such roads and trails made necessary by this grant, and as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. Said grantee shall have the right to build and maintain such other necessary roads or trails through the public lands, for the construction and operation of its works, subject, however, to the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, in the Stanislaus National Forest, and the Secretary of the Interior in the Yosemite National Park. The said grantee shall further lay and maintain a water pipe, or otherwise provide a good and sufficient supply of water for camp purposes at the Meadow, one-third of a mile, more or less, southeasterly from the Hetch Hetchy Dam site.

"That all trail and road building and maintenance by the said grantee in the Yosemite National Park and the Stanislaus National Forest shall be done subject to the direction and approval of the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, according to their respective jurisdictions.

"(q) That the said grantee shall furnish water at cost to any authorized occupant within 1 mile of the reservoir, and in addition to the sums provided for in section 7 it shall reimburse the United States Government for the actual cost of maintenance of the above roads and trails in a condition of repair as good as when constructed.

"(r) That in case the Department of the Interior is called upon, by reason of any of the above conditions, to make investigations and decisions respecting the rights, benefits, or obligations specified in this act, which investigations or decisions involve expense to the said Department of the Interior, then such expense shall be borne by said grantee.

"(s) That the grantee shall file with the Secretary of the Interior within six months after the approval of this act its acceptance of the terms and conditions of this grant.

"(t) That the grantee herein shall convey to the United States, by proper conveyance, a good and sufficient title free from all liens and encumbrances of any nature whatever, any and all tracts of land which are now owned by said grantee within the Yosemite National Park or that part of the national forest adjacent thereto not actually required for use under the provisions of this act, said conveyance to be approved by and filed with the Secretary of the Interior within six months after the said grantee ceases to use such lands for the purpose of construction or repair under the provisions of this act.

"(u) That the city and county of San Francisco shall sell to the United States, for the use of the War Department, such water as the War Department may elect to take, and shall deliver the same through its system in or near the city of San Francisco to the mains or systems of such military reservations in that vicinity as may be designated by the Secretary of War, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. In payment for such water and the delivery thereof the United States shall pay to the said city and county of San Francisco a rental, to be calculated at a fixed rate per 1,000 gallons, said rate not to exceed the actual cost of said water to said city and county for all the water so furnished, as determined by meter measurements: And provided further, That payment of said rental shall be made by the local disbursing officer of the War Department in the usual manner.

"Sec. 10. That this grant, so far as it relates to the said irrigation districts, shall be deemed and held to constitute a binding obligation upon said grantee in favor of the said irrigation districts, which said districts, or either of them, may judicially enforce in any court of competent jurisdiction.

"Sec. 11. That this act is a grant upon certain express conditions specifically set forth herein, and nothing herein contained shall be construed as affecting or intending to affect or in any way to interfere with the laws of the State of California relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water used in irrigation or for municipal or other uses, or any vested right acquired thereunder, and the Secretary of the Interior, in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall proceed in conformity with the laws of said State."

Bill H. R. 6281 was substituted for bills H. R. 112 and 4319, Sixty-third Congress, first session. Full and exhaustive hearings were had on bill H. R. 6281, which hearings were printed. Bill H. R. 6914 was introduced in place of H. R. 6281, and after further hearings bill H. R. 7207 was introduced to take the place of all former bills, and after full hearings bill H. R. 7207 received the unanimous approval of the Committee on the Public Lands and is the one set out in full herein.

Bill H. R. 7207 was referred to the Department of the Interior, and following is the report received thereon:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 2, 1913.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman House Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: Your committee has referred to this department for report and recommendations H. R. 7207, being a bill granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way in, over, and through certain public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and Stanislaus National Forest, and certain lands in the Yosemite National Park and Stanislaus National Forest, and the public lands in the State of California, and for other purposes.

In this connection, I call your attention to your letter of June 23, 1913, transmitting to the Secretary of the Interior a copy of proof print of a House bill to be introduced by Representative RAKER, requesting that he furnish the committee with report thereon; and to the Secretary's letter of June 24, 1913, in reply thereto, wherein he discussed the matter at length, suggested certain amendments, and approved, with his reasons therefor, the object of the bill and the grant therein proposed.

The proof print became H. R. 6281, and I call your attention to the Secretary's letters of July 9, 1913, July 10, 1913, and July 11, 1913, reporting on H. R. 6281 and supplementing said letter of June 24.

I find that the various suggestions for amendment proposed in the said letters have been substantially incorporated in the present bill with the exception of section 7 thereof, which now provides for annual payment by the grantee. This amendment of section 7 has met with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and I am advised that he has wired you to that effect.

The department, therefore, has no objection to make to H. R. 7207, and heartily recommends that it can be enacted into law.

Very truly, yours,

A. W. JONES, Acting Secretary.

Bill H. R. 7207 was also referred to Hon. David F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture, who made report thereon, which report is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., August 2, 1913.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives,

DEAR MR. FERRIS: I have before me a copy of the bill, H. R. 7207, approved unanimously by the Committee on the Public Lands, granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way through the public lands, national forests, and Yosemite National Park. I have your request that this department make a report thereon and such suggestions as it may see fit to offer.

This bill, H. R. 7207, now before me does not differ in any essential particular, so far as the matters pertaining to the Department of Agriculture are affected, from the bill which was considered by your committee at the time I testified before it and on which I submitted to you a formal report with the approval of this department. So far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned in this bill I can see no objection to its passage.

Sincerely, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON,
Secretary.

For the purpose of presenting bill H. R. 7207, with its provisions fully before the House, analysis is made thereof, as follows:

ANALYSIS OF H. R. 7207.

A bill granting to the city of San Francisco rights of way for water-supply system and incidental hydroelectric power plant in the Yosemite National Park, the Stanislaus National Forest, and public lands in the State of California.

The theory on which this bill is drawn is that the United States, having sole jurisdiction over the national park, has the right to refuse the grant and also has the right in making the grant to impose certain conditions upon the grantee.

The bill is not drafted nor designed nor intended to usurp the powers of the State of California in the matter of control of the distribution of water. The conditions imposed, which are acquiesced in by the grantee, relate only to the protection of certain rights of the Turlock-Modesto Irrigation District, by recognizing, without affecting one way or the other, prior rights of the said districts to certain waters in the Tuolumne River, the source of this river being the Hetch Hetchy Valley.

Section 1 provides a grant of all necessary rights of way not exceeding 250 feet, as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture are required for the construction and operation of a water-supply system for the city of San Francisco and other cities which may hereafter join in the Metropolitan Water District about San Francisco Bay. The grantee is required to file maps showing proposed location of rights of way, power houses, pole lines, roads, trails, bridges, etc., and procure the approval of the Secretary of the Interior as to these locations. Within the jurisdiction of the Stanislaus National Forest the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture must be procured. This section is analogous to and practically identical with the grant made to the city of Los Angeles for a water-supply system from the Owens River.

Section 2: This section requires the grantee to file with the registers of the United States land offices within three years all maps showing boundaries or locations, and prohibits permanent construction work until maps shall have been filed and approved. Proviso 1 permits changes in location by approval when engineering problems are met and such changes are advisable. Proviso 2 provides that the rights of the grantee already procured shall be given due consideration and relate back to the filing of maps as provided in this section. Proviso 3 is to the effect that copies of maps already filed and approved under previous permits may be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Section 3 provides that the rights of way granted shall not be effective over homestead, mining, or other valid claims which in law constitute prior rights unless the grantee shall procure relinquishment by due process and just compensation; and further, the section provides that any such entryman or claimant shall have the right to sell and the grantee shall have the right to purchase rights of way over homestead or other claims. A proviso prescribes that the act shall not apply to lands embraced in rights of way heretofore approved for the benefit of any party other than the said grantee or its predecessors in interest.

(The language of section 3 and preceding sections is designed to protect the vested rights heretofore procured by the grantee or others.)

Section 4 provides that the grantee shall conform to all regulations prescribed to govern the Yosemite National Park and the Stanislaus National Forest, and further provides that no timber shall be cut in the national park or in the forest reserve except such timber as may be actually necessary to construct, repair, and operate its water and electric power system. All timber cut shall be designated by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture where such timber is outside the right of way. Proviso 1 prohibits the cutting of any timber in the Yosemite National Park, except from land to be submerged or which constitutes an actual obstruction to the rights of way or to any road or trail provided in the act, and to preserve artistic harmony the grantee is compelled to submit designs and structures to the Secretary of the Interior for approval. It is intended that all permanent dams, buildings, etc., shall conform to the landscape surroundings.

(The grantee acquiesces in this proviso, which is designed to prevent the cutting of a stick of timber in the Yosemite National Park, and thus prevent any possible destruction of trees within the reservation, and also to make the park as artistic as possible.)

Proviso 2 of section 4 requires the grantee to construct and maintain bridges and crossings over its rights of way of such character and construction as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, and, further, the grantee shall, upon order of the United States officials, construct and maintain fences along the rights of way. It is still further provided that the grantee shall clear its rights of way of debris and inflammable material, thus preventing forest fires, and also shall permit the free use by Government officials of all trails, telephone and telegraph lines, railroad and other utilities which may be constructed as adjuncts to the water-supply system. (The requirements of this section cause the grantee to expend a considerable sum in the improvement of the park and the forest reserve and make access to these public places easy and comfortable. The expenditure of this money for this purpose is a consideration, in part, for the grant.)

Section 5 provides that the grant by the Federal Government is an easement and that the lands shall be disposed of only subject to such easement. Proviso 1 compels the grantees to diligently prosecute its construction work without cessation, and in the event that such construction work ceases for a period of three years and the Secretary of the Interior determines the grantee has not been duly diligent, all rights under the grant may be declared forfeited by suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. The Attorney General is required to prosecute such suit to final judgment when requested to do so by the Secretary of the Interior. Proviso 2 provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall not attempt to make a forfeiture if the work of the grantee has been delayed or prevented by the act of God or the public enemy, or by engineering or other special or peculiar difficulties which could not have been reasonably foreseen and overcome and were beyond the control of the grantee. Proviso 3 compels the grantee to at all times comply with the regulations authorized by the act, and in the event of material departure from said regulations the United States officials may take such action as may be necessary, in the courts or otherwise, to enforce such regulations.

Section 6 provides that the grantee is prohibited from selling or letting to any corporation or individual, except a municipality, a water district, or an irrigation district, the right to sell or sublet the water or electric energy sold or given to it by the grantee; it is provided also that the rights under the grant shall not be subject to sale, assignment, or transfer to any private person, corporation, or association.

(This provision, acquiesced in by the grantee, was designed to prevent any monopoly or private corporation from hereafter obtaining control of the water supply of San Francisco.)

Section 7 provides that for and in consideration of the grant the grantee shall make certain payments, the proceeds of which are to be used exclusively for the construction of roads and other improvements in the Yosemite National Park and other national parks in the State of California. The theory of this section is that San Francisco is receiving certain privileges and benefits from the national park, and that the consideration is for the use of public lands now owned by the United States. The payments proposed will, it is estimated, amount to more money annually than is at present charged to private corporations under similar Federal conditions. It is proposed that the grantee shall pay, beginning five years after the passage of the bill, the sum of $15,000 annually for a period of 10 years; $20,000 for a period of 10 years thereafter; and, unless otherwise provided by Congress, $30,000 annually for the remainder of the term of the grant. The moneys so paid are to be kept in a separate fund by the United States and applied to park improvements as designated by the Secretary of the Interior. Congress retains the power to revise the schedule.

(The amounts specified in this section are approved by the Secretary of the Interior and his subordinates. The method of providing for improvement of the park is also approved.)

Section 8 defines the grantee as the city of San Francisco and such other municipalities or water districts which may, with the consent of the city or in accordance with the laws of the State of California, hereafter participate in or succeed to the beneficial rights and privileges of the act.

(The cities about the Bay of San Francisco have always approved the granting of the Hetch Hetchy reservoir site to San Francisco, with the understanding that these cities may in the future join with the city of San Francisco in a metropolitan water district. The State law of California provides for the creation of a metropolitan water district, and because of this law the bay cities have not requested at this time to be made coganantees. They know they will have the privilege to share in the benefits after San Francisco has made the necessary investment and brought the needed water to the bay cities for domestic use.)

Section 9 requires the grantee to observe sanitary regulations within the Hetch Hetchy watershed and around reservoir sites. These regulations provide that no human excrement, garbage, or other refuse shall be placed in the waters of any reservoir or stream, or within 300 feet thereof; and, further, that all sewage from permanent camps or hotels within the watershed shall be filtered by natural percolation through porous earth or otherwise adequately purified; and, further, no person shall bathe, wash clothes or cooking utensils, water stock, or in any way pollute the water of the reservoirs constructed under this grant or the streams leading thereto within 1 mile of said reservoir. The cost of inspection necessary to enforce sanitary regulations is to be paid by the grantee, and such inspection shall be under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. Should these regulations prove insufficient to the grantee, then the grantee shall install a filtration plant, and no other sanitary rules or restrictions shall be granted.

(These sanitary regulations were prepared by experts of the United States Government, and Mr. Allen Hazen and Prof. Whipple and are approved by the Board of Army Engineers, the Secretary of the Interior, the Director of the Geological Survey, and others. It is intended that the use of the watershed shall be free to campers and visitors, and that no onerous or prohibitive sanitary regulations shall ever be imposed. The sanitary experts assert that the storage of water in the Hetch Hetchy Reservoir will insure adequate purity, and the Government officials assert that the regulations herein are only those required by common decency and for the protection of campers themselves—and, further, these regulations are practically identical with the rules now in force in the Yosemite National Park.)

Paragraph (b), section 9, provides that the grantee shall recognize the prior rights of the Modesto and Turlock Irrigation Districts to 2,350 second-feet of water. This provision permits of the enlargement of the districts as now constituted by an additional area of 43,000 acres, but does not affect the distribution of water.

(The irrigation districts having prior rights desire that those rights be recognized on the theory that the Government, having the right to refuse the grant to San Francisco, has, therefore, the right to place lawful conditions therein. The recognition of these priorities does not impinge upon California State law or modify existing rights.)

Paragraph (c), section 9, is a condition that the grantee shall be required to release the necessary amount of stored water to assure the flow of 2,350 second-feet included in the priorities of the irrigation districts; and, further, condition (c) recognizes the rights of the said irrigation districts to take 4,000 second-feet of water out of the natural flow of the Tuolumne River during a period of 60 days following and including April 15, of each year.

(Condition (c) is a limitation upon the grant, according to the theory of the bill, and is protective of rights already acquired and which can not be disturbed so far as they relate to the irrigation districts. The provision relating to the 4,000 second-feet of water is to provide for the beneficial use by the irrigationists of water which otherwise goes to waste. In the period mentioned, April 15 to June 15, the Tuolumne River is a torrential flood. Fifty miles of watershed intervene between the Hetch Hetchy Dam and the dam of the irrigationists at La Grange. It is proposed that the irrigationists may take up waste waters, store them, and thus lessen the possible draft upon the stored waters of the city. It should be borne in mind that San Francisco does not contemplate interfering with the natural flow of the Tuolumne. The intent is to store flood waters which come from melting snows and leave the normal flow of the river uninterrupted. The benefit to the irrigation districts in this provision is that the landowners will receive the benefit of an investment of approximately $50,000,000 without being compelled to put up any part of the cost, and the construction of the system will insure the priorities of the irrigationists and they will receive water in the dry period when it is most needed. Without the construction of the Hetch Hetchy Dam there can be no flow in the river during the summer and fall.)

Paragraph (d), section 9, provides that the grantee shall sell unused stored water needed for beneficial use on irrigable lands at cost, to be computed by the Secretary of the Interior. The minimum and maximum of such stored waters to be so delivered to the irrigation districts is to be regulated each calendar year, and if the irrigation districts develop sufficient water in the foothill reservoirs for their own needs then the said grantee shall not be required to sell or deliver any stored waters. It is also provided that water used for the generation of electric power be released in the Tuolumne River free.

(The theory of condition (d) is that after the domestic needs of the city are satisfied and a surplus remains then the irrigation districts shall have the right to purchase so much of this surplus as may be beneficially used. In the event of any dispute the Secretary of the Interior may be called in to adjust the differences.)

Paragraph (e), section 9, provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall fix the minimum and maximum of stored waters to be released, and he shall also fix the price to be paid therefor, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (b).

Paragraph (f), section 9, provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall revise the maximum and minimum amounts of stored water to be released whenever the irrigation districts shall have properly developed certain reservoir and storage dams in the foothills. In the purview of this condition the irrigationists may not be required to expend more than $15 per acre-foot storage capacity for the development of local storage, and it is further provided that the grantee may require the stoppage of excessive water losses and waste because of defective ditches.

(This and preceding conditions are acquiesced in by the grantee and by the irrigation districts. The provision is the result of an amicable settlement between the two parties.)

Paragraph (g), section 9, provides that the grantee shall not be required to supply stored water to the irrigation districts until the latter shall have first drawn upon their own stored water to the fullest practicable extent.

(This is also agreeable to all parties.)

Paragraph (h), section 9, provides that the grantee shall not divert beyond the limits of the San Joaquin Valley any waters of the Tuolumne watershed in excess of the amount to be used for domestic and municipal purposes.

(The purpose of this provision is to make possible the use of surplus waters in the San Joaquin Valley and prevent the use of possible surplus for irrigation of lands remote from the Tuolumne River. John R. Freeman, consulting engineer for San Francisco, suggested that surplus water might be economically used for intensive farming in lands contiguous to San Francisco Bay. Inasmuch as San Francisco expects to purchase the local water supply, and thus acquire sufficient water for local irrigation purposes, it was deemed advisable and economical to provide that surplus from the Tuolumne should be used in the San Joaquin Valley. This is an economic use of water for the highest purpose of all concerned.)

Paragraph (i), section 9, provides that the grantee shall at its own expense provide water-measuring apparatus and keep hydrographic records, which apparatus and records shall be open to inspection by any interested party at any time.

Paragraph (j), section 9, is the engineers' definition of the flow of the Tuolumne River.

Paragraph (k), section 9, requires San Francisco to build a dam at least 200 feet high.

(This means that the city will expend from $500,000 to $1,000,000 in excess of initial expenditures necessary for its immediate needs. The intent is to build the dam high enough to provide adequate storage to meet the conditions of the grant, and is primarily a benefit for the irrigationists.)

Paragraph (l), section 9, provides that the grantee shall sell excess of electrical energy to the irrigation districts and municipalities within the irrigation districts for the beneficial use of landowners, whenever such excess is not required for the actual municipal purposes of the grantee. It is also provided that no power plant shall be interposed on the conduit of the grantee, except by the grantee itself. The proviso of the paragraph is that the grantee shall first satisfy the needs of landowners for pumping water for drainage or irrigation and the needs of the municipalities within the irrigation districts for municipal purposes before excess of electrical power may be sold for commercial purposes.

(This is a direct benefit to the irrigationists, and places no burden or hardship upon the grantee.)

Paragraph (m), section 9, provides for the development of electric power. The grantee is required to develop 10,000 horsepower within three years after the completion of that portion of the system which is usable for power development. Within 10 years thereafter the grantee shall develop 20,000 horsepower; and within 15 years 30,000 horsepower; and within 20 years 60,000 horsepower, unless in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior the public interests will be satisfied with a lesser development.

The prices of electricity are to be fixed under the laws of California, or if there be no such laws, at prices approved by the Secretary of the Interior, such prices to return to the grantee actual cost of construction.

Paragraph (n), section 9, provides that if the grantee fails to develop horsepower as directed herein, then the Secretary of the Interior may lease to such person or persons as he may designate those portions of the rights of way, structures, dams, etc., as may be necessary for development, use, and sale of power which the grantee has failed or neglected to develop.

(This is a forfeiture penalty to prevent cold storage of power possibilities.)

Paragraph (o), section 9, provides that rates to be charged for power for commercial purposes (in the event that lease is made to another party under paragraph (n)) shall conform to the laws of the State of California, or in the absence of any such law shall be subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior; and it is also provided that all records, books, etc., shall be open to inspection by the Secretary of the Interior.

Paragraph (p), section 9, provides for the building of roads and trails in the Yosemite National Park as designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

(The routing of these roads and trails was made by Mr. Marshall, of the Geological Survey, who surveyed the Hetch Hetchy Valley and is familiar with all the scenic and topographical conditions there. These roads will cost the city of San Francisco $500,000 to $1,000,000, and are to be turned over, free of charge, to the United States. This is one of the important considerations, and carries compensation to the Government for the rights of way granted. The construction of these roads will make the Hetch Hetchy Valley accessible and will provide a convenient and easy way for mountaineers to reach the higher parts of the Sierra. The paragraph also contains a requirement that the grantee shall provide a water supply for camp purposes at the Meadow camping place, a third of a mile from Hetch Hetchy. It is also provided that all trail and road building shall be done subject to the approval and direction of the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, according to their respective jurisdictions.)

Paragraph (q), section 9, provides that the grantee shall furnish water at cost to any authorized occupant within 1 mile of the reservoir, and shall repair and maintain roads and trails constructed under the provisions of the grant.

Paragraph (r) provides that the grantee shall pay all the cost of inspection and investigations which may be required of the Department of the Interior where such investigations and inspection involve expense to the department.

Paragraph (s) provides that the grantee shall file an acceptance of the conditions of this act within six months after its passage.

Paragraph (t) requires the grantee to convey to the United States any and all tracts of land now owned by the city within Yosemite National Park or the national forest, which lands are not actually required for use under the provisions of this act.

(The city of San Francisco purchased private lands for the purpose of exchanging the same with the Government in lieu of that portion of the floor of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which is not owned by the city. The purpose of this plan is to provide suitable and desirable camping places for visitors who may wish to visit the Sierra and who would otherwise have camped in the Hetch Hetchy, and at the same time compensate the United States for lands to be submerged.)

Paragraph (u) provides that the grantee shall sell the water at cost to the military reservations at San Francisco. This was requested by the Secretary of War and is acquiesced in by the city.

Section 10 provides that the conditions of this grant shall be a binding obligation upon the grantee so far as the conditions relate to the irrigation districts.

Section 11 provides that this act shall not be construed as affecting or intending to affect or in any way to interfere with the laws of the State of California relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water or any vested right acquired thereunder, and the Secretary of the Interior is directed to proceed in conformity with the laws of the State of California in carrying out the provisions of this act.

CITY OWNS WATER RIGHTS.

The city and county of San Francisco, under the laws of the State of California, has taken and performed all necessary acts to acquire, appropriate, and use the waters of the Tuolumne River, which has been done in strict compliance with the laws regulating the appropriation and use of waters in the State of California, and now has and holds a valid water right by virtue of its acts performed under the laws of said State.

The committee heard all parties who desired to be heard upon the bill, and granted full and free opportunity for such hearing, and at such hearings all parties were heard, and the committee were unanimously of the opinion that the legislation provided for in bill H. R. 7207 is of an urgent character, and should be acted upon at this session of Congress; and by unanimous vote of said committee said bill is approved and action by Congress urged to be taken during the present session.

A statement of the facts and of the testimony presented before the committee follows, the better to enable the Members of the House to fully understand the true conditions surrounding the proposed grant by the Government to San Francisco under bill H. R. 7207.

CITY'S URGENT NEED.

San Francisco urgently needs an additional supply of water. The city is confronted by an emergency—practically one-third of the municipality is without adequate water supply.

The condition is so grave that the water company now supplying the city has advertised in all the papers warning the people not to wash down their steps, sprinkle their lawns, or otherwise waste water. The reason for this is that there have been two years of light rainfall, and the storage reservoirs have not been refilled.

San Francisco is situated on a narrow, arid peninsula, where there are no summer rains, and it is necessary to store a water supply during the rainy season.

The city has a population of 500,000 and its water supply is approximately 40,000,000 gallons a day.

Denver, with half that population, has a supply of 200,000,000 gallons a day.

SITUATION DEPLORABLE.

Half the present water supply of San Francisco is brought from gravel beds beneath agricultural lands in Alameda County. The other half is stored water in peninsular reservoirs. Proof of this emergency is given by William Bourn, president of the Spring Valley Water Co., who testified under oath before the water-rates committee of the board of supervisors on May 19, 1913, as follows:

"The situation to-day in this city—there is nothing as deplorable, there is nothing in my life that I regret as much as the water situation in San Francisco to-day. It is doing this city more harm than the earthquake ever did it."

At that same hearing, referring to the Hetch Hetchy project, Mr. Bourn said:

"If I had it in my power to give you Hetch Hetchy to-morrow, I would give it to you. If you think the Spring Valley Water Co. is going to make any objection to your application to Congress, you are greatly mistaken."

For 12 years San Francisco has been endeavoring to procure a water supply from the Hetch Hetchy Valley.

The city's object was opposed until this year by the Spring Valley Water Co., the irrigationists of the Turlock-Modesto Irrigation district, the promoters of several water schemes which the city did not want, and by a small group of men who based their objections upon love of nature and opposed the creation of a lake where a canyon now exists.

All this opposition, except that of the nature lovers, is withdrawn. The city has arranged for an amicable condemnation proceeding to acquire the property of the Spring Valley Water Co.

The city has agreed to protect the prior rights of the irrigationists, and will spend from $500,000 to $1,000,000 more than is required at this time to increase storage to guarantee water for irrigation.

CITY OWNS HETCH HETCHY VALLEY.

The city owns two-thirds of the floor of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, and also owns a portion of the dam site.

The city has spent $1,750,000 in the purchase of privately owned rights in the Hetch Hetchy Valley and the Yosemite Park, and now asks Congress for permission to build a dam and for rights of way for conduits, pole lines, etc., over the public lands.

In creating this water system the city agrees to supply water at cost to irrigationists, and will also supply electric energy at cost to landowners in the Turlock-Modesto district.

The power potentiality of the stream is estimated at 115,000 horsepower in its ultimate development. It is proposed to develop this energy in 10,000 horsepower units and use the power for public purposes in San Francisco and adjoining cities.

The following data, from the report of the Army engineers and from the testimony of the engineers before the Public Lands Committee, give the acreage and capacity of the proposed reservoirs:

	Elevation, dam site.	Maximum height of dam.	Acres in reservoir site.	Storage capacity.

BAY CITIES UNITE IN PETITION.

The cities around San Francisco Bay join in asking that San Francisco be given the Hetch Hetchy grant. These cities propose—and the State law permits—to organize a metropolitan water district, and the Hetch Hetchy system, together with the local water, will insure an adequate supply for the future.

No injury can possibly be done to any one or to any interest by the construction of this system. On the contrary, it will be a development of resources for the beneficial use of millions of people.

The ultimate cost of the project is estimated at $77,000,000. The initial cost for the first installation necessary to bring 200,000,000 gallons of water to the city in $37,500,000.

BONDS VOTED IN 1910.

In 1910 the city voted overwhelmingly $45,000,000 in bonds for the construction of this water system. There were 30,000 votes cast for and 1,200 against this bond issue.

A water famine is impending, and the city desires to get to work at once on its Hetch Hetchy supply. Pending the construction, emergency development of water has to be made, and this work ought to begin at once. It is impossible for the city to do the emergency work until the larger question—the source of the mountain supply—is settled, as no part of the bond money available can be used unless it is expended for an integral part of the Hetch Hetchy system.

With the Hetch Hetchy grant assured, additional pipes, which ultimately can be used in the Hetch Hetchy scheme, will be laid, and the stored waters now available can be drawn lower and wells sunk for neighborhood supplies.

COSTLY WATER.

To-day San Francisco pays higher rates for water than any city of its size in the world. The rates are 15 to 21 cents per 1,000 gallons.

When these water rates are added to a burdensome tax rate caused by a $500,000,000 loss from earthquake and fire in 1906, no reasonable person should object to the city obtaining an adequate supply at the cheapest cost.

Any alternative supply would cost the city $20,000,000 more, with no credit for power development. This $20,000,000 difference in cost does not represent the full amount of difference, as any other source in the State of California which the city might use is now owned by power companies and other corporations.

TO CONVERT CANYON INTO LAKE.

Hetch Hetchy Valley is a gorge in the Yosemite National Park. It is 30 miles from Yosemite Valley proper. The watershed is composed wholly of granite mountains, on which there is a heavy snowfall every winter. It is proposed to convert the valley into a magnificent lake and store the water from the melting snows which now run off in torrential floods each year, doing good to no one and at times causing great damage.

HISTORY OF SAN FRANCISCO WATER PROBLEM.

In 1900 engineers and thoughtful citizens realized that the existing local supply from the peninsula and across the bay was not sufficient for the progressive growth of the city. In 1901 the city engineer of San Francisco was directed to examine available sources of water supply from the mountains. Mr. C. E. Grunsky, that engineer, afterwards selected as commissioner on the Panama Canal, and still later engineer of the Reclamation Service, made a comprehensive survey of Sierra sources. In his work he spent $50,000 and something over a year in time. He and his assistants examined, first, the Spring Valley waterworks, with 12 separate sources as auxiliaries; second, Lake Tahoe; third, the Yuba River; fourth, the Feather River; fifth, the American River; sixth, the Sacramento River; seventh, the Eel River; eighth, Clear Lake; ninth, the San Joaquin River; tenth, the Stanislaus River; eleventh, the Mokelumne River; twelfth, the Tuolumne River; thirteenth, the bay shore gravels, in and around San Francisco and Alameda County; and, fourteenth, the Bay City Water Co.'s reserve.

As a result of this investigation, the Tuolumne River, its source in the Hetch Hetchy Valley, draining 1,501 square miles of the Sierra Mountains, with an annual rainfall of from 20 to 50 inches and a mean annual run-off of 24 inches, or nearly 2,000,000 acre-feet, was selected.

SCIENCE AND SENSE APPROVE PROJECT.

Every engineering, sanitary, and economic factor favored the Hetch Hetchy as the source. Added to these factors were freedom from complicating water rights and additional power possibilities outside the national reservation.

The distance which the water is to be brought is 142 miles. It is proposed to install 10-foot pressure tunnels, lined with concrete, through the mountains, and 10-foot steel pipes across the valley. This system will bring water to San Francisco under sufficient pressure to boost it to the highest levels without pumping. The plans originally made by city engineers, C. E. Grunsky and Marsden Manson, were revised by Mr. John R. Freeman, probably the most noted hydraulic engineer in the world. Mr. Freeman brought to his assistance a group of noted experts, and now the work is in charge of M. M. O'Shaughnessy, city engineer, who has had extended experience in the construction of water systems in California, the Southwest, and Hawaii. Mr. Freeman remains as consulting engineer.

Immediately following Mr. Grunsky's report selecting the Hetch Hetchy Valley, the then mayor of the city, Hon. James D. Phelan, set about to perfect water rights. At that time, 1901, the Hetch Hetchy Valley was not in a national park. The city could not as a municipality make filings for water under the laws of California at that time. Therefore Mr. Phelan, in his individual capacity, made filings, perfected them, and transferred them to the city of San Francisco. By this procedure San Francisco obtained priorities and has, in spite of all obstacles, kept the city's rights alive.

Subsequently the Hetch Hetchy Valley was included in the national parks at the time the State of California ceded the Yosemite Valley to the United States.

Application was made to Secretary of the Interior Hitchcock for a permit to construct the dam and for rights of way. Mr. Hitchcock refused the permit and directed the city to buy out the Spring Valley Water Co. This was the beginning of trouble. Bitter contention arose over the water rates charged by the company and over a purchase price. No agreement could be reached, and for several years the problem remained unsettled.

GARFIELD GAVE LIMITED PERMIT.

When James R. Garfield became Secretary of the Interior San Francisco renewed her application for a permit. There was bitter opposition. After investigation Secretary Garfield, on May 11, 1908, authorized the city to use Lake Eleanor and Cherry Creek, sources contiguous to the Hetch Hetchy Valley, and part of the Tuolumne watershed. About this time a group of men adverse to the city's interests secured an option on 720 acres of land which the city had to have, and immediately ran up the price. This scheme caused delay. In 1909 the city voted $600,000 bonds for the purpose of acquiring privately owned lands and water rights, and part of the expenditure of this sum was $174,311.20 for the 720 acres of land in the Hetch Hetchy Valley. This land was of value to the city, and a number of private interests were trying to acquire it for the purpose of developing power, and as the Government had made the condition that private ownership be bought out the city had to pay the price asked.

ARMY BOARD INVESTIGATES.

In 1910, at the request of the President of the United States, a board of three Army engineers was appointed to investigate and analyze the data and report on all available sources for a water supply for San Francisco.

This board was composed of Col. John Biddle, Col. Harry Taylor, and Col. Spencer Cosby. The investigation was completed in December, 1912, and the Army board report was filed in February, 1913. (H. Doc. 54, 63d Cong., 1st sess.)

Secretary of the Interior Fisher, with the Army board, the engineers of the Geological Survey, the Directors of the Reclamation Service and the Geological Survey, and other Government experts, conducted a 10-day oral hearing on all the reports submitted in November and December, 1912.

UNITED STATES ENGINEERS APPROVE.

As a result of all this, the Army board reported in favor of San Francisco, stating that the Hetch Hetchy was the most economical and available source of water supply for the bay cities.

Secretary Fisher did not issue the permit. He received the Army board report a few days before his retirement from office, and passed the question on to his successor and to Congress.

Secretary Lane, having been the city attorney of San Francisco and an attorney of record in the Hetch Hetchy proceedings, while he urges the grant, felt that it were better procedure for the city to obtain its authorization from Congress.

These facts and additional data are more clearly set forth in the transcript of proceedings by Hon. Percy V. Long, city attorney of San Francisco. (See Vol. I of hearings, beginning at p. 94; see also engineering history by M. M. O'Shaughnessy, p. 130, Vol. I.) Mr. O'Shaughnessy says in part:

"In California we are often subject to a succession of two and sometimes three dry years. For a municipal supply this involves having a reservoir and storage capacity able to tide over such a dry period. In San Francisco for the past two years there has been a shortage of over 50 per cent of rainfall, and this has resulted in leaving our reservoirs in a very depleted condition, so that the public is very much alarmed as to what the outcome is going to be. Personally, as the city official most directly responsible for improving conditions, it is a subject of very grave alarm, and for the past three or four months I have been making explorations all over the city in our narrow peninsula trying to develop what strata there is that will be capable, in this emergency, of relieving our situation. There is no other city in the United States at the present time of the size of San Francisco confronted with such a situation."

Mr. O'Shaughnessy says further that the Spring Valley Water Co. is supplying about 41,500,000 gallons per day. In addition there are drawn from private wells about 8,000,000 gallons per day, so that the daily consumption is about 50,000,000 gallons. He adds that if the present demands were supplied, the consumption would be 75,000,000 gallons per day.

When it is considered that San Francisco is growing very rapidly, and that whole districts can not be improved, homes built, and sanitary requirements fulfilled because of lack of water, it is apparent that San Francisco must have more water than is available from any near-by source.

ALL WATER NEEDED FOR USE.

Supplementing Mr. O'Shaughnessy's judgment is the following from the report of the Board of Army Engineers:

"In one important respect the situation in California requires special consideration. In California all water has great value; due to the large extent of arid and semiarid land that can be made fertile by the use of water, irrigation is assuming great importance; due to lack of coal and the opportunity for economical water-power development, the use for the latter purpose will surely be greatly extended. In a relatively few years practically all available water will doubtless be appropriated for one or the other purpose, and it will then be possible to obtain it for municipal use only at great cost and damage to existing communities and industries. It is therefore necessary to-day for the cities of California to look further ahead than in most other parts of the country and to take such steps that in the future when they may need the water they shall have the right to take it. For this reason it is believed that in making provision for the future supply of San Francisco and other bay cities, a source should be selected, if possible, that is capable of supplying the needs of the communities for the balance of this century. Such a course would seem both wise and reasonable, provided it involves no sacrifice of economy."

With a full knowledge of this entire subject, Gifford Pinchot, leading conservationist of the country, declares to the Land Committee that San Francisco's proposition is the highest form of conservation he has seen, and he urges the passage of the bill.

CITY READY TO HELP STATE.

Encouraged by the friendly aid of neighboring cities, San Francisco stands ready—money in hand—to make a great investment which will bring incalculable benefit to the State of California. This willingness to pack the burden is not wholly self-interest. The people of the city realize that economic development of the great San Joaquin Valley will help to produce cheaper foodstuffs, attract home builders, and enhance the progress of the State. Imbued with this sentiment and characteristic generosity, the city is willing that an additional million dollars shall be spent for storage of water to be used solely by irrigators.

And, further, proud of the glories of the State the beauties of the Yosemite, the delights of the Sierra, the city proposes to expend another million dollars in making the sublime scenery of the Hetch Hetchy and Yosemite accessible to people of small means and limited leisure. The historical associations and the league for the preservation of California landmarks are more jealous of the preservation of California's natural beauties than can be the residents of remote cities—men who never have seen California and probably would never go to the Hetch Hetchy if they had time and opportunity.

A people who undauntedly met the greatest disaster in all the world's history and who rebuilt a devastated city ought to be given sufficient consideration to enable them to select their own water supply and to ease the tax burden which falls most heavily upon those who work for a living. The Hetch Hetchy question is not "a raid upon the Yosemite"; it is a question solely of providing pure water in ample supply to human beings.

ARMY BOARD FINDINGS.

[Extracts from conclusions of Board of United States Army Engineers. (H. Doc. No. 54, 1st sess. 63d Cong.)]

The project proposed by the city of San Francisco, known as the Hetch Hetchy project, is about $20,000,000 cheaper than any other feasible project for furnishing an adequate supply.

The Hetch Hetchy project has the additional advantage of permitting the development of a greater amount of water power than any other.

The board is of the opinion that the use of the Hetch Hetchy Valley as a reservoir site is necessary if the full flow of the upper Tuolumne is to be conserved.

The board further believes that there will be sufficient water, if adequately stored and economically used, to supply both the reasonable demand of the bay communities and the reasonable needs of the Turlock-Modesto irrigation districts for the remainder of this century.

The board believes that on account of the fertility of the lands under irrigation and their aridness without water the necessity of preserving all available water in the Valley of California will sooner or later make the demand for the use of Hetch Hetchy as a reservoir practically irresistible. The board does not think that a delay of a few years in transforming the Hetch Hetchy Valley into a reservoir is of importance, and therefore does not think it necessary to require delaying construction of this reservoir until the Lake Eleanor and Cherry sources have been fully developed.

The board believes that the regulations proposed by the city will be found sufficient to protect the waters from pollution, and that these regulations will tend toward the protection of campers and others using the park and will not be onerous upon them. It recommends, however, that the permit to the city require the city to take other means, such as filtration, to purify its water supply if these regulations are ever deemed insufficient.

The construction of reservoirs, especially the Hetch Hetchy, will destroy a few camping grounds in the park. The construction of the proposed trails will, however, render accessible other parts of the park not now readily reached, and the number of camping places within the park is large.

Construction of Tuolumne system as proposed by city of San Francisco, to be extended over about 50 years, $77,000,000.

Against the above expenditures there will be developed 115,000 horsepower, having an estimated capitalized net value of $45,000,000.

LANE URGES ACTION.

[Copy of letter from Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, to Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, House of Representatives, which letter was transmitted to Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, chairman Public Lands Committee.]

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 29, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. UNDERWOOD: I have been in receipt for some time of communications from San Francisco respecting their water situation. The newspapers and others are keeping it as quiet as possible, but the situation is one of emergency and of actual distress. As you doubtless know, there has been pending here for some 10 years or more an application before this department for rights of way which will permit the use of the Hetch Hetchy Valley as a reservoir for San Francisco's water supply.

When I was city attorney of San Francisco I made an argument before Secretary Hitchcock in this matter and have been interested in it ever since. Secretary Fisher just before he went out of office said that the matter was one that should be dealt with by Congress. I was appealed to to revoke this decision, but said that owing to the fact that I had been a constant advocate of such a permit and was one of the attorneys of record in the matter I felt it would be improper for me to act further than to express to Congress my opinion that this was a matter almost vital to San Francisco's growth as well as her present needs.

I am advised to-day that the matter of securing the necessary legislation under which the Tuolumne waters may be used for a municipal water supply can be taken up by Congress as an emergency matter if you will say the word. San Francisco's need is so great that I think such action would be entirely justifiable. There is absolutely no politics in the matter. The president of the Spring Valley Water Co., which now supplies the city, in describing the water supply in that city recently said: "It is doing the city more harm than the earthquake ever did."

I quite realize the pressure that is brought to bear upon you with respect to legislation that Members desire to push at this session. This fact, however, is not to be lost sight of—that a delay as to the Hetch Hetchy water supply now means the postponement for at least a year of securing the relief for San Francisco. There are sufficient data already had for the Land Committee to act upon and there is no question of policy involved affecting anything other than this one proposition.

I hope from these considerations that you will find it practicable to make the exception and permit this proposition to be considered during this session of Congress.

Respectfully, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

HON. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD,
House of Representatives.

LANE TESTIFIES AT HEARING.

[Extracts from statement of Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, to the Public Lands Committee, House of Representatives, June 25, 1913.]

San Francisco needs a new and adequate water supply. The water supply that she has now has been developed from time to time during the last 50 years, and the city has outgrown it. The situation in San Francisco now is that there are many homes where sufficient water can not be had for a bath; where it is necessary in the new and growing portions of the city to leave a spigot turned on at night in order to get sufficient water for the morning breakfast. More than that, you know the situation that developed immediately after the earthquake. San Francisco attempted to supplement her fresh-water supply with a salt-water supply drawn from the ocean—an emergency supply in case of fire.

There is every kind of reason why San Francisco should have a larger supply of water than she has. At the present time they are advertising in the papers that people must stop washing down their steps, washing off the sidewalks, and watering their lawns because the water is not to be had.

The Hetch Hetchy Valley is distant from the Yosemite Valley and in no way touches that beautiful scenic valley. The Hetch Hetchy Valley I have never seen; but it is a valley in a canyon which is partly submerged during a part of the year, which, as I learned 10 years or more ago, was for the greater part even of the summer season an impossibility for camping purposes because of the mosquitoes there, there being so much swamp. Great cliffs arise around it. I think that I have as much appreciation of natural beauty as anyone, and as much of a desire to conserve the natural beauties of my own home State as anyone, and my conclusion, after thinking of this thing a long while, has been that to turn that valley into a lake would add to the beauty of the whole thing rather than to detract from it in any way.

Both the private engineers and the War engineers have reached the conclusion that this dam site must eventually be used. California needs water for other than municipal purposes, for irrigation purposes, and she needs this water that comes down from these high mountains for power, because she has no coal, so that it is probably a matter of but a few years, even if this application were denied, and if this bill should fall to pass, it would be only a very few years before you would find yourselves pressed by the State of California or by private parties with large public influence behind them to set aside this identical site as a dam site for the holding back of the flood waters which run to waste, so that those waters might be used for irrigation purposes and for power purposes, if not for municipal purposes; and it has seemed to me, in looking over the whole situation, that San Francisco's demand or request made to the Secretary of the Interior in times past was a perfectly reasonable one. My concern as Secretary of the Interior has been to see that the interests of the Government were protected. I have looked over this bill, and in the very brief time I have had it seems to meet a great many of the objections that have been heretofore raised to such bills.

My judgment is unequivocally in favor of the use of the floor of the valley. If San Francisco does not get it, some one else must; it is too precious a reservoir site to remain unused.

In building this dam San Francisco will necessarily build roads which will make the high sierra accessible—will make that whole portion of the park accessible to hundreds of thousands of people who never will have any chance to go in there if it remains as at present. Therefore it seems to me that as a park proposition alone this thing is worth while.

I think, as one having charge of the park, that it will be beneficial, and that anyone who really knows the country and appreciates the advantages that will come by the opening up of it and making it accessible and putting it to use must indorse this proposition as against some rather doubtful esthetic consideration.

San Francisco has absolutely needed an additional water supply for years.

I am advised by the irrigation people themselves that they are satisfied that this (bill) protects their rights, and I think it becomes quite evident when you consider that the city puts up a great dam which will hold back flood waters that run idly by their land, that it must work out for their benefit if they have any right whatever to the use of the waters.

The general principle of the bill is that these lands belong to the Federal Government and that we have control of them. The water originates in them, the water flows through them, and we have control over the dam site, and if we are to allow these lands to be submerged we have got the right to make certain conditions. Certainly no one can come in and use lands in a national park without our consent, and if you give consent you have got the right to make conditions.

I think the rights of the irrigation districts are very well protected here, and that they have the right to call upon the city for additional water.

I think that it is very proper that the Federal Government should use whatever power it has over the public lands, over the parks, and over the forests to compel the fullest use of these waters, and indirectly to require through its power to make conditions, the lowest possible rate for consumers.

In my judgment, the permission desired by San Francisco to secure water from the Yosemite National Park for municipal purposes, etc., should be accorded. The communities on San Francisco Bay constitute the largest center of population on the Pacific coast and are urgently in need of an adequate supply of pure, wholesome water for domestic consumption and for fire protection.

This project would insure the development of a dependable supply of water for the use of the adjacent irrigation district, and it would also provide for the development of power now going to waste. The city of San Francisco has evidenced its good faith in this matter by providing a large bond issue looking to securing money to effectuate the grant if accorded. The bill under consideration fully protects the interests of the United States in the park and elsewhere. Under the project as proposed by the city, the floor of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, now difficult of access and frequently unhealthy, will be converted into a lake of great beauty and be provided with suitable approaches. Under the provisions of this bill the revenues derived by the Government, which in time will grow into a very considerable sum, are to be used for the maintenance and improvement of the Yosemite National Park, and the city of San Francisco has undertaken to construct and maintain roads, trails, and bridges which will practically result in a great enlargement of the park areas of the high Sierra by making them more safely and easily accessible.

HOUSTON APPROVES.

[Extracts from statement of Hon. David F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture, before the Public Lands Committee, House of Representatives, June 25, 1913.]

I have examined this proposed bill, and I am in hearty accord with what the Secretary of the Interior says as to the general features. So far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned, I think that all of the interests of the Government are safeguarded in the bill.

It is unnecessary for me to repeat anything that has been said about the need of the city of San Francisco for water. There is no doubt, from the representations made, that they have a great and growing need for this water supply. It is a prerequisite to the development of a great city. Now, I am also informed that this has been determined as the best way to secure the additional water required. It seems to me that we can not afford to stand in the way of that. * * * I have carefully examined the bill, and I can see no reason why it should not go through.

The CHAIRMAN. In your opinion the development of roads and trails might mean an additional protection to the forest, might it not?

Secretary HOUSTON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you considered the matter from the point of view of the people who may think it is a great wrong to put this water to beneficial use because of the possible injury to the natural beauties of the valley or because of the destruction of scenic values?

Secretary HOUSTON. In the first place, if I am correctly informed, it will add to the beauty rather than injure the appearance of the forest and the park. So that answers the question from that point of view. But I think there is a great deal of beauty in San Francisco to be conserved, and I think that the thousands of people there have some claims upon the Government. * * *

PINCHOT INDORSES BILL.

[Extracts from statement of Hon. Gifford Pinchot, former Chief Forester, before Public Lands Committee, House of Representatives, June 25, 1913.]

"We come now face to face with the perfectly clean question of what is the best use to which this water that flows out of the Sierras can be put. As we all know, there is no use of water that is higher than the domestic use. Then, if there is, as the engineers tell us, no other source of supply that is anything like so reasonably available as this one, if this is the best and within reasonable limits of cost, the only means of supplying San Francisco with water, we come straight to the question of whether the advantage of leaving this valley in a state of nature is greater than the advantage of using it for the benefit of the city of San Francisco.

"Now, the fundamental principle of the whole conservation policy is that of use—to take every part of the land and its resources and put it to that use in which it will best serve the most people—and I think there can be no question at all but that in this case we have an instance in which all weighty considerations demand the passage of the bill. * * *

"The construction of roads, trails, and telephone systems which will follow the passage of this bill will be a very important help in the park and forest reserves. The national forest telephone system and the roads and trails to which this bill will lead will form an important additional help in fighting fire in the forest reserves. As has already been set forth by the two Secretaries, the presence of these additional means of communication will mean that the national forest and the national park will be visited by very large numbers of people who can not visit them now. I think that the men who assert that it is better to leave a piece of natural scenery in its natural condition have rather the better of the argument, and I believe that if we had nothing else to consider than the delight of the few men and women who would yearly go into the Hetch Hetchy Valley, then it should be left in its natural condition. But the considerations on the other side of the question, to my mind, are simply overwhelming, and so much so that I have never been able to see that there was any reasonable argument against the use of this water supply by the city of San Francisco, provided the bill was a reasonable bill. * * * The (sanitary) regulations which are required are substantially what ought to be followed by any well-intentioned camper. * * *

In a colloquy with Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, member of the Public Lands Committee, Mr. Pinchot discussed the effect of the construction of roads and dam site in the Hetch Hetchy Valley. He agreed with Mr. RAKER that this work would make the valley more accessible and that the use of the park would be enormously increased. Mr. Pinchot, in reply to a question by Mr. RAKER, said he had never been able to agree with John Muir in the latter's attitude toward the Sierras.

Mr. Pinchot unequivocally indorsed the bill, and said there was no reason to delay its passage, as every possible phase of the subject had been investigated and discussed for 10 or 12 years. He said:

"I am thoroughly and heartily in favor of it. I am in favor of reporting the bill now before the committee and passing it at this session."

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY CHIEF FAVORS BILL.

[Extracts from statement of Dr. George Otis Smith, Director of United States Geological Survey, before Committee on the Public Lands, House of Representatives, June 25, 1913.]

The Hetch Hetchy Valley must eventually be made into a reservoir. Now, I believe that the sooner that dam site is actually used, the sooner that reservoir is utilized, the better. * * * There are three parties, it seems to me, to this proposition. San Francisco, by reason of its claim for the highest use of the water; the Turlock-Modesto irrigation districts, by reason of their prior use and their actual dependence upon the Tuolumne watershed for their water; and, thirdly, the general public, which is interested in the full utilization of our water resources here, as elsewhere, and also interested by reason of special rights which they have in the national parks. I believe that the citizens of San Francisco and the other bay cities will receive pure water from the cheapest source, and they will also receive municipal power at a lower price. The irrigation interests, with their prior rights, are assured under the terms of this bill of a larger supply than they at present have upon what seems to me to be absolutely equitable terms. The third party to this contract, in the form of legislation, is the general public. The visitors to the park, if this plan is carried out, will have the northern part of the Yosemite National Park made more accessible. If not indeed also more attractive. And right there I would say that in my opinion natural beauty has little value unless there is the human eye to see it.

The sanitary restrictions in the bill are not a bit more than should be placed upon any users of a national park, this and other national parks, whether San Francisco is to get the water from the park or not. In addition, this is necessary in order to protect the campers from themselves. * * *

To sum up, the proposed legislation appears to me to serve present needs without in the least compromising future needs. If we look ahead, there is also in this project some future possibilities of general benefit to the public, and not the least of these benefits will be in the increased degree in which these national playgrounds of the high Sierra will be made more attractive to the general public because they will be more accessible.

I base my opinions on actual observation of the Hetch Hetchy Valley itself. * * *

I do not think that anyone else (than San Francisco) is liable to develop the Hetch Hetchy dam site, unless there is a reasonable hope that the irrigation use can be connected with the municipal and power use. * * *

No extensive argument is needed to show that the full utilization of the Tuolumne River is not only desirable, but absolutely essential.

CHIEF FORESTER O. K'S PLAN.

[Substance of statement of Hon. Henry S. Graves, Chief Forester, before Public Lands Committee, House of Representatives, June 25, 1913.]

Mr. Graves analyzed the bill before the Committee on the Public Lands so far as it relates to the jurisdiction of the Forest Service. He approved the provisions and said that the telephones, trails, roads, etc., would materially assist in the proper conduct of the Stanislaus National Forest, and would result in good for all concerned. As to the bill itself, Mr. Graves said he had assisted in the preparation of Secretary Lane's report, which represented the agreed policy of the department, including the Forest Service.

NEWELL WANTS DAM BUILT.

[Extracts from statement of Hon. F. H. Newell, chairman United States Reclamation Commission, before Public Lands Committee, House of Representatives, June 25, 1913.]

"I agree fully what has been stated by the representatives of the departments in this particular case. I made a study of the water supply of the higher Sierras 18 years ago. I made this study in the Hetch Hetchy Valley as well as in the surrounding area. It was found then that the irrigation development of the valley (San Joaquin) would require the building of a reservoir in that place. At that time we did not anticipate the needs of the city of San Francisco, and in fact gave that no consideration; but we are now fully aware that the ultimate development of the city of San Francisco will require the use of this reservoir site. Now, touching the question of the destruction of the natural beauty of the valley, I will say that, having been concerned with the building of many large reservoirs, I have naturally come to believe that there is nothing more beautiful than a well-built dam with a reservoir behind it.

"Those of us who have been handling this water-supply question feel that the municipal or domestic use is so far superior to any other use that it does not enter my mind that there can be any competition. * * *

"You can supply, perhaps, one hundred times as many people with water for domestic use in a city as could be supplied for irrigation purposes."

Mr. Newell discussed at great length with the members of the committee the cost of water for irrigation and the reasonable investment that should be made by landowners. He stated that in his opinion no encouragement could be held out to irrigationists that the Government would build a reservoir at Hetch Hetchy, the water to be used for irrigation purposes. In his opinion the construction by San Francisco of the Hetch Hetchy Dam would materially benefit the irrigationists and promote conservation. He approved the passage of the bill.

ARMY BOARD TELLS COMMITTEE BILL SHOULD PASS.

[Extracts from statement of Col. John Biddle, chairman of the Board of Army Engineers which investigated and reported upon the San Francisco water problem, before the Public Lands Committee, House of Representatives, June 26, 1913.]

Responding to Chairman FERRIS, Col. Biddle stated that he was stationed in San Francisco from 1907 to 1911 and was in general charge of the rivers of California, and in that way became familiar to a certain extent with them, and also with the water situation in California. He further stated that the Army board was appointed in 1910 while he was stationed in California, and the other members of the board went out there. In 1911 the board went over several of the important sources of supply, and in 1912 the board again went out there and went over a number of these sources. In addition, Col. Biddle said that he had personally seen most of the sources in question.

Following are quotations from testimony of Col. Biddle:

"The city of San Francisco obtains its water supply at present from sources all within about 50 miles of the city. It has been recognized for some years past that these sources were insufficient, and therefore San Francisco has been investigating supplies from other points. Early investigation convinced the engineers employed by the city that the most economical supply was from the upper Tuolumne River, making use of two main reservoir sites, Lake Eleanor and Hetch Hetchy Valley, lying within the Yosemite National Park. * * *

Col. Biddle recited the appointment of the Board of Army Engineers, and stated that two inspections of the reservoirs in the Yosemite Valley and other proposed sites were made, and also that very comprehensive inspections of the available sites were made. In addition, Mr. H. H. Wadsworth, assistant engineer, United States Engineer Service, was secured by the board to make further investigations and examinations. Mr. Wadsworth had been in the employ of the engineer department in California and is familiar with the rivers and reservoir sites in central California. Mr. Wadsworth spent about a year and a half on duty in connection with the work of the Army board.

Resuming, Col. Biddle says:

"While the city of San Francisco makes the application, the other cities on the bay are also vitally interested, as in most cases the water supply in those communities is nearing its limit of development, and the more important ones have already taken such steps as seem desirable to join San Francisco in obtaining a new water supply. * * *

"The board took into consideration all possible sources of water supply. * * *

"The Hetch Hetchy supply is estimated to cost $77,000,000, spread over a number of years. The second and third sources are estimated to cost from $97,000,000 to $99,000,000."

The data and analysis of these projects appear in the Army board report (H. Doc. No. 54) and also in the hearings before the Public Lands Committee, beginning at page 50. Reference to these reports and hearings is hereby made.

Resuming extracts from the hearings:

"Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If you know of any reason why we should pass this bill, tell us that reason."

"Col. BIDDLE. The reason why you should is that San Francisco has to have the water; that it is a perfectly practicable way and by far the most economical way. * * * The power development in the Hetch Hetchy is greater than it is at any other source of supply."

Col. Biddle then analyzed the possible alternative sources, which analysis is to be found in the printed hearings, page 58 et seq. He said that all these alternative sources were much more expensive and presented greater engineering difficulties than the Hetch Hetchy. He stated further that, in his judgment, San Francisco would meet opposition from the irrigationists and others if other sources were selected. Further, Col. Biddle stated that it would take San Francisco longer to obtain water rights in other systems, whereas the city now owns the water rights in the Hetch Hetchy. He also stated that the city owns the greater part of the floor of the Hetch Hetchy Valley and a small part of the dam site.

Resuming extracts:

"The CHAIRMAN. Are you acquainted with the sentiment of the people of San Francisco touching the supply they desire?"

"Col. BIDDLE. Yes, sir; the sentiment is overwhelmingly in favor of the Hetch Hetchy supply."

"The CHAIRMAN. There can be no question about that?"

"Col. BIDDLE. None whatever."

"Col. BIDDLE. There is no question in my mind that the Hetch Hetchy is the best water supply for San Francisco, and that it is the most economical that can be obtained; it can be obtained more promptly and is better in every way."

"The CHAIRMAN. With the information before you, coupled with the results of these two investigations, if you were a member of this committee, having due regard for the rights of the irrigation people and having due regard for the rights of the nature lovers, who believe that you should not interfere with the Yosemite National Park, and having due regard for the needs of San Francisco, which system would you vote for?"

"Col. BIDDLE. I would vote for the Hetch Hetchy system."

"The CHAIRMAN. You would vote for the Hetch Hetchy system?"

"Col. BIDDLE. Yes, sir."

"The CHAIRMAN. Would you feel, in casting a vote of that kind, that you had inflicted a greater wrong upon the irrigation people and the nature lovers than if you voted for one of the other systems?"

"Col. BIDDLE. No, sir; so far as the nature lovers are concerned, my own preference is for a valley, for the reason that the Sierras are full of beautiful lakes. While there are, of course, a number of valleys, there are very few like the Hetch Hetchy. There are very few in the whole Sierras; still it would be very beautiful as a lake. The difference between the Yosemite Valley and the Hetch Hetchy, in my opinion, is that the Yosemite is far grander than the Hetch Hetchy, but the floor of the Hetch Hetchy is more attractive. The cliffs and waterfalls of that valley are wonderful, and would not be injured by the creation of a lake. So, with this lake you would still have a wonderful piece of scenery. Then, of course, the facilities that the city would give would afford more people an opportunity to visit the valley."

"I think the city of San Francisco is agreeing to do a very reasonable thing and that the roads and trails required will satisfy the demand."

"The CHAIRMAN. As matters now stand, it would be pretty extravagant for poor people to undertake to go there?"

"Col. BIDDLE. It is impossible for them to go in there, unless they go in with knapsacks on their backs. In the early summer the mosquitoes are very bad, and in the late summer it is too hot in the Hetch Hetchy Valley."

Col. Biddle stated that the Hetch Hetchy Lake would be 6 or 7 miles long by 1½ miles wide, and would flood an area of approximately 1,100 acres.

Col. Biddle also stated that the proposed sanitary regulations "are as such as should be made anyhow, if the park is to be used by any large number of people." Answering a question on this subject, Col. Biddle added:

"I think that as soon as the park begins to be used to any extent it will be necessary to have the same rules for the protection of campers as for the protection of the people of San Francisco."

Discussing necessity for a long look ahead in California, on account of the general lack of water, Col. Biddle said:

"Cities situated as San Francisco have to look a long time forward. Here at Washington, for instance, you have the Potomac River, and the chances are that the water situation, so far as Washington is concerned, 50 years hence will be the same as it is to-day. In the case of San Francisco, however, there will be danger of so many water rights and water-use developments that it might be almost impossible 50 years from now to obtain water rights without great expense and even hardship to agricultural communities. That is the reason we take that advanced date."

Responding to the chairman, the other members of the Army board expressed their views:

"Col. COSBY. I concur fully in the statement of Col. Biddle. There is only one small point of difference, and that is as to whether the Hetch Hetchy Valley would be more attractive with this reservoir in it than in its present condition. I believe that with the lake it would be even more beautiful than it is in its natural condition."

TAYLOR AND COSBY INDORSEMENTS.

Col. TAYLOR. There is not the slightest question in my mind but that this should be used as the source of water supply, and not only that, but that it will be used as a water supply in a very short time independently of whether this project is adopted or not. I think that the pressure will be so great to conserve the water up there that it will be used as a storage reservoir. It is by far the best storage reservoir in that section of the country, and water is so valuable up there that they can not afford to let it run to waste. If you deny the use of it to San Francisco, sooner or later the water will be put to other uses. Somebody will be asking for permission to utilize the Hetch Hetchy Valley as a storage reservoir for irrigation purposes. This water will certainly be used for the city of San Francisco or for irrigation purposes."

Col. COSBY. I presume the members of the committee fully understand how inaccessible the Hetch Hetchy Valley is. I think the roads will make it accessible to a greater number of people. At the present time I think that there are practically only two classes of people who use it, people who are unusually wealthy, or people who are unusually strong and healthy and are able to make the trip.

CITY'S POINT OF VIEW.

[Extract from statement of Hon. James D. Phelan, former mayor of San Francisco, and representative of Mayor James Rolph, jr., and the city of San Francisco.]

"I will emphasize the fact that the needs of San Francisco are pressing and urgent. A large number of our population has been lost to Oakland, Alameda, and Berkeley by reason of the fact that we have never had adequate facilities, either of transportation or of water supply. So San Francisco, the chief Federal city on the Pacific coast, asks the Federal Government for assistance in this matter by grant and not by money. It has obligated itself to pay $70,000,000 for a water supply. We have endeavored to satisfy the needs of the irrigationists in good faith, as well as the local water monopoly, and we come this year to Washington, I think, with the good will of those heretofore opposed to us, possibly with the exception of the gentlemen who are devoted to the preservation of the beauties of nature."

"As Californians, we rather resent gentlemen from different parts of the country outside of California telling us that we are invading the beautiful natural resources of the State or in any way marring or detracting from them. We have a greater pride than they in the beauties of California—in the valleys, in the big trees, in the rivers, and in the high mountains. We have the highest mountain in the United States in California, Mount Whitney, 15,000 feet above the sea, as we have the lowest land, in Death Valley, 300 feet below the sea. We have the highest tree known in the world, and the oldest tree. Its history goes back 2,000 years, I believe, judged by the internal evidences; as we have the youngest tree in the world, Luther Burbank's plumcot."

"All of this is of tremendous pride, and even for a water supply we would not injure the great resources which have made our State the playground of the world. By constructing a dam at this very narrow gorge in the Hetch Hetchy Valley we create not a reservoir but a lake, because Mr. Freeman has shown that by planting trees or vines over the dam the idea of a dam, the appearance of a dam, is entirely lost; so coming upon it it will look like an emerald gem in the mountains; and one of the very few things in which California is deficient, especially in the Sierra, is lakes, and in this way we will contribute, in a large measure, to the scenic grandeur and beauty of California. I suppose nature lovers, suspecting a dam there not made by the Creator will think it of no value, in their estimation, but I submit man can imitate the Creator—a worthy exemplar. I remember the story of John Hay's 'Little Breeches,' which describes the old fellow who, believing in nothing that was religious or good, and having been told, after his child recovered, that he had wandered away in the woods and must have been restored by the angels, said:

"To restore the life of a little child
And bring him back to his own,
Is a darn sight better business
Than loafing 'round the throne."

"To provide for the little children, men, and women of the 800,000 population who swarm the shores of San Francisco Bay is a matter of much greater importance than encouraging the few who, in solitary loneliness, will sit on the peak of the Sierra loafing around the throne of the God of Nature and singing his praise. A benign father loves his children above all things. There is no comparison between the highest use of water—the domestic supply—and the mere scenic value of the mountains. When you decide that affirmatively, as you must, and then on top of that, that we are not detracting from the scenic value of the mountains, but enhancing it, I think there is nothing left to be said."

All the Members of Congress from California were favorable to the grant to San Francisco under the provisions of the bill.

A written statement for the Turlock and Modesto Irrigation Districts was presented by the authorized representatives of said water districts, which approved the bill as drafted and reserved the right to object should the conditions relating to those irrigation districts be eliminated or materially modified.

MR. WHITMAN'S VIEWS.

Mr. Edmund A. Whitman, of Boston, Mass., president of the Society for the Preservation of National Parks, presented his views to the committee.

Mr. Whitman, in response to interrogations of the chairman of the Land Committee, said that the society he represented was composed of approximately 200 members, and that not more than 25 of these members had ever visited the Hetch Hetchy.

ROUGHEST COUNTRY IN THE WORLD.

Describing the Hetch Hetchy Valley, Mr. Whitman says (p. 206): "It is some of the roughest country that God ever made. You do get little places here and there where there is grass and water, but the large part of the country is the roughest sort of country, where camping is as impossible as it would be on the top of this table. * * * The Hetch Hetchy Valley—the floor is perfectly level and grass-covered. The floor is two or three miles long and nearly half a mile wide. That is surrounded by steep cliffs, where there are gorges, out of which one may toilsomely climb to stopping places, * * * where a few people go and camp for a short time. * * * and it would take a strong man four days to go through those 20 miles of canyon, because it is so rough. Those who are not so strong would go as we went, over the mountain side, just above the Hetch Hetchy Valley. I have gone out from the top of the mountain there and dangled my feet down into scenery from a position where I could look down 5,000 feet to the river below and across to the other bank a distance of some ten or twelve thousand feet. * * * There is no other place like it on the face of the globe."

THE BLUE LAKES.

Mr. Eugene J. Sullivan, president of the Sierra Blue Lakes Water & Power Co., appeared before the committee. For several years Mr. Sullivan and his associates have been opposing the Hetch Hetchy water system and attempting to sell to the city of San Francisco the Blue Lakes system. The fact that Mr. Sullivan and his company have nothing to sell which is of value to San Francisco has not deterred this gentleman from traducing the Board of Army Engineers and the city officials of San Francisco.

When announcement that the Land Committee of the House was to hold hearings on the Hetch Hetchy bill was published in San Francisco, Mr. Sullivan and his engineer, Taggart Aston, sent numerous telegrams to Members of Congress demanding delay and charging that a "great national scandal" would follow if action was had upon the bill. Coupled with this was a charge that the city engineer of San Francisco had suppressed data and maps which showed the Sierra Blue Lakes project to be preferable and better than the Hetch Hetchy system.

To give Mr. Sullivan a chance to make good, the Public Lands Committee took a recess of more than a week to allow him to come and make his presentation. His statement occupies 91 pages of the printed hearings, Part II.

San Francisco's engineers investigated the Sullivan project and rejected it. The Board of Army Engineers and Mr. H. H. Wadsworth, the civilian engineer of the board, also investigated the Sullivan project, and reported adversely thereon. See Army board report (H. Doc. 54, 63d Cong., 1st sess.). Mr. Sullivan informed the Land Committee that Taggart Aston, his engineer, is employed on a 10 per cent contingent fee—Aston's compensation depending upon the sale of the Blue Lakes project.

Mr. Sullivan repeatedly charges that a report by Bartel, one of a hundred assistant city engineers, was suppressed. In refutation of this, members of the Army board say they personally visited the watershed which Mr. Sullivan claims to own, and further they had conferences with Bartel and the latter's superiors while the board was investigating various water-supply systems in California.

COL. BIDDLE REPORTS ON BLUE LAKES.

In the absence of Chairman FERRIS, Hon. WILLIAM KENT, member of the committee, sent to the members of the Army board the transcript of Mr. Sullivan's testimony. Col. Biddle, chairman of the board, replies as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
Washington, July 31, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. KENT: Having reference to your communication of July 21, asking for comment from the Board of Army Engineers on the testimony of Mr. E. J. Sullivan, representing the Sierra Blue Lakes water project on the Mokelumne River, proof sheets of which testimony were sent by you, the following is submitted by the whole board:

The two main questions raised by Mr. Sullivan appear to be—first, whether San Francisco needs water from the Sierras at all, and second, whether the Mokelumne River is not the best and cheapest source of such a supply.

According to the estimates made by the board, the amount of water now used by the communities surrounding San Francisco Bay is 133,000,000 gallons daily. It is estimated that by the year 2000, 540,000,000 gallons daily will be needed. The board believes that about 100,000,000 gallons daily additional can be economically developed from near-by sources and that for the remainder it will be necessary to go to some outside source, such as the Sierras. The city of San Francisco in its estimates provides for obtaining 400,000,000 gallons daily from the Sierra sources, partly because of the doubt of the city engineers that the near-by sources can be developed to the amount above estimated, and partly because the full amount could be used to advantage. There can be no question, however, but that from 300,000,000 to 400,000,000 gallons daily additional will be needed by the year 2000, and on account of the situation in California, where all of the available water will be eventually used for irrigation or power, it is most desirable for San Francisco and the other cities to establish now their rights.

NO SUPPRESSION OF DATA.

As to the Mokelumne River, it is stated in the testimony of Mr. Sullivan that Gen. G. H. Mendell, Corps of Engineers, reported favorably on the Mokelumne River as a source of supply. This report was dated about 1877, and provided for only 25,000,000 gallons daily, so that, of course, it has no bearing on the present investigation. Mr. Sullivan makes as his principal point the fact that a report by Mr. Bartel, assistant city engineer, in April, 1912, was never submitted to the Board of Army Engineers, and that if this report had been submitted the conclusion of the board would have been very different. This report was not seen by the board. The board, however, attaches no importance to this fact. The assistant engineer in the employ of the board, Mr. H. H. Wadsworth, has written that he had several conversations with Mr. Bartel on the subject and was generally familiar with considerable, at least, of the data obtained by him and his deductions therefrom. The main point, however, is that the board itself had such independent examinations and investigations made of the Mokelumne, as well as other streams, as seemed necessary in order for the board to form its opinion on this source of supply. Mr. Bartel's report could not have changed the facts thus ascertained. The report of the chief engineer of the company was in the hands of the board.

In determining the supply of water that can be obtained from any of the Sierra sources there are two main considerations: First, the amount of water that flows down the stream; and, second, the reservoir capacity for storage of water during the dry seasons of the year and especially during dry years, which frequently occur in California.

The method of determining the flow of any river, such as the Mokelumne, is to measure the flow at such points and at such times as may be practicable and to have the record of the rainfall from which the run-off may be deduced. The records of rainfall and run-off are not very complete or continuous for any length of time on these Sierra rivers. Some have been made by the State of California, some in recent years by the United States, and others to a certain extent by corporations or individuals. All these records, as far as known, were at the disposal of the board, and the board was therefore able to deduce with as much accuracy as anyone what is the total flow of the Mokelumne.

RESERVOIRS TOO COSTLY AND INFERIOR.

As to the reservoirs, the assistant engineer of the board made personal examinations and reconnaissances of the three principal reservoir sites—namely, North Fork of Mokelumne, Railroad Flat, and Forest Creek—and directed special surveys to be made of the two largest ones by the city of San Francisco, which was done. The board itself inspected one of the two main reservoir sites, the Railroad Flat, for the special reason that the use of this reservoir was considered of doubtful value on account of its cost. One of the reservoirs specially mentioned by Mr. Sullivan is the Blue Lakes. This reservoir is, however, of little value, as the catchment area is only 4½ square miles, and therefore but little water will flow into it.

Furthermore, investigations by the Geological Survey in the last few years have indicated that the reservoir capacity on this watershed outside of the few mentioned is very small. The reservoirs on the Mokelumne are very inferior to those on the Tuolumne. For instance, with a dam somewhat over 300 feet in height, the amount of masonry in the dam at Hetch Hetchy is less than 5 cubic yards for each million gallons stored, while for the main reservoir on the Mokelumne, on the North Fork, it is 23 cubic yards and that at the Railroad Flat reservoir but little less. The capacity of the Hetch Hetchy reservoir with a 300-foot dam is about 120,000,000,000 gallons; that at the North Fork of the Mokelumne about 28,000,000,000 gallons; the Railroad Flat reservoir about 21,500,000,000 gallons. It is therefore very evident that the relative cost of the reservoirs on the Mokelumne River is much greater than at Hetch Hetchy Valley.

The amount of land that could well be irrigated from the Mokelumne and the rights for power and irrigation were obtained by the board after such investigation as was possible and are believed to be correct. As stated, much of this land is not yet irrigated, but the tendency in that part of California is toward irrigation, and it is believed that in time it will be desired to irrigate much more land than at present. The amount assumed for irrigation is 200,000 acres, less than half of what is allowed for irrigation in the discussion of the supply from the Tuolumne River.

INADEQUATE SUPPLY OF WATER.

The board therefore believes that the estimate of 128,000,000 gallons daily is about all that could be counted on from the Mokelumne River unless the existing water rights be purchased at great expense and unless the land tributary to this river be perpetually deprived of water from this source for irrigation. Even if all the water from the Mokelumne could be used for San Francisco, it would not be sufficient on account of the relatively small reservoir capacity in this watershed and the impossibility of using reservoirs in other watersheds on account of the prohibited expense. In California the floods last but a short time; dry years occur along with the wet ones and large storage possibilities are imperative.

It does not appear from the testimony of Mr. Sullivan just where the large supply he estimates, 350,000,000 to 500,000,000 gallons daily, is to be obtained. It is thought possible that he may make use of some of the water falling on the foothills and lower. This, however, has not been considered allowable in making estimates on any of the supply from the Sierras, for the reason that these foothills are fast becoming more and more thickly inhabited and it was desired to obtain water from a source which lies above ordinary habitation.

ARMY BOARD GOT ITS OWN DATA.

To sum up, there is nothing in the testimony of Mr. Sullivan, and it is believed that there can be nothing in the report of Mr. Bartel, which would affect the conclusions of the board, for the reason, as stated above, that the board obtained, as far as was considered desirable, its own data, excepting that which was of a public nature and therefore available to the board. As to the relative cost of the projects, the report indicates that the Tuolumne supply is much the more economical. The distance over which Mokelumne River water would have to be transported is about the same as for the Tuolumne, and difficulties in construction of aqueduct are about the same, while the cost of the reservoirs is relatively very much greater. For the amount of water that is needed by the bay communities there can be no question but that the Tuolumne supply is more economical than any other and that the Mokelumne can be used only in connection with supplies from other sources, as it is not in itself sufficient.

FULL HEARING GIVEN COMPANY.

It might be added that the board gave to the Sierra Blue Lakes Water & Power Co. on July 5, 1911, a hearing, which was stenographically reported. At this hearing were present Messrs. E. J. Sullivan, president; C. M. Burleson, chief engineer; James N. Gillett and W. H. H. Hart, attorneys for the company. Every opportunity was given them to thoroughly present the project, and in addition, a report on this source of supply prepared by the chief engineer, Mr. C. M. Burleson, was submitted to the board.

Very respectfully,

JOHN BIDDLE,
Colonel, General Staff, Chairman Board of Officers of Corps of Engineers, United States Army.
Hon. WILLIAM KENT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

BRIEF OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Including a brief history of the Hetch Hetchy project to date and a résumé of the testimony and arguments adduced at the hearing before the Public Lands Committee of the House of Representatives.

To the honorable chairman and members of the Public Lands Committee of the House of Representatives the following brief and argument in support of the above-entitled bill is respectfully submitted.

GEOGRAPHICAL SITUATION.

For the benefit of those Members who are not wholly familiar with the relative geographical location of the cities, districts, and water sources affected by this bill the following brief statement is made:

The cities of San Francisco, Burlingame, San Mateo, Redwood, Palo Alto, Hayward, Alameda, Oakland, Piedmont, and Berkeley, which are to be organized into a municipal water district for development of the Hetch Hetchy water supply, form an almost continuous chain around the Bay of San Francisco. Their combined population at the present date is more than 700,000. Directly east of these bay cities the Coast Range Mountains form a low barrier between the bay cities and the San Joaquin Valley, one of the two great interior valleys of California. Through the middle of this valley the San Joaquin River flows north to the Carquinez Straits and thence into San Francisco Bay. On the east side of the valley the Sierra Nevada Range rises, reaching heights of over 12,000 feet at the summit. Down the western slopes of the Sierras the Tuolumne River winds in a general westerly direction to its confluence with the San Joaquin River. For the purpose of irrigating during the dry season the part of the valley floor which is normally drained by the Tuolumne River, the Modesto and Turlock irrigation districts were formed, comprising 257,000 acres in extent. Conjointly they have built the La Grange diverting dam at the point where the Tuolumne leaves the foothills on its westward course, and divert its waters through irrigating canals to the extent of their needs. About 50 miles farther up the Tuolumne and about 165 miles due east from San Francisco the river flows through the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which lies within the boundaries of the Yosemite National Park, about 25 miles north of the Yosemite Valley and on an entirely different watershed. The valley floor is about 3,530 feet in elevation. To the north of Hetch Hetchy and about 9 miles distant lies Lake Eleanor, one of the numerous mountain lakes of the Sierras. A short distance west of Lake Eleanor the ground falls off into Cherry Valley, through which the Cherry River flows to join the Tuolumne about 12 miles below the Hetch Hetchy Valley. The relative positions of the foregoing points will more readily appear from the map on file with your committee.

HISTORICAL SUMMARY.

(See statement of Percy V. Long, transcript. References to transcript are to the transcript of proceedings before the Public Lands Committee of the House of Representatives, June 25-July 7, 1913, printed as a House document; p. 94.)

The city of San Francisco is now, and for many years past, has obtained its water supply from the Spring Valley Water Co., whose reservoirs and sources of supply are situated in the adjoining Coast Range Mountains. As much as 12 years ago it became apparent to the municipal authorities that the supply afforded by the company was becoming inadequate for the city's needs. Requests from outlying districts for water extensions were being met by refusals from the water company, owing to its inability to properly supply a larger number of consumers. In 1901 the city engineer was ordered to and did make an investigation of various possible sources. Out of 14 sources then considered feasible, the Tuolumne River was selected as being superior in quantity, quality, and accessibility to all the others. Appropriations were duly filed in the city's behalf in accordance with the law then in force. Application was forthwith made to the Secretary of the Interior for permits to impound the water at Hetch Hetchy and Lake Eleanor and conduct the same to the city. The application was denied; was renewed in 1905, and again denied. The great fire of 1906 caused a suspension in proceedings, and in 1907 the matter was again taken up before Secretary Garfield, who in 1908 issued a revocable permit requiring the construction of the Lake Eleanor Dam and full development of that source before anything could be done at Hetch Hetchy. Two serious objections presented themselves to procedure under this permit.

First, the Eleanor Dam was vastly more expensive to construct than the Hetch Hetchy Dam and impounded far less water. Every principle of economy dictated that the less expensive dam should be first built and the Lake Eleanor source developed later as a supplemental supply.

Second, bonds for construction issued on the basis of a revocable permit would be extremely difficult to sell.

Nevertheless the people of San Francisco proceeded in good faith to comply with the terms of the Garfield permit. They voted $600,000 in bonds, in 1909, to acquire lands near Lake Eleanor held in private ownership and $45,000,000 in bonds, in 1910, for construction purposes.

Then they were suddenly served with notice by Secretary Ballinger to show cause why their permit should not be revoked as to the Hetch Hetchy source. Hearings on this order were postponed by the department until the fall of 1912. In the meanwhile the city of San Francisco had engaged the services of John R. Freeman, one of the most eminent engineers in the country, to examine all available sources and particularly the Tuolumne source, with a view to determining which was best adapted to the city's needs and the proper method of development. Mr. Freeman, after a long and careful investigation made with the assistance of a corps of experts, unhesitatingly recommended the Tuolumne supply and insisted that the only proper course of development would be to use the Hetch Hetchy Valley first and the Lake Eleanor and Cherry Valley Reservoirs as adjuncts. Concurrently with the investigation by the city's experts a board of engineer officers of the United States Army made an independent study of the situation. Their conclusions were, in brief, that the Hetch Hetchy supply was the most economical for the city to use, being at least $20,000,000 cheaper ultimately than any other available source. In addition the board states as a conclusion on page 50 of its report:

"The board further believes that there will be sufficient water if adequately stored and economically used to supply both the reasonable demand of the bay communities and the reasonable needs of the Turlock-Modesto irrigation district for the remainder of the century."

This report, together with Mr. Freeman's report as to sources of water supply for the bay communities and the city attorney's report as to the condition of titles on the Tuolumne, were before Secretary Fisher at the hearing held in November, 1912. At this hearing all parties, proponents and opponents of the plan, were present and the case was presented from every aspect. Secretary Fisher reached the conclusion that the matter could only be properly handled by Congress and continued it for that purpose into the present year. The bill before this committee is a counterpart of House bill 6281, which has been favorably reported by the House Committee on Public Lands.

WHAT SAN FRANCISCO IS ASKING FOR.

In the bill presented for your consideration, the city of San Francisco has set forth the rights which Congress must grant before the city can proceed with this great project. These rights are, briefly, as follows:

1. The right to construct a dam at the mouth of Hetch Hetchy, Lake Eleanor, and Cherry Valley and to flood said valleys to the height of their respective dams.
 2. Rights of way through the Yosemite National Park and Stanislaus National Forest for tunnels, aqueducts, and water conduits, also for telephone, telegraph, and power transmission lines, roads, and trails.
 3. Necessary power-house sites and diverting or storage dam sites.
 4. The right to take stone, earth, and other materials for construction purposes from the land covered by the rights of way and adjoining land.
- The water which San Francisco has appropriated under the laws of California and expects to store and beneficially use by means of the above works is the storm water of the Tuolumne—the water which has been going to waste every year over the La Grange irrigation dam during the high-water months.

CONDITIONS TO WHICH SAN FRANCISCO CONSENTS.

In order that the Government and the public may be amply protected in the exercise of this grant, the bill proposes that all procedure thereunder shall be carefully regulated by the Secretary of the Interior. Maps are to be filed and approved before the city can proceed. Work is to be commenced within a reasonable time and prosecuted diligently. The usual charges are to be paid to the Government for timber taken and the bill fixes an annual rental to be paid the Government as compensation for the rights granted. Campers are to be restricted by only a few simple sanitary regulations, which are fully set forth and can never be amplified by the city. All regulations of the Department of the Interior and Bureau of Forestry shall be complied with by the city. The city is prohibited from ever selling to private corporations or individuals the right to sell water, thus protecting this grant from ever falling into the hands of speculators.

WHAT SAN FRANCISCO PROPOSES TO DO IN RETURN FOR THIS GRANT.

In return for this grant San Francisco proposes:

1. To adequately protect all existing irrigation rights to the waters of the Tuolumne with ample allowance for future requirements. This feature will be discussed more fully a little later.

2. To build at its own expense a magnificent system of roads and trails which will make one of the most beautiful scenic parts of the Sierra, now reached only by tedious journeys afoot or on mule back, generally accessible to the public.

3. To furnish stored water to the irrigationists over and above the amount to which they are now entitled at actual cost of storage, where the same can be spared from municipal use.

4. To furnish electric power at cost to the Modesto and Turlock irrigation districts and to municipalities situated therein.

OBJECTIONS WHICH HAVE BEEN OFFERED TO GRANT.

In seeking the grant of rights necessary to the development of its Hetch Hetchy project the city of San Francisco has endeavored to meet every objection interposed in a fair-minded way. Some of these objections, which were made in good faith by people who conscientiously believed that the grant would infringe on their rights, the city has silenced by conceding practically all that was asked. Other objections, which have been made or instigated by persons who are actuated purely by a desire to sell other projects to the city, San Francisco has been impelled to resist by force of logic.

At the hearing before the House Public Lands Committee these objections, offered by opponents to the bill, sifted down to a very few. We enumerate the more important ones:

1. That in using the Hetch Hetchy Valley as a reservoir site San Francisco will destroy a camper's paradise.

2. That the irrigation interests of the San Joaquin Valley are being insufficiently protected.

1. Taking up these objections seriatim, we find no justification for the first conclusion. It is true that if the grant is made the city will flood the floor of Hetch Hetchy Valley and destroy its availability as a camp site. But the valley floor is not particularly well adapted to camping purposes. Col. Biddle, of the Army board, in his testimony before the House committee (transcript, p. 65), says:

"The point is this: In the early summer the mosquitoes are bad and in the late summer it is too hot in the Hetch Hetchy Valley. It is about 3,000 or 4,000 feet in altitude, and the people want to go up to 6,000 or 8,000 feet."

It is a well-known fact to those who have ever visited Hetch Hetchy that the mosquitoes make the valley almost uninhabitable in the early summer, it being even necessary to wear veils for protection. With the establishment of a permanent lake in the valley, this evil will disappear. Moreover, the best part of the land which is now used for camping purposes by the two or three hundred people that venture into the valley during the entire year now belongs to the city of San Francisco in fee simple (transcript, p. 145; see also p. 63), and campers could be excluded therefrom at present if the city were inclined to take such action.

On the other hand, in return for these camping grounds which can only be used by sufferance of the city and are only suitable for that purpose during about two months of each year, the city proposes to surrender other lands owned by it outside of the valley to the Government for camping purposes. We refer to the Tiltill Valley, containing 160 acres, situated about 3 miles northeast of Hetch Hetchy; the canyon ranch of 160 acres, situated about 3 miles southwest of the valley; the Hog ranch, comprising 322.45 acres, about 8 miles southwest of the valley; and a considerable area of good camping land in the vicinity of Lake Eleanor. (Transcript, pp. 145-147.)

The board of Army engineers, on page 51 of their report, say:

"The construction of reservoirs, especially the Hetch Hetchy, will destroy a few camping grounds within the park. The construction of the proposed trails will, however, render accessible other parts of the park not now readily reached, and the number of camping places within the park is large."

2. The best answer to the cry heard from stray quarters that the irrigation interests are not being sufficiently protected is the attitude of the official representatives from those districts at Washington. The San Francisco representatives conferred with them as soon as the bill was introduced, with the result that as now amended the bill meets practically every demand they have made, and they have withdrawn the objections to it. The only substantial point the city has never conceded is the contention advanced that San Francisco should never be allowed to take one drop of water from the San Joaquin Valley watershed, because the valley might some day be able to use it. The city does not concede either the truth of the premise or the logic of the conclusion reached therefrom. Let us examine the figures and conclusions reached by the Army board.

On page 50 of their report the Army engineers find:

"That there will be sufficient water if adequately stored and economically used to supply both the reasonable demand of the bay communities and the reasonable needs of the Turlock-Modesto irrigation district for the remainder of this century."

The city of San Francisco in the proposed bill has conceded to the Modesto-Turlock irrigation district the full amount of flow of the Tuolumne to which they are legally entitled, viz, 2,350 second-feet; has allowed them to take for storage purposes during the two months of the year when the water is highest up to 4,000 second-feet of the daily flow; has agreed to sell them stored water from the city's reservoirs at cost whenever they need it; and has allowed them to increase their maximum irrigable area from 257,000 acres to 300,000 acres, so as to permit of their sharing their supply with the newly organized Waterford district. In addition to all this it has agreed to furnish both districts with hydroelectric power at absolute cost. Could anything be more equitable than this proposition? The Army board characterizes, on page 45 of its report, the proposition made by San Francisco to Secretary Fisher for protection of the irrigation districts as a "reasonable one." The present proposition goes further than that one. It is more than reasonable. It is distinctly generous, and has been so recognized by the representatives of the irrigationists, with the sole exception of those who believe San Francisco should never be allowed to use the Tuolumne watershed at all.

With reference, however, to certain telegrams which have been sent to Members of the House and Senate purporting to come from chambers of commerce of various San Joaquin Valley towns who are in nowise interested in or affected by this project, asking that the city be required to furnish them with hydroelectric power at cost as a condition of the grant, it is submitted that these requests are both unfair and impossible of fulfillment. In the first place, none of these towns have invested or ever will invest one dollar in this project; they are not asked for any concessions; their request is for a sheer gratuity which some of the more ingenious members of their councils doubtless thought that San Francisco could be compelled to give. In the second place, it is extremely problematical whether after having developed the maximum power that can be derived under this project the city will ever be able to supply more than the needs of the bay cities and the Modesto-Turlock district. Under such circumstances it is contended that these demands are unwarranted and should not be granted.

POSSIBLE ALTERNATIVE SOURCES.

While the city's engineers and the Army board made independent investigations of all alternative sources of supply which gave any promise of availability, the only ones which by any course of development could be made adequate are the four enumerated on page 50 of the Army board's report and by Col. Biddle in his testimony before the House committee. (Transcript, p. 56.) These are: (1) The Eleanor-Cherry-Stanislaus-Mokelumne source, (2) the American-Cosummes-Stanislaus-Mokelumne supply, (3) the McCloud River, (4) the Sacramento River. Very briefly we submit the fundamental and we believe insurmountable objections to each of these sources as compared with the Tuolumne.

(1-2) Each of the first two alternative projects is subject to the same objections as the Hetch Hetchy project in that they take water which some of the irrigators have claimed will be ultimately needed for development of the San Joaquin Valley. As Hetch Hetchy is eliminated as a reservoir site, it is probable that the objections of the nature lovers would be removed, although Lake Eleanor is in the Yosemite Park. From the city's standpoint the great objection is the almost prohibitive increase in cost, coupled with a much smaller power yield. Whereas the total power development of the Hetch Hetchy project is 115,000 horsepower, the maximum yield from the first alternative source is but 95,000 horsepower, and from the second alternative source but 62,000 horsepower. Owing to the necessity of purchasing outstanding water rights and building numerous dams, either of these projects would cost at least $20,000,000 more than the Hetch Hetchy, an increase which makes them practically impossible of acquisition without serious injury to San Francisco's credit. (Testimony Col. Biddle, transcript, pp. 56-59.)

(3) The McCloud River has been examined as an alternative source. This river rises at the foot of Mount Shasta and joins the Sacramento near its headwaters. While the river carries at present an ample supply of water of good quality, the following objections are deemed sufficient to preclude its adoption by San Francisco: First, its great distance from the city, over 250 miles; second, its waters will eventually be required for the irrigation of the Sacramento Valley (testimony Col. Biddle, transcript, pp. 60, 61); third, the prohibitive cost (testimony O'Shaughnessy, transcript, p. 150); fourth, the impracticability of developing any hydroelectric power from this source. The great length of aqueduct would involve nearly twice the initial outlay that is proposed for the conduct of water from the Hetch Hetchy source. It is a financial impossibility for San Francisco to undertake this project for many years to come, and she needs the water now.

(4) As a fourth alternative it has been proposed that the city pump water from the Sacramento River and filter it. This project contemplates the establishment of a pumping plant near Antioch, filtration reservoirs, and a conduit through which the water could be pumped to storage reservoirs. Even if it be conceded that the sentimental objection to the use for domestic purposes of water taken from a river into which the sewage of every valley town finds its way is without foundation and that filtration would make the water fit for use, a question which is by no means undisputed (see statement Mr. Newell, transcript, p. 49), there remain very serious objections to this source: First, the heavy operating cost of such a system; second, the impossibility of generating any power through its use; third, the probability that irrigation needs within the next century will withdraw so much water from the upper Sacramento that the high tides of the bay will mingle with the stream below Sacramento and render it unfit for use. (Testimony O'Shaughnessy, transcript, pp. 150, 151.) There are also engineering difficulties to be met with in both the McCloud and Sacramento projects, in that the water would have to be brought under the Carquinez Straits in the case of the McCloud source, and under San Francisco Bay from either source, to reach the city, unless an exceedingly long and expensive detour were made to the east. We have the further serious question raised by Col. Biddle in his testimony before the House committee (transcript, p. 55) as to whether the withdrawal of large quantities of water from the Sacramento or its tributaries would not eventually impair the navigability of the river, a question which does not arise in the case of the San Joaquin, as it is not navigable above the city of Stockton anyway.

The foregoing are the principal objections raised to the only alternative sources which either the civil or Army engineers found would furnish an adequate supply of water under any degree of development. None of them is as satisfactory as the Hetch Hetchy source; they all entail a tremendously increased investment, and at least one of them—the Sacramento project—promises to become an ultimate failure if adopted.

CONGRESS HAS THE POWER TO IMPOSE THE CONDITIONS CONTAINED IN THIS GRANT.

The question has been raised at the hearing on this bill that Congress is exceeding its powers in imposing the conditions set forth in this grant. This idea doubtless arises from a mistaken apprehension that Congress is being asked to legislate upon matters which are distinctly within the jurisdiction of the State, under guise of inserting it as a condition in a grant. Such, however, is not the case. The United States in making this grant to the city of San Francisco is not acting in its governmental capacity or exercising governmental powers. It is acting purely as a landowner, disposing of its domain upon such conditions as it sees fit to a grantee who accepts those conditions and is bound by them as a matter of contract, not as a matter of statutory regulation.

"The authority of Congress over the public lands is granted by section 3, Article IV, of the Constitution, which provides that 'the Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.' In other words, Congress is the body to which is given the power to determine the conditions upon which the public lands shall be disposed of. The Nation is the owner and has made Congress the principal agent to dispose of its property." (Butte City Water Co. v. Baker, 196 U. S., 119, 126.)

Judge Lindley, in his work on Mines, section 80, speaks of the Federal Government as the "absolute owner" of the public lands, with the power to "sell or otherwise dispose of them absolutely or conditionally, and prescribe the terms and conditions under which private individuals might acquire permanent ownership or the right to temporary enjoyment."

In support of this contention are cited:

Gibson v. Chouteau (13 Wall., 92, 99), where the Supreme Court said:

"With respect to the public domain, the Constitution vests in Congress the power of disposition and of making all needful rules and regulations. That power is subject to no limitations. Congress has the absolute right to prescribe the times, the conditions, and the mode of transferring this property, or any part of it, and to designate the persons to whom the transfer shall be made. No State legislation can interfere with this right or embarrass its exercise."

United States v. Gratiot (14 Pet., 526, 527):

This case arose over the lease of a lead mine to the defendants. The lease contained a great many clauses fixing the terms of the lease and the royalties to be paid to the Government. In a suit brought by the United States on defendant's bond, a demurrer was interposed whether Congress had acted within its powers in authorizing the President to make such a contract. In upholding the validity of the contract and bond the Supreme Court said:

"The Constitution of the United States (Art. IV, sec. 3) provides: 'That Congress shall have the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.' The term 'territory' as here used is merely descriptive of one kind of property and is equivalent to the word 'lands.' And Congress has the same power over it as over any other property belonging to the United States; and this power is vested in Congress without limitation, and has been considered the foundation upon which the Territorial governments rest."

Note the words "without limitations." The conditions may thus be imposed for the benefit of the whole country or any part thereof.

Black v. Elkhorn Mining Co. (163 U. S., 445, 448):

"Being the owner of the lands, the Government could of course impose its own terms upon which to grant any right, whether of possession or of purchase."

Light v. United States (220 U. S., 523):

This was a suit by the United States to enjoin the grazing of stock on public lands in breach of the regulations of the Department of Agriculture. The validity of the regulations as being an infringement on State rights was attacked by the defendant. The Supreme Court held, after citing with approval Butte City Water Co. v. Baker, supra:

"The United States can prohibit absolutely or fix the terms on which its property may be used. * * * All the public lands of the Nation are held in trust for the people of the whole country. And it is not for the courts to say how that trust shall be administered. That is for Congress to determine. * * *

"These are rights incident to proprietorship, to say nothing of the power of the United States as a sovereign over the property belonging to it."

There can be no question but that the foregoing cases established the right of Congress to impose such conditions as it sees fit upon a public grant. In the bill now before Congress it is asked to grant to the city of San Francisco valuable reservoir sites. As a condition to such grant it has been thought best to provide for the future protection at San Francisco's expense of the natural scenery of the Yosemite Park in the vicinity of Hetch Hetchy Valley, and for the present and future irrigation needs of the San Joaquin Valley. If, in the mind of Congress, these conditions are wise, and it sees fit to enact this grant with such conditions attached, then in accepting the grant the city of San Francisco accepts the conditions and is bound by them as a matter of contract. If the city should ever attempt to repudiate the conditions its case would not be as strong even as that of a street railway company which accepted a franchise and later attempted to repudiate the conditions thereof on the ground that they were not within the powers of the municipality which granted it. The court held:

"Even though it might be held that the condition upon which the permit or license was granted to the defendant railway company was ultra vires, the city not having the power to impose it, nevertheless the ordinance having been accepted by the company with the condition attached, agreeing thereby to perform it, it became a valid contract between it and the city, the validity of which the defendant is now estopped to deny." (Chicago General Ry. Co. v. Chicago, 176 Ill., 253.)

PRECEDENTS.

A grant of this sort, with various conditions requiring affirmative performance by the grantee, is far from being without precedent in congressional annals.

Congress has required a grantee of a permit to build a dam for water-power purposes to build fishways for protection of fish in the stream. (Act of June 21, 1906, 34 Stat., 386; act of Apr. 23, 1906, 34 Stat., 130.)

It has required the grantee in a similar permit to furnish to the Government light and power and electric current free of cost. (Act of Mar. 4, 1907, 34 Stat., 1288; act of Apr. 26, 1904, 33 Stat., 309; act of June 29, 1906, 34 Stat., 628.)

All power permits granted by the Forestry Department under authority of the act of 1901 are subject to payment of royalties to the Government by the permittee, and to various other terms and conditions.

On the authority of the foregoing cases and precedents, it is submitted that there can be no question as to the power of Congress to impose the conditions set forth in the Hetch Hetchy bill.

HETCH HETCHY AND THE CONSERVATION POLICY.

In the foregoing paragraphs we have attempted to review in a concise manner the different features of the bill now before Congress and to show briefly why each of the several conditions was inserted and what it is expected to accomplish. In conclusion we desire to survey the measure as a whole and demonstrate that it is wholly in accord with the great policy of "conserving the natural resources" to which this administration is committed.

"Conserving the natural resources." What does this phrase mean? Does it mean to lock up our forests and power sites and mineral deposits until some future time, for the use of posterity, without regard for the needs of the present generation? Or does it mean to so regulate the development of these resources that they may be put to the greatest beneficial use, may yield the maximum economic return for all the people of all generations? We incline to the latter view as being that of the Nation's leaders to-day.

Applying the "conservation" policy as above interpreted to the Hetch Hetchy project, we have to consider three classes of people to be affected: (1) The population of the San Francisco Bay communities, present and future, who sorely need water for domestic purposes; (2) the population of the San Joaquin Valley, present and future, who have irrigation interests and prospects to be protected; (3) the constantly growing number of people from all over the country who seek rest and recreation in the great Yosemite Park. How can the Hetch Hetchy Valley be developed so as to yield the maximum benefit, not to any one class of people, but to all classes? This has been the thought constantly in the minds of the legislators who have thus far considered it. The Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of Agriculture, Director of the Reclamation Service, Director of the Geological Survey, Hon. Gifford Pinchot, and Col. Biddle, president of the Board of Engineers, all examined the bill from this standpoint and testified before the House committee as to their approval of it in its present form. We quote briefly from their testimony given at the hearing before the Public Lands Committee of the House of Representatives. Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane gives as his opinion (transcript, p. 21): "In my judgment, the permission desired by the city and county of San Francisco to secure water from the Yosemite National Park for municipal purposes, etc., should be accorded. The communities on San Francisco Bay constitute the largest center of population on the Pacific coast and are urgently in need of an adequate supply of pure, wholesome water for domestic consumption and for fire protection."

Secretary of Agriculture Houston concurs (transcript, p. 22): "I examined the first draft of the bill that I saw and have examined this proposed bill, and I am in hearty accord with what the Secretary of the Interior says as to the general features. So far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned, I think that all of the interests of the Government are safeguarded in the bill."

Director George Otis Smith, of the Geological Survey, stated to the House committee (transcript, p. 35): "Hetch Hetchy Valley must eventually be made into a reservoir. Now, I believe it can be stated that the sooner that dam site is actually used—the sooner that reservoir is used—the better, under the plan as set forth in the provisions of this bill."

Mr. Henry S. Graves, Chief Forester, Department of Agriculture, expressed himself as thoroughly satisfied with the bill. (Transcript, p. 42.)

Mr. Frederick H. Newell, Director of the Reclamation Service, stated (transcript, p. 45):

"We are now fully aware that the ultimate development of the city of San Francisco will require the use of this reservoir site."

Col. Biddle, president of the Army Board of Engineers, gives as his conclusions (transcript, p. 64):

"There is no question in my mind that the Hetch Hetchy is the best water supply for San Francisco, and that it is the most economical that can be obtained; it can be obtained more promptly and is better in every way."

Gifford Pinchot, whose familiarity with the conservation policy of the Government is well known, stated his views as follows (transcript, p. 25):

"The fundamental principle of the whole conservation policy is that of use, to take every part of the land and its resources and put it to that use in which it will best serve the most people, and I think there can be no question at all but in this case we have an instance in which all weighty considerations demand the passage of the bill."

The development of the Hetch Hetchy project in the manner now proposed represents the highest beneficial use to which this magnificent dam site could be put. The domestic needs of more than 700,000 people, a population which Prof. Marx, of Stanford University, estimates will be 3,000,000 by the end of the century, will be served with pure cold water. The irrigation needs of all that part of San Joaquin Valley which is reasonably tributary to the Tuolumne will be adequately protected for all time. A comparatively inaccessible portion of the beautiful Yosemite Park will be made easy of access to the nature-loving public. The largest possible amount of hydroelectric power is to be developed and distributed to the parties directly interested, making possible a higher development of agricultural and municipal resources. The Government will receive a handsome revenue from the annual rentals, which is to be devoted to further improvement of the Yosemite Park. This is indeed true conservation.

The sole uncertainty which has been presented is whether, if every drop of water in the Tuolumne River is conserved, there will not some day be a shortage in water for the needs of portions of the San Joaquin Valley not protected by this bill, and which might by the construction of expensive irrigation works ultimately use it. What the rainfall in California will be during the next hundred years we can not accurately predict. If it is going to prove insufficient for the needs of all the people of the State, then it will have to be pro rated. But, as Mr. O'Shaughnessy pointed out to the House committee in his testimony (transcript, pp. 151, 152), the irrigationists have not demonstrated that there is likelihood of shortage, as they have not yet begun to use the natural sites available for storage dams on adjoining rivers, such as the Merced, and much water is annually going to waste.

The objections which have been put forward so earnestly by the opponents to the measure from irrigation sections are objections which go to every single source of supply which has been proposed for San Francisco. They have not been forced upon the committee by citizens and chambers of commerce from sections of the State adjacent to other sources, because San Francisco is not now seeking to use those sources. Let her seriously undertake to use the Mokelumne or the McCloud or any other source except possibly the lower Sacramento, and the cry will come just as loud from the citizens and chambers of commerce of those districts. And with respect to the lower Sacramento it has been already shown that the advance of the tidal stream resultant upon the withdrawal of water for irrigation is going to render that source unfit for drinking purposes within the century, and that the withdrawal of quantities of water for municipal purposes in addition to that needed for irrigation may interfere with navigation.

The question still remains. Is the ever-growing urban population of the bay cities to be deprived of pure water—a real, present necessity of life—in order that a few acres of arid land far distant from any river may some day receive intensive cultivation? We can not think that true conservation dictates such a policy. Perhaps the only true answer was the suggestion made last fall to Secretary Fisher by an ardent nature lover, that San Francisco might use the waters of the Pacific Ocean, but we trust that Congress is not going to limit the city to that supply.

NEED FOR PRESENT ACTION.

Many attempts have been made by opponents of this measure to delay action until the December session. We submit that nothing can be gained by delay. Every possible objection that can be raised to the acquisition by San Francisco of the Tuolumne supply has been raised during the past 10 years. They are to be found set forth in full in the transcript of the proceedings before Secretaries Ballinger and Fisher and before the House committee at this session. The answer to them is in the report of the board of Army engineers—San Francisco is willing to submit its case on that alone. But San Francisco urges immediate action. Her people need water, and the need grows every year. Her growth is restricted because outlying districts can not be supplied. The Spring Valley Water Co. is not only refusing to make extensions and take on new consumers, but is advertising to its present customers that a water famine is imminent, and that they must use water economically. If action is had now on this bill a whole year will be saved; the city can go to work at once on this project. If action is delayed until December the winter's snows will make it impossible to do any work until next summer. A year's delay may have serious consequences. Nearly 1 per cent of the people of the United States are petitioning this Congress for relief. They trust that their petition will not go unheard.

Respectfully submitted,

PERCY V. LONG,
City Attorney, City and County of San Francisco.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment? I am obliged to leave the Chamber, and I have here a telegram relating to this matter that I should like to have read so that it may be printed in the Record.

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I am very much obliged to the Senator. I send the telegram to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the telegram.

The Secretary read as follows:

NORTH YAKIMA, WASH., October 3, 1913.

Senator WESLEY L. JONES, Washington, D. C.:

The 5,000 club women citizens of the State of Washington protest, through their executive board, against the despoliation of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, believing that it is to the interest of the country as a whole that such scenic places be preserved.

RUTH KARR MCKEE,

President Washington State Federation Women's Clubs.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, referring to the question asked by the Senator from Idaho as to whether or not there has been any investigation of the treatment of the irrigationists along the Tuolumne River, I wish to say that while the Public Lands Committee of the House were considering this question there were present at all times, participating in that work and giving their testimony, five duly appointed and elected representatives of the people of these irrigable lands. They were Judge Fulkerth, Mr. Jones, Mr. Griffith, and two engineers. At the time this bill was being prepared by the Public Lands Committee of the House Mr. CHURCH, Congressman from California, from this very district, was there representing the irrigationists. At the same time ex-Congressman Needham, who holds an office in that district to-day, I believe, and who is a member of the Republican Party, was also present before the committee, representing the interests of the irrigationists. The report contains a statement by Mr. Needham before the House committee in which he approves of this bill, and states that those representing San Francisco have been entirely fair and entirely courteous to the people who are interested in irrigation.

I wish to call attention to the fact that when this matter last came before the Public Lands Committee of the Senate, only three or four days ago, these matters were again given careful consideration. A gentleman from California, Judge Le Hane, then came before the committee, claiming to represent some dissatisfied irrigationists, and protested against the bill on the ground that the land subject to irrigation by these waters had not been properly protected in the bill. He asked the Committee on Public Lands to deny to San Francisco or the bay cities the right to build a dam at Hetch Hetchy or to utilize any of the water of the Tuolumne River.

There were present at that time ex-Congressman Needham and Congressman CHURCH; Mr. CHURCH as the Representative in Congress from such district and Mr. Needham as the duly accredited representative of the water users of the same district. Judge Le Hane was answered by Congressman CHURCH, who stated that the people of the district living where this water might be used for irrigation were all in favor of the bill; that it was a great benefit to them instead of a damage; that all of the water to which they were legally entitled in the Tuolumne River was guaranteed to them by the bill; and more than that that the bill provided for saving the flood waters of the Tuolumne River, which could be saved only by this dam. That by such means alone could such flood waters be made available for them at a period of time of drought or at the end of the season when in greatest demand.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. LANE. I do not wish to interfere with the proceedings in any way; but yesterday I received a letter from some gentlemen who said that a large body of land in the San Joaquin Valley under this water, which could be irrigated by it, and who protested against the bill on the ground that such lands will be deprived of water for irrigation purposes. I call attention to the fact that a protest has been filed on that ground. I will send over to my office and get it now.

Mr. PITTMAN. Never mind about it; I do not care about the letter. I do not doubt that there have been thousands of letters of that kind written by individuals who know nothing of the facts.

As I say, Judge Le Hane was here before the committee. Who did he represent? Why, Judge Le Hane wanted the opportunity to sell real estate down in that community, and he told us so. That is what he wanted to do.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nevada will permit me, I wish to state in that connection that the statement of Judge Le Hane before the committee impressed me very much, because he was there evidently representing the farmers of the valleys that were dependent upon this stream for their water. I therefore made several inquiries of him during the course of his statement, one of which, and I think the first, was whether any water filings or diversions of water from this stream or any of its tributaries under the laws of California, or under the laws of the United States, or both, had been made prior to the filings of the city of San Francisco, which had not been taken care of in the allotment of water that the bill provides for these two great irrigation districts. His reply was that no such legal right existed, but that those whom he represented felt that they had a moral right to the use of waters upon that watershed for the reclamation of such lands as might afterwards be brought under cultivation. I asked him if he had any right which was not susceptible of enforcement under the laws of the State of California under the last section of the bill, and he said, "None whatever."

Mr. President, it is A B C irrigation law in the arid West that appropriations, in order to be valid, must be made by legal locations, and followed by diversion and the application of the water to some substantial beneficial use. I gathered from what this gentleman said—and he answered very candidly—that in his opinion the only thing which had been overlooked in the preparation of the bill, as affecting the users of water rights along the proposed line of way, was that there were potentialities that might be developed through the subsequent location and diversion of the flood waters of this basin, all of which belong to San Francisco under previous filings which have been made in legal form. Consequently, I do not see that there is anything which the bill does not cover and provide against that has not been the subject of the fullest and most complete investigation.

I thank the Senator from Nevada for permitting me to make that statement.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. When this telegram from the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] was placed in my possession, of course I felt that it was my duty to give it to the Senate. In doing so I did not mean to intimate that the Public Lands Committee had not done its full duty. I know that that committee is composed of some of the most painstaking and accurate investigators in the Senate. But it did occur to me that possibly there was one thing in the telegram which the committee had not had an opportunity to investigate, and for that reason I asked the question if the committee had had an opportunity to know whether the committee representing or purporting to represent the farmers had, to use the exact language of the telegram, betrayed their interests. I do not know the gentlemen who represented the farmers; they may be men of unimpeachable character and standing; but that is the intimation in the telegram. That, of course, is an important matter to all parties. If there has been fraud, it will be contested some time and likely to the detriment of all parties. My judgment would be that we ought to be sure that nothing of that kind can be justly charged should this measure become a law.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me?

Mr. PITTMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. NORRIS. I asked the Senator to yield because Mr. Lehane, who appeared before the committee, is a personal acquaintance and friend of mine. He formerly lived in my State. I was glad to hear the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] speak in the terms he did speak of Mr. Le Hane. I think he impressed the committee as being a very fair man.

Mr. THOMAS. He certainly so impressed me.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the reason why I want to state here, with the permission of the Senator from Nevada, that when this bill was brought forth there was a claim on the part of certain irrigation companies that they were entitled to certain water. Mr. Le Hane is a member of one of those irrigation companies. Those companies were represented in the consideration of the bill originally before the House by Mr. Needham, who was formerly their Representative in Congress. He is now a private citizen, and was here representing those irrigation companies. The committee of the House in charge of the bill in drawing it so adjusted it as to make it satisfactory to Mr. Needham in his representative capacity as representing those irrigation companies.

There was a contest as to whether the bill should specifically give to those irrigation societies the water that they were entitled to under the laws of California or whether it should say nothing about it and let them have those rights that we could not take away from them if we wanted to do so. But they insisted through their representative there, I understand, that they should be specifically named and taken care of in the bill, and that was done in a manner entirely satisfactory to their representative.

Now, Mr. Le Hane, one of the members of one of those companies, is taking this view of the situation, that while they were given under the bill everything that they had filed or had any legal claim or right to, if in the future there were lands there that could not be irrigated by the irrigation companies now in force they could be irrigated if they had use of all the water that would be taken to San Francisco; and he appeared rather in behalf of those people, himself among the number. They want this water, as they specifically asked the committee. They said: "Instead of giving it to San Francisco give us the water and let us build the dam; let us develop the power and use the water for irrigation." He made no claims that they were not getting under the bill everything that they were entitled to—in other words, that their legal rights were not preserved—but said that they could, by developing some other land now undeveloped and using more on the land that is entirely developed, use this water; and they would prefer to do that rather than to have it go to San Francisco. I submit to the Senator that that was about the position of Mr. Le Hane in the matter. It may be different, but, as I understand it, this telegram from the junior Senator from California refers to those same people; it refers to the same class of people whom Mr. Le Hane represented at that time.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to say, with the permission of the Senator from Nevada, that I have not been in the Senate a great while, but I have been here something over four years and I have never known when a request was made by a Senator from a State which is affected by a bill and that Senator is absent and asks that it be not considered until he can get back that such a request has been denied.

Not only was such a request made by the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], but the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who was until the 4th of last March the chairman of the committee that reports this bill, is absent from the city and he desires to be present when it is heard. For the first time in my short service here has such a request been ignored by the Senate, and I can not understand why this request is not heeded.

Mr. NORRIS. I can tell the Senator why. Personally, I have no objection to postponing it as far as I am concerned, although I voted to consider it. If I understand the telegram of the junior Senator from California, he referred in his telegram to men who have no legal right involved in this bill, men who are not even organized into an irrigation district, men who have made no filing, who have not taken any steps to get the water, who have not any legal claim to it, and if we gave them all they wanted it would be a question whether we should use the water to let people drink or have for domestic use or whether we should use it for irrigation. They have not any legal filing.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me ask the Senator from Nebraska, through the kindness and courtesy of the Senator from Nevada—

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator from Nebraska were in Nebraska and there was a bill pending here affecting the State of Nebraska, and he should send a telegram here asking that its consideration be deferred until he could be heard, does not the Senator think it would be a courtesy to him for the Senate to grant his request?

Mr. NORRIS. I think it would be, and it would be a courtesy to the Senator from California, as the Senator from Kansas knows. I do not think there can be any doubt about this proposition.

The Senator from California in his telegram is referring to something that, even if he were here, could not possibly make any difference with this bill one way or the other. These men who are unorganized, who have no legal claim to the water, who have made no filing during all these years that this has been under consideration, have never before until the last days that the bill was before the Senate committee made any protest or any claim of any kind. Mr. Le Hane very fairly and squarely stated that he had no legal right; but he said, "We can get our men together, we can organize, and we can use this water; let us have it." In the first place, the committee hearing had been had, the bill had been really passed upon by the committee, and at the very last minute somebody comes in who has no claim, and no one will contend that he has any, and says, "We would like to have this water."

Mr. LANE. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me to make a suggestion to the Senator from Nebraska?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will yield.

Mr. LANE. Thank you. If we now give the possession of the entire water flow from that stream to some one else, the people who own the land down the stream—two or three hundred thousand acres—

Mr. NORRIS. The land is not in there.

Mr. LANE. The land, I understand, is in there.

Mr. NORRIS. The land is practically as far away from it as San Francisco—perhaps not so far.

Mr. LANE. The land has not been moved.

Mr. NORRIS. No; the land has not been moved.

Mr. LANE. That is what I understood. The people who own the land in San Joaquin Valley could make use of this water, and if they do not secure the right to use the water, if they have not filed now, and it is given away to somebody else before they can file on it, they will be fixed so that they never can get possession of it.

Mr. NORRIS. No; there is not enough to supply everybody. Under all the laws relating to irrigation, assuming that the application they want to make of the water is the same, the one who files has the prior right; and, as between the domestic use for water and the use for irrigation, I think the Senator would admit at once that we should use it for domestic purposes.

Mr. LANE. If the Senator pleases, I am not questioning that. I was just making a suggestion.

Mr. NORRIS. There is another thing the Senator ought to consider. Although I have not gone into that phase of it, I think the preponderance of everything I have heard in regard to it is that if for the purpose of using this water for irrigation purposes they went into the work that San Francisco is to go into, and must under this bill, and build this dam, it would cost more than they could possibly pay. If these farmers could raise sufficient money to build this dam, they could, of course, get their money back by the sale of power; but I believe any fair-minded man who has given it consideration will admit that they would not be able to raise the money that San Francisco can raise to build this enormous dam and do the other work which the bill provides they must do.

Mr. LANE. If the Senator pleases, the point I was trying to make, and to which I want to call his attention, was this: If some one files a prior right and takes up all the water from the stream to convey some place down on his private property, naturally that will deprive all persons above him and below the head of the stream; and will the Senator say that is not an unfair proposition at all? If you want to say that it is more necessary to bring it to San Francisco for domestic purposes than for agricultural purposes, that is a different proposition; but I do not see the philosophy of the point the Senator is making.

Mr. NORRIS. On the other proposition I do not believe there has been anyone except Mr. Le Hane who has ever claimed it, because he said we would not spend as much money to build this dam and we would not do a good many things that San Francisco provides for. These men are now unorganized; they have no claim to the water; they own no desert land; and if they had to raise the money on the land it is absolutely out of the question, I think. I do not believe any man who gives any consideration to it for a minute will agree that they could do it, and hence they could not develop the proposition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska why they could not do it?

Mr. NORRIS. An irrigation district, in order to raise the money to do it, would bond the land; and to raise the necessary funds to make the improvement provided for in this bill they would have to bond that land for a great many times more than it is worth.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I suppose the Senator draws his conclusion very largely upon the estimate of the cost of the dam?

Mr. NORRIS. Not only the cost of the dam, but the other things provided in the bill which they have to do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I ask the Senator what the dam would cost, according to his estimate?

Mr. NORRIS. There are various estimates.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, whether or not the land owners could build the dam, it would seem, would depend in a very material degree on the cost. I am informed that the dam could be built at much less cost than the estimates here.

Mr. NORRIS. Probably it can not. The engineers' estimate put it away beyond that of these people for practical use. There are a great many other things in the bill that have to be done. If you turn it over to these people and say you do not have to build the kind of a dam the bill provides for and do not have to be careful, but may build some cheaper affair, and not have the dam of the same color as the surrounding rock, of course it can be built for less money; but San Francisco will build on certain plans and specifications laid down in the bill. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator in his last statement anticipated what I rose to say.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was very glad to have the statement the Senator gave. I think his statement of Judge Le Hane's position was correct. When I said he wanted to make a real-estate matter out of it I meant just exactly that. Mr. Le Hane, in reply to a question I asked him, admitted that they had no legal method of depriving San Francisco of the water of the Tuolumne which they were to store in Hetch Hetchy; that they had no legal way to obtain any more water than was granted them in this bill. Then I said to Mr. Le Hane, "What you want us to do is to prohibit San Francisco from building a dam and thus prevent the use of the water that they themselves own, to the end that they will lose their water rights." He said, "Well, we want it ourselves, and if that is the result of it we want it." So the whole result of Judge Le Hane's attempt was to obtain the assistance of Congress to deprive San Francisco of a legal water right by placing them in a position where they could not use that water for the purposes for which they acquired it. Remember that all the water rights that are owned by those irrigationists are protected in this bill. The only persons who are complaining are men like Judge Le Hane, who want more than they are legally entitled to.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator yield to me just a minute to read into the RECORD the telegrams I have mentioned, and then I will not interrupt him any further?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. It was asked from the floor that they be read. I find there is in response to an inquiry from me a telegram from the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], which reads:

SALT LAKE, UTAH, October 1, 1913.

Senator H. L. MYERS,
Washington, D. C.:

I can not reach Washington before October 12.

REED SMOOT.

That was in answer to a telegram from me asking him to state if he insisted still that action be put off until he could return, and if so, to name the date of his return. A prior telegram from the Senator from Utah, intended for the committee only, was laid before the committee and read at the last meeting of the committee and was by it taken into consideration.

The first telegram that I received from the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] is sent from Coronado, Cal., which I will read:

CORONADO, CAL., October 1, 1913.

Hon. HENRY L. MYERS,
Chairman Public Lands Committee, Washington, D. C.:

Postpone action on Hetch Hetchy bill until you hear from me further. Will wire you again to-morrow. Bill should not pass without further hearing on its merits.

JOHN D. WORKS.

The second telegram that I received from him was from the same place. It reads:

CORONADO, CAL., October 2, 1913.

Hon. HENRY L. MYERS,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

I have satisfied myself that Hetch Hetchy bill should not pass without further investigation. Ninety-nine per cent of water users in the Irrigation districts are strongly opposed to it and claim that they were betrayed by those who consented to the compromise measure. They claim that thousands of acres of land in their districts and outside of them will be deprived of water to which they are entitled and that they can show that this sacrifice of the best and most fertile lands in the State is unnecessary in the interest of San Francisco. Because of the compromise, that they indignantly repudiate, this phase of the question has not been investigated. The bill should not be rushed through at this session under such circumstances. It is too serious not only to the parties directly interested but to the whole State.

JOHN D. WORKS.

I will say in comment on this last telegram that the statement that the water users in certain irrigation districts, those who use the water agriculturally for irrigation, have not been heard is incorrect and it was made by the junior Senator from California under a misapprehension, if I correctly interpret his telegram. Those people at the last meeting of the Public Lands Committee were represented by Judge Le Hane, of California, who came on here for that purpose. He made a very masterly, clear, and concise presentation of their claims and argument in their behalf, which was listened to very carefully and patiently by the Senate Public Lands Committee and given full consideration in determining its action. The junior Senator from California was evidently not aware of that when he sent his last telegram, but those gentlemen have been represented and fully heard before the Senate committee. It is true that Mr. Le Hane in his talk before the committee made some allusion to the action of a delegation that came on here and appeared before the House committee in consenting to a compromise without authority and thereby betraying his people, but that was all explained by him and taken into consideration, and he himself repudiated such action and made a strong and plausible argument before the committee. So that the committee feels that the irrigationists referred to had a full hearing and were given thorough consideration.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, as between the use of water for the irrigation of land that has no right to the water and the use of water for domestic purposes by the millions of people who are surrounding San Francisco Bay there can be no ground for debate. And remember that this bill grants to those irrigationists everything that they are entitled to and everything that their representative asked.

The only thing now that is being contended for is that those who have no right to the water should be given the water for the purpose of irrigation, and those who have a right to it in San Francisco should be deprived of that right for the purpose of granting it to those who desire it for irrigation. I contend that if there is water there that was not even disposed of, and there was any way for Congress to dispose of it, which of course there is not, because the States have the sole right of disposition of that water, and it was up to Congress to decide whether such surplus water should go to the irrigation of 200,000 acres more of land not at the present time inhabited by any human being, or whether it should go to those people who have been paying the most outrageous water rates to one of the most outrageous water monopolies that ever existed, whether it should go to aid a real-estate project in the irrigation of 200,000 acres of land, or whether it should go to 2,000,000 people for the purpose of relieving them of a water famine and the grasp of a monopoly. I say there would be no question as to what Congress should do.

Now, then, these people come to us who have no interest in that water, who have no right to that water, who never sought heretofore to use that water, and simply say: "We have got land out in that country that we can irrigate; therefore we want you to prohibit San Francisco from building a dam up in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and thereby cause them to lose the water that they have acquired for the benefit of millions of people." I do not know that there is any higher or better use that water could be put to than to carry it to those millions of people who have been suffering under the grasp of that monopoly.

I happened to be in the City of San Francisco in 1906 when that great catastrophe came. I was there when the earth was shaken by that terrible quake. I saw the fire break out all over that city and sweep from one end of it to another. I saw homes crumble and swept away as the wind might blow away a stack of cards. I saw women with children at their breasts filling those parks.

I saw the hillside covered by homeless people. I saw such suffering as I never expect to see again, and I know that a lot of it was caused by reason of the inefficient system of water that was being supplied to the people of San Francisco. I know it was largely due to the greed of that water monopoly in its efforts to spend as little as possible and to grasp just as much as possible, and I never want to see such a condition again exist in any city. Those are the conditions that exist in that city.

I hope to see the time when every city in this country will own its own water supply of the purest and the best that this country can possibly furnish to its people, and that the charges for such use will permit everybody, no matter how poor, to enjoy this necessity of life.

I want to read the names of some of the men and some of those institutions that indorse this bill, but before I do that, and before the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Bristow] leaves the Chamber, I want to refer to what he said. He says he never knew of an occasion when a Senator refused to delay a hearing of this kind at the request of another Senator. I think that the conditions existing at the present time are an exception. Every opportunity has been given to the junior Senator from California to present these facts to the committee. Right now when he should be on the floor of the Senate, if he has the complaint that his telegram would indicate, he is back in the State of California, from which point he telegraphs us to stop legislation without even giving us a hint when he will return here for the purpose of attending to his official duties. He is a member of the Public Lands Committee of the Senate; he has heard all the testimony; he should have read all the reports. I want to ask these gentlemen if a motion was made for a continuance of a case on such a flimsy showing as that whether there would be any ground for postponing it for one minute?

I should like to accommodate the Senator from Kansas; I should like to accommodate the Senator from California; but when it comes down to a question of accommodating a Senator just simply to please him, without any just ground, when such accommodation is going to work an injury and a hardship on nearly half of the people of a great State whom he was elected to represent, I am compelled to withhold my consent on such ground.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator from Nevada inform the Senate as to the probable time contemplated before this water will be used by the people of San Francisco?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is very probable that if every delay were permitted on the ground of such telegrams as we have received, long after the Senator and I have died the water would still not be in use. I want to say that for 12 long years that water has not been in use, and yet during all that time the people have been trying to get this thing started and they have been obstructed on every hand.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator misunderstood my question. Has it not been stated here by Mr. Freeman, the chief engineer of the city, that it is not expected that they will get any supply of water from the Hetch Hetchy Valley before 1915?

Mr. PITTMAN. I want to state this to the Senator: I realize that they can not build a great water system in a day, but it must occur that every postponement delays the beginning of those operations just that much. The same argument might have been made by the Senator four years ago. He might have asked then what is the need of crowding this matter; it will take four years to build it; and here again the same argument is used, and time and time again it is crowded off by more important matters; matters of national importance. Here and now we have an occasion when there is no other bill pressing, and I think it is our duty to occupy the time of the Senate on such occasions to put through bills like this. When this bill passes, I understand, there will be a portion of the $45,000,000, which can be utilized for the purpose of repairing and extending the present water system. It is greatly needed. Therefore, to that extent an emergency exists.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will pardon me for another interruption I will not interrupt him again. It is true, is it not, that the people of San Francisco or any of the bay people who will use this water do not expect to get any supply of water from the Hetch Hetchy before 1915?

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, no; but the passage of this bill grants to them an immediate remedy, such as I have stated, which remedy they can not avail themselves of until this bill passes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Nevada has alluded to the fact that the junior Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] was himself a member of the Committee on Public Lands and was present at a part of the hearings. What was the report of the committee? Was it unanimous? If not, what proportion of the committee favored this measure and what proportion opposed it?

Mr. PITTMAN. The report of the committee was unanimous, I believe, so far as those who were present were concerned.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There are no views of the minority, or what we call a minority report?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; there was no vote against the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There was no vote against it? Was there a roll call in the committee?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; it was a viva voce vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And there were no votes against it? That is equivalent to a unanimous report.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is equivalent to a unanimous report.

Mr. President, I want to branch off just for a minute to another phase of this matter. I have called attention to those men who seem to be the principal movers against this bill in this country. They are men who base their fight, not on the ground that it will take the water away from irrigation, but on the ground that it will destroy a great national park. Let me state right here, in answer to that argument, that I have a Government map here [exhibiting] of the Yosemite National Park, which shows that there are 719,622 acres of land in that park. This Government map also shows the Hetch Hetchy Valley and the amount of land that will be submerged by the dam. The amount of land that will be submerged by the dam and by the lake that will be created by the dam will be 1,330 acres. One thousand three hundred and thirty acres will be submerged by water, and, as I have stated, there are 719,622 acres in the park.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Can the Senator from Nevada tell me how many acres there are in the so-called Rock Creek Park here?

Mr. PITTMAN. No, I can not; but I should judge there are about 1,000 acres in it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to get an idea as to its extent, if I could.

Mr. PITTMAN. In other words, Yosemite National Park is about 700 times as big as is Rock Creek Park.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, Mr. President, I will ask the Senator, is any Senator here claiming that this would be a serious invasion upon the Yosemite National Park? Has anybody made that argument on this floor?

Mr. PITTMAN. Not yet; there has been no argument made and I do not know what argument will be made, if the Senator please. The only argument that has been made by anyone against the bill, mind you, has been by the gentlemen whom I have mentioned, who place their opposition upon the ground of the injury to a national park, and Judge Le Hane, whose objections have already been stated—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Far be it from me to make any suggestions to the Senator, because he understands his business, and he needs none from me, but I will simply take this occasion, if the Senator will pardon me for saying so, to state that I have been through the Yosemite National Park years ago and I am perfectly familiar with what a magnificent valley it is. I do not regard the proposed flooding of this small portion of the park, picturesque as it may be, as any serious invasion of either the natural beauties of the park or of its public utility; and I am inclined to think that a great deal of the natural, patriotic feeling that exists in behalf of protecting our national parks and the scenic beauties of this country is being taken advantage of by well-meaning but mistaken people to oppose this proposition, which I think is a meritorious one and is one in the interest of the welfare of human beings and of a large section of the country, and that the opposition to it is largely mistaken. While I voted against proceeding to the consideration of this bill at this time because I thought the situation was such that we possibly would wind up with the absence of a quorum in the end, as there is opposition to the measure, still if it comes to a question on the passage of the bill I shall vote for its passage. I think it is a wise and proper measure, and I for one do not propose to be stampeded or to be in any way—I will not use such harsh terms as “bulldozed” or “boycotted”—but I do not propose to be influenced against my own judgment on subjects of this kind by any cry, no matter in what lofty or commendable interest it is raised, if I think it is mistaken in the particular case.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I fully agree with the views expressed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], but there is an intimation in his suggestion that somebody who is opposed to this bill has been stampeded or bulldozed. I have not seen a “nature fakir,” as they call them—which is, I understand, a term which means a nature lover—since this investigation began, and I have not been in communication with a single one of them. The only men who have thoroughly presented this matter to me have been those who are in favor of the measure; and I am frank to say that they have impressed me a great deal with their views and with the justice of their cause; but that, Mr. President, ought not to preclude a Senator from making his own investigation without having the imputation left upon the situation that these men have unduly controlled his judgment. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not get the view that those of us who want to know the facts before the bill is passed have come under the improper influence of those men who are truly impressed with the scenic display of the Yosemite Park.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I rarely have seen the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who usually stands squarely on his feet, with a mind conscious of rectitude, so thin-skinned and sensitive about a remark that was purely general and not cast with any significant or sinister slant in the direction of Idaho or of the position where the Senator sits. I think the Senator from Idaho, if he needs any certificate of character or of bravery from anybody—and I know he does not—would be almost the last man, I think—modesty prevents me from saying the “very last,” but among the last—in this Senate that anybody would approach with the idea that he could secure the attendance of the Senator upon any ground where the Senator did not desire to stand.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not sensitive, but I do not want to hazard the esteem of the Senator from Connecticut; hence I seemed perhaps unduly sensitive.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, when interrupted I was calling attention to the infinitesimal portion of this national park that this bill provides shall be used in the storing of this water for San Francisco. To be exact, there are in the Yosemite National Park 1,124 square miles, or 719,622 acres. If San Francisco is given the right to build a dam in the Hetch Hetchy Valley, it will flood 1,330 acres of the bottom of the valley. San Francisco already owns one-half of the floor of the valley that will be flooded. It is exchanging for the other half of that 1,330 acres more land in the national park that it owns in fee in lieu of that land. The land that it is exchanging is situated at various points which afford good camping spots for anyone desiring to go and visit that national park. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to the fact that I do not think that he was ever in the Hetch Hetchy Valley.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Nevada is correct about that.

Mr. PITTMAN. The reason I said that is this: There are not over a dozen people a year who go into Hetch Hetchy Valley. Hetch Hetchy Valley is not in the Yosemite Valley at all; it is in this national park, which includes nearly 1,500 square miles of territory. It is in the Sierra Nevada Mountain Range, north of the Yosemite Valley. It is no part of that great, beautiful Yosemite Valley; it is no part of the valley that contains such wonders of scenic beauty—the valley that gave the name to that whole national park. It never came into notice—in fact, its existence was not recognized—until the engineers, looking for an adequate water supply for the municipality of San Francisco and the other municipalities around the bay, discovered this little, narrow valley with its precipitous mountains. Then it was that San Francisco acquired the land in this little valley, with the exception of a few hundred acres. Now they come to the Government, and they ask what? They ask no grant of water; they ask no gift of land. They say: “Exchange seven hundred and odd acres of land with us for three or four times that much land in other parts of the park, land that is more valuable than the land that you are trading us and far better situated; permit us to build a dam, so as to make a lake upon our land; give us a right of way—that is all we ask—to carry this water to the people who need it for domestic purposes throughout that great State.” That is all they have asked.

Do you believe that the people of this country, who have become interested in this matter because of all the letters which have been sent out by Mr. Underwood Johnson and Mr. Parsons, understand the situation? Do you believe that they know that the beautiful Yosemite Valley is not touched by this project at all? Do you believe that they know that only 1,300 acres of land out of 719,000 acres are to be used in this project?

Mr. Parsons comes before the Senate Public Lands Committee and says: “But it injures the peculiar beauty of that little valley." He says, "One of the especial beauties of that little valley is the peculiar growth of its flora, the intermixture of ferns, with here and there a scattered oak tree. That," he says, "adds immensely to its beauty, and its destruction would be a national calamity." He says, "Now if you go there everything is natural and wild; but if you put a lake there where to-day they have ferns you will destroy the nature sounds," meaning the sounds, probably, of some animal that might have inhabited the floor of that valley. When it was called to his attention that two members of the Army boards sent out to investigate that proposition believed that the lake would add to the beauty of Hetch Hetchy Valley, he answered by saying that there were many other beautiful lakes in the park, and that it was thought having one valley full of ferns would be more beautiful than if there was a lake there.

Some of the greatest landscape artists have contended that that valley would be more beautiful with a lake than it is to-day. Here [exhibiting] is a picture of Hetch Hetchy Valley as it exists to-day. There [exhibiting] is a picture of the valley with the lake in it. Mr. Keith, of California, one of the greatest landscape artists of this country, made a painting of that valley, and in that painting he placed a lake, just as shown on this picture [indicating].

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Can the Senator designate, so that we can know where the waterfalls are situated, which it is said would be affected by the lake?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir. The water line, being at 200 feet, will make the surface of the lake—

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is mistaken about the water line being 200 feet; it is 300 feet, is it not?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I beg pardon. It is 300 feet. The water line at 300 feet, the line as marked upon the map, will cause the surface of the lake to be over 100 feet below the base of the water fall.

Mr. BORAH. How far is it from the point of the falls to the water which will be in the lake when the lake is formed? How far does the water fall?

Mr. PITTMAN. The water falls in one of those cataracts 800 or 900 feet, but it strikes the rocks 100 feet or more above where the surface of the lake will be when raised to its highest point by the proposed dam.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have seen it stated somewhere, stating it roughly, that the floor of the Hetch Hetchy Valley is some 3,500 feet above sea level, or something like that.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And that the precipices which form the sides of the chasm or valley are some 2,000 feet above the floor of the chasm. Is that correct?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator mean that after the dam is constructed and the lake is formed the surface of the water will be only 300 feet above the floor of the present chasm?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. So that there would still be left 1,700 feet of sheer precipice of wall out of the 2,000 feet?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; and the difference in height would not be appreciable to the eye.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Under the restrictions of this bill, how close will the tourist or the observer be able to get to the brink of this precipice, or from what point in the country could he get a view of the lake which is to be formed?

Mr. PITTMAN. I thank the Senator for that inquiry, as it brings up a very natural subject. The Senator from Connecticut has been in the Yosemite Valley, but he never was in the Hetch Hetchy Valley, because—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not claim to have been. The Hetch Hetchy Valley, I assume, is in the Yosemite National Park, but I have not been in that valley at all.

Mr. PITTMAN. The reason why the Senator could not get there, and the reason why he was not taken there, is the same reason why probably only a dozen people in a year ever see it; and that is, that it is about 30 miles north of the Yosemite Valley and separated by a precipitous mountain range of barren granite, rising to an altitude of 8,500 feet. The Hetch Hetchy Valley to-day is a pleasure to no one, except to a few venture-some spirits who may climb across those rocks for the purpose of looking down into it. Even Mr. Underwood Johnson, who has been describing the beauties of that valley, admitted before the Public Lands Committee of the Senate that he had never seen it; that the nearest he had ever been to it was 10 or 15 or 20 miles away. We want that valley accessible to all people, and this bill provides that it shall be made accessible. It provides that the grantee under this bill shall build such roads and boulevards as will allow the people of all this country to get into the valley with wagons or automobiles, by foot or on horseback; to go up the boulevards to the top of those peaks, which are 8,500 feet high, drive around the border of that lake, and see all the beauties of that great national park, which to-day are reserved for those who have unlimited time and means to participate in such explorations.

This bill provides for the building of these roads; and, mind you, not only does it provide for the building of roads, but it provides that the grantee shall pay to the Government a specific sum of money to keep these roads in eternal repair. That sum of money will eventually amount to something like a million and odd dollars, if not more. After five years they commence to donate to the Government for 10 years $15,000 a year for this work, for the next 10 years $20,000, and from that time on $30,000 a year for the purpose of keeping these roads in repair and for the purpose of keeping that park protected and in such a condition that it will be accessible to and can be enjoyed by others than mountain climbers.

Is not that a great benefit to the people of this country? Is there any reason why anybody should object to or fight that proposition? Yet the literature with which we are being flooded is based solely on the ground that the national park is going to be destroyed. It is true that they come back to you and say, "The principle is wrong; you should not allow any part of a great national park to be used for any purpose other than to go and visit it." There must be exceptions to a principle of that kind; in fact, there is hardly a principle on earth to which there is not an exception. Is this not an exceptional case? Is it not a case where the city of San Francisco owns nearly all the land it desires to flood, and it is going to give up other land in that same national park for a little more land to be flooded by this water? Is it not an exceptional case when this valley to-day is practically inaccessible and is going to be made accessible at the expense of the grantee of this right? It seems to me that it is an exceptional case.

Eliminating, just for the sake of argument and for the time being, the millions of people who live around San Francisco Bay, but considering all the people of California, considering all the people of this country who have the time and the means to visit that great national park, will they be benefited or will they be injured by the work that is to take place under this bill? At the present time they can never see the Hetch Hetchy Valley; at the present time they can not make their way into any except the Yosemite Valley. When this bill becomes a law they will have access by great boulevards to every point in that great national forest, and the Government will be given a fund, to be supplied by San Francisco, to keep up those roads and to protect that national forest against forest fires and vandalism. If that is the case, wherein is the objection? Wherein is the wrong?

These men tell us that one of the great wrongs in this bill is that campers are prohibited from throwing refuse within 300 feet of that lake or of the streams running into the lake. That is a sanitary provision that is enforced in nearly every national park in existence, and where it is not enforced it should be. There is no reason why campers or anyone else in a national park should not be required to use common decency. Yet that is one of their main arguments.

I received two days ago from Mr. Parsons a pamphlet, with blue pencilling on it and a little note on the side, saying, "Read this carefully; this is one of the objectionable provisions." That objectionable provision is that campers shall not throw any filth or any refuse matter within 300 feet of the lake.

I am surprised that a man who has traveled as much as Mr. Parsons; a man who has such admiration for the beauties of that valley; a man of education and advancement, should object to a sanitary provision with regard to the waters of our national parks. Whether there was a basin there or not; whether there was a reservoir there or not, it would be necessary to the safety of other campers in that national park that such a regulation should exist.

It is on those slim grounds that these men are fighting this bill, without any idea of what they are talking about. I am satisfied that when the good people of this country, the men and women who are writing to us now from various States, basing their reasons on these letters and inclosing these letters to us, ascertain the facts; when those people know of the little land that is to be used; when they know of the conditions under which it is to be used; when they know of the great benefit it will mean to millions of suffering people in the State of California; when they know that this project is upheld by everybody in the State of California, with the exception of those who have been named here to-day, I think they will be inclined to change their opinions.

You who are in favor of conservation of the highest type; you who look forward; you who look to Mr. Pinchot as the light of conservation, would you for one moment doubt his sincerity in a matter of this kind? Would you for one moment doubt his judgment in a matter of this kind? And yet Mr. Pinchot states that this is one of the best bills that was ever drafted; that this bill not only aids, not only does more to conserve the national parks, but that it is the highest form of conservation, and places to the best possible use the natural resources of this country.

Let me read, for just a minute, the names of some of the men and some of the institutions who are indorsing this bill. Here they are:

Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior.
Hon. David F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture. As Secretary of Agriculture he has charge of the forests of this country.

Dr. George Otis Smith, Director of the United States Geological Survey.

Hon. F. H. Newell, chairman of the United States Reclamation Commission.

Hon. Henry S. Graves, Chief Forester of the United States Forest Service.

The Board of Army Engineers: Col. John Biddle, Lieut. Col. Harry Taylor, and Col. J. Spencer Cosby.

Hon. Gifford Pinchot, former Chief Forester.
Two Senators and 11 Representatives from the State of California.

Since that time we subtract one Senator from the State of California.

The people of Oakland.

The people of Berkeley.

The people of Alameda.

The people of Palo Alto.

The people of San Jose.

The people of Menlo Park.

The people of Richmond.

The Legislature of the State of California.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does not the Senator believe that if the city of San Francisco had taken up the proposition of getting water from some other source—say the McCloud River or the Eel River, or some others that might be mentioned—and had devoted to it the time and attention that it has devoted to the Hetch Hetchy project and had put that forward as an affirmative proposition, every one of the cities and public bodies in California that the Senator has mentioned would have indorsed the proposition just as it has indorsed the Hetch Hetchy project, because of relief from the tyranny and oppression of the Spring Valley Water Co.?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will state that to a great extent the Senator is right, of course. All of these cities have been suffering from that monopoly, and I know that they would have welcomed obtaining a municipal water supply practically at any place rather than to continue that suffering. But, as a matter of fact, for 10 or 12 years they have been obstructed in every move they made to obtain a municipal water supply by those to whose interest it was to make as much out of the people of those cities as they possibly could by a monopoly of water. They have been fought up to the last year with regard to the matter.

Do you not know—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada further yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not intend to interrupt the Senator right in the midst of a sentence. The Senator will pardon me for that.

I wanted to ask the Senator, leaving aside the proposition of the availability and cost of the alternative sources of supply which have been mentioned and discussed, whether the same influences which are now advocating the Hetch Hetchy proposition would have supported the other proposition. In addition to that, I wanted to ask the Senator, in case it can be demonstrated to the Senate that there is another available source of supply, at least at no greater cost than the Hetch Hetchy proposition, whether there is any reason why San Francisco can not drop the Hetch Hetchy proposition and take up another one? Is there any insurmountable obstacle to that?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. NELSON. My recollection is that some five or six years ago, while I was chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, this same bill, or a bill relating to the same subject, was before the committee, and we had a thorough investigation of the matter at that time. The question was raised at that time whether San Francisco could not, at reasonable figures, or at a cost approximating the cost of this, obtain a water supply elsewhere as good as this. My information is, and I wish to inquire of the Senator from Nevada whether it is not true, that a board of Army engineers since that time have investigated and reported upon that question.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will answer the Senator by stating that that is true.

Mr. NELSON. They have reported, as I understand, that there is no available supply of water for San Francisco except this that can be secured at any reasonable cost. That is my understanding.

Mr. PITTMAN. As I interpret the report of the Army engineers, that is the substance of it.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will allow me further, I now have in my hand the report. The senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] has just handed it to me. I was not aware that the report had been printed, but here it is. It is House Document No. 54, first session, Sixty-third Congress. It was printed during this Congress. The report indicates that the next cheapest available supply would cost at least $20,000,000 more than this one. That, I understand, is the conclusion of the report.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will read briefly from the report.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, before the Senator starts in with that, I hope he will not be diverted from the question I asked him. I will restate it, in brief. That is, leaving aside just for the moment the question of whether or not there is another available source of supply, if it can be demonstrated that there is another available source of good water at approximately the same or less cost, is there any reason why San Francisco could not drop this matter and take up that one? In other words, has San Francisco become so far committed to and tied up with the Hetch Hetchy project that it can not consider the question with an open mind and a free hand?

Mr. PITTMAN. I am satisfied that as far as concerns considering the matter with an open mind and a free hand, that would be possible if there were anything else left to consider. But the city of San Francisco and all of the people of California have already considered the matter with an open mind and a free hand; and this board, appointed from the United States Army to investigate every available water supply for San Francisco and the surrounding cities, have exhausted that field. Their report shows that the Hetch Hetchy project is the most available and the best supply of water for domestic purposes for those communities, and the cheapest.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What I meant by the question as to whether San Francisco could consider the question with an open mind and a free hand was simply as to whether or not at this stage of the proposition and discussion, in view of all that has gone before and all that San Francisco has done, it has invested such an amount of money in this thing already that it would be tied up to it, or whether it could consider the proposition with an open mind in the sense of considering it as though it were an original proposition or ab initio, as the lawyers say—an original question. What I meant by asking if they could deal with it with a free hand was whether or not they would be as free to take up some other proposition as they are to take up this proposition, in view of all that has gone before.

In order to conclude what I had in mind in this respect, I will say that I understand that the city of San Francisco has invested only $166,000 in property rights which it has acquired relative to this project. If that is true, that is comparatively a very small item, and no doubt it could readily sell what it has acquired for that much, if not more, and take up some other proposition.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will answer the Senator's question. It is not possible that San Francisco and those to be benefited by this bill would, at the present time, consent to the consideration of any other proposition, nor would they be in a frame of mind to listen for one moment to the presentation of any other proposition. I think that is what the Senator wants.

That is for this reason, if the Senator please: For 10 long years they have been making a study of this proposition. They have been delayed and delayed and delayed by the investigation of various plans and propositions, by trying to buy this and crying to buy that, by trying to compromise, and by trying to make arrangements of one kind and another. They have invested a million and a half dollars, up to date, on this particular project. After all that time and consideration and delay, after this matter has been before Congress on three separate occasions, after it has been fully investigated by two Congresses—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada further yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator state what the million and a half dollars has been spent for? I am asking very largely for information. I am not sure the information I had was correct, which was to the effect that they had spent only about $166,000 in cash. I think that referred to the property. I do not mean to say that that refers to the employment and reports of engineers. I understand they paid Mr. Freeman a very large amount of money, $300 a day. Everybody knows that when you pay an expert $300 a day to investigate a proposition in which you are interested he usually finds in favor of it. I say that, however, without any reflection on Mr. Freeman or his integrity, because I know that he is an engineer who is above suspicion; but I am speaking generally of the operation of the human mind, particularly as applied to the class of humanity known as experts. I do not think the investment I refer to has reference to those expenses, but to the property which they have.

Has the city of San Francisco spent a million and a half dollars for the purchase of property which it now owns, to be used as a part of the project?

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator will permit me to answer one question at a time, and will permit me to finish my answer, it will facilitate matters considerably. I was answering the Senator's former question, and had not finished when he started in and asked me the other one with regard to the million and a half dollars. I will continue my answer to his first question.

I will say that after spending 12 years' time in trying to obtain an adequate water supply for the people of those communities; after spending a vast sum of money; after appearing before two Congresses of the United States and having long and thorough hearings; after finally working up to such a point that an examination was made by an Army board of every available water supply, and a report was made by the Army board favorable to this proposition wherein they stated that it was the best and most economical; after the question had been tried out before the Public Lands Committee of the present House, composed of members of all parties, who decided unanimously in favor of it; after the matter had been tried out before the Public Lands Committee of the Senate, who decided unanimously in favor of it—after all these things I am satisfied that they would fight any attempt to substitute another proposition, and that, if the Senator please, they would not be in a frame of mind to consider it, because they know that such consideration would be futile, that examination has been made as fully as possible, and that any other matter would be a subterfuge.

There are other available water supplies. There are several that are for sale to San Francisco. The prices the owners have been asking for them have been much higher than the cost of this one, and they are not nearly so good.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I ask the Senator—

Mr. PITTMAN. I will ask the Senator to wait until I get through, and then ask his question, if he pleases. They are not nearly so good water supplies as the Hetch Hetchy supply, because instead of depending upon snowfall, they depend upon rainfall; and as has been the case in the last two or three years, those rainfalls have been frequently insufficient, and the amount of water supplies has decreased. Again, most of those water supplies are not capable of creating any incidental power. They are located in a section of country that requires the constant protection of a much larger watershed, at a much higher and greater expense. There are those objections to the other water supplies.

Now I will answer the Senator's question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will only say, in passing, that some of the other projects have discounted the suggestion which the Senator makes as to shortage in rainfall in certain years by providing reservoirs in which there is a surplus supply of water for one year, and in some cases for two years. But, as far as I am concerned, let us pass that by until we take up that phase of the question. There are a number of propositions which we have in mind in regard to which I will ask to put some statistics in the RECORD, which have taken into consideration the matter to which the Senator refers.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington whether the various projects to which he has just referred include one of the distillation of a supply of water from the Pacific Ocean?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I did not have that in mind.

Mr. THOMAS. My reason for asking the question is that when Mr. Johnson was before our committee the Senator from Nebraska called his attention to a previous statement of his, which was to the effect that if the city of San Francisco could do no better—I do not pretend to give the exact language—it might distill its supply of water from the waters of the Pacific Ocean, and even at a cost of $100,000,000 it would be better than to desecrate any of nature's scenery in this valley.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am afraid the Senator from Colorado is allowing his well-known decided views on conservation to prejudice him in this question on account of some extremist who may have entered an appearance here. I agree with the Senator as to that phase of the matter.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, Mr. President, not in the slightest. On the contrary, I am delighted that in one particular feature of western conservation I can cordially agree with my personal friend Mr. Pinchot.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to say, before sitting down, that my object in rising was simply to emphasize the statement the Senator from Nevada has just made, that apparently the chief objection San Francisco has to some of the other projects—I will not name them now, but I will undertake to name a few of them later on—is that they are for sale. That immediately puts the matter in the proper light. This proposition is free, and, in all candor, I am inclined to think that is the reason San Francisco is so wedded to it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, that is one of the arguments that is being used by Mr. Underwood Johnson and Mr. Parsons. They have used that argument. I do not think the Senator has a right to put that construction upon my remarks. I said there were others for sale in that vicinity.

San Francisco has already acquired this water. It owns this water to-day by legal acquisition under the laws of the State of California. It is not asking Congress to give it any water. Congress could not grant it an inch or a gallon of water. It is not giving San Francisco anything. The people of that city are simply asking the Congress of the United States not to obstruct them in the use of that which they already own—not to make them go and buy from those who have grabbed all of the waters around San Francisco at the sellers' own price, when they already own the purest water in the Sierra Nevada Mountains.

It is not a question of gift. The people of San Francisco are simply asking the Congress of the United States not to prevent them from using what is theirs. That is all they are asking.

The Senator seems to think the only objection is that San Francisco will have to buy these other water supplies. The Army board did not put the matter solely on that ground. I have not put it solely on that ground. None of the Public Lands Committee reports have put it solely on that ground.

The grounds on which they have put it are these: Because a disinterested Army board, appointed by the President of the United States, which sought the information on behalf of the Secretary of the Interior, reported that it was the most economical, the most desirable, and the most satisfactory water supply for the people in that vicinity; because that Army board reported that it was practically the only available water supply that would furnish a certain amount of hydroelectric power for the use and benefit of all of the irrigationists down in that valley, at cost, for the purpose of pumping subsurface waters to the surface, and eventually irrigating the outside land; because only by such a dam could the flood waters of the Tuolumne River be conserved for the benefit not only of the people around San Francisco, but the irrigationists and the farmers in the immediately contiguous territory; because they believed that eventually the dam would have to be built, and that it might as well be built now, and that it would not injure the beauties of the scenery, but would be a distinct aid for domestic purposes not only to the people of San Francisco and the bay cities but to all the people on the adjoining irrigable lands.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. As bearing directly on the question propounded by the Senator from Washington, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the fact that as far as I have heard, nobody has disputed the fact that any other source of supply would cost many millions of dollars more. Mr. Parsons, whom many of the Senators know and who served in Congress quite a while with a great deal of credit, admitted that it would cost $20,000,000 more for San Francisco to get its supply anywhere else.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood that Mr. Parsons was a nature lover and not an engineer.

Mr. NORRIS. He is a nature lover.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would rather take the report of engineers.

Mr. NORRIS. All right. The Board of Army Engineers say any other water supply would cost $20,000,000 more. I suppose the Senator from Washington, if he would follow out the suggestion he made about Mr. Freeman, would say they were hired, and their estimate was not good. I am taking one of the witnesses on the other side. Mr. Johnson said he did not think it would take $20,000,000 more. As I remember his figures, he got the additional cost down to $11,000,000; but he admitted it would cost that much more.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator point out where the Army engineers made that report?

Mr. NELSON. On page 50 of their report, if the Senator will excuse me for interrupting. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will.

Mr. NELSON. On page 50 of the document from which I quoted a moment ago is this statement, under the head of "Conclusions":

The project proposed by the city of San Francisco, known as the Hetch Hetchy project, is about $20,000,000 cheaper than any other feasible project for furnishing an adequate supply. The only exception is the filtered Sacramento project, which in actual cost is about thirty millions greater than the Hetch Hetchy project, but by discounting to 1914 becomes only $13,000,000 greater.

Then the board adds, in another place:

The board is of the opinion that the use of the Hetch Hetchy Valley as a reservoir site is necessary if the full flow of the upper Tuolumne is to be conserved.

The board further believes that there will be sufficient water, if adequately stored and economically used, to supply both the reasonable demand of the bay communities and the reasonable needs of the Turlock-Modesto irrigation district for the remainder of this century.

The report is signed by John Biddle, colonel, Corps of Engineers; Harry Taylor, lieutenant colonel, Corps of Engineers; and Spencer Cosby, major, Corps of Engineers. Col. Taylor I know very well. He is at the head of the River and Harbor Division of the Engineer Department in this city.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Nevada will allow me to comment on the citation which the Senator from Minnesota has just made from the report of the Board of Army Engineers on this project—

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to call attention to a rather peculiar circumstance. That is that one of the alternative sources of supply which was proposed to this board, and upon which they made some comment, apparently very favorable comment—the Eel River project—and which, as far as I could judge from the remarks in regard to it, would be much less expensive than the Hetch Hetchy project, was not considered by them at all in the conclusion which the Senator from Minnesota has just read; that any other project than the Hetch Hetchy project would cost at least $20,000,000 more, but was discarded by them for the reason, as they state specifically, after giving a very favorable report on the Eel River project—I did not intend to refer to this matter at this time, but I might as well do it—that the owners of it have not made any proposition to sell it to the city of San Francisco. That is a very unnecessary consideration, it seems to me, because, of course, the city of San Francisco can condemn that as it is condemning the Spring Valley water property, or as it is condemning a portion of the Hetch Hetchy right of way owned by private parties, or will have to in case it adopts this project.

On page 84 of the engineer's report it is stated near the bottom of the page:

The president of the Snow Mountain Water & Power Co. states that he has plans for the utilization of this supply in the Russian River Valley, and has made no proposition to the city of San Francisco regarding its acquirement by the city.

A supply from Eel River could not be advantageously combined with one from other sources. The investigation of this project has not been carried further.

Mr. PITTMAN. Why?

Mr. POINDEXTER. For the reason just stated, I suppose.

Mr. PITTMAN. The reason just stated was that a supply from Eel River could not be advantageously combined with one from other sources.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And also the statement made immediately preceding, that no proposition was made by the owner to sell it to the city of San Francisco, but he had other uses for it.

Mr. PITTMAN. There might be a different construction as to that; but as a matter of fact he said it could not be advantageously combined with the other water system.

I want to finish reading what I started when interrupted, the names of some of those who are indorsing this project. While it is not in the nature of testimony, their opinions will be accepted very largely by this body and throughout the country.

As I said before, we have the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Franklin K. Lane, indorsing this project. Mr. Lane is a man who has lived in California for many years. He is familiar with every foot of that part of the country. He is a man who would not impose on anyone.

Hon. David F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture.
Dr. George Otis Smith, Director United States Geological Survey.
Hon. F. H. Newell, chairman United States Reclamation Commission.
Hon. Henry S. Graves, Chief Forester, United States Forest Service.
The Board of Army Engineers: Col. John Biddle, Lieut. Col. Harry Taylor, and Col. Spencer Cosby.
Hon. Gifford Pinchot, former Chief Forester.
Two Senators and 11 Representatives from the State of California.

As I stated before, the junior Senator from California [Mr. Works] says the matter needs more investigation.

The people of Oakland.
The people of Berkeley.
The people of Alameda.
The people of Palo Alto.
The people of San Jose.
The people of Menlo Park.
The people of Richmond.
The Legislature of the State of California.
The governor of the State of California.
The engineer of the State of California.
The Conservation Commission of the State of California.
The people of San Francisco.
The Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco.
The labor unions of San Francisco.
The improvement clubs of San Francisco.
The newspapers of San Francisco and cities about San Francisco Bay.
The landowners of the Turlock irrigation district.
The landowners of the Modesto irrigation district.
The Commonwealth Club of California.
Many members of the Sierra Club of California.
The Native Sons and Daughters of California.
The Public Lands Committee of the House of Representatives and the Public Lands Committee of the United States Senate.

Those indorsements, I will state to the Senator from Washington, are very strong indorsements of this project. All the State of California is practically petitioning for this remedy, and in answer to that appeal from all the people of California we have Judge Le Hane appearing before the Senate Committee on Public Lands and saying that he wants to have this right denied to San Francisco, so that it can be acquired by some one else.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I admit that the persons and association the Senator has referred to constitute a very formidable body of public opinion, and that they are entitled to very great respect, and their opinions have great weight; and in the consideration of these questions I have attached great weight to their opinions. A number of gentlemen in whose judgment I have the greatest confidence do not take the same view, and to their opinions I have given great weight. They are insistently opposed to the proposed law. I have had the matter taken up personally with a number of them, and the conclusion which I have reached I have been forced to reach notwithstanding the great respect I have for the opinions of the gentlemen the Senator has named.

Mr. PITTMAN. There are just two classes of people opposing this proposition. We have in California opposing this proposition Judge Le Hane, and he is opposing it on the ground that he wants the water taken away from San Francisco so that some one who has no right to it now may acquire a right to it for irrigation purposes. We have the junior Senator from California [Mr. Works] asking for a further hearing of this matter.

It is called to my attention that the city of Los Angeles was granted practically the same privilege in carrying from the eastern slope of the Sierra Nevada Mountain nearly all the water of Owens Valley and depriving many farmers of its use so that it might be put to the higher purpose of supplying the people of Los Angeles and its vicinity with a good domestic supply of water. That act passed through Congress, and that great project has been carried on successfully. Now, in the northern part of the State, around the bay, where nearly a million people reside, those people are asking exactly the same thing that has already been granted to the city of Los Angeles, the home of the junior Senator from California. Yet he wires to us protesting against action and demanding further hearing, without suggesting that there will be any further hearing; without suggesting that there are to be any other witnesses; without stating what is to be investigated; without stating when he will be here; without stating why he is absent from here. That is the opposition in California.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I know the Senator from Nevada does not intentionally overstate his position; but does the Senator feel sure, from the information which he has, that that is the only opposition in California? I am informed by telegraph, and also otherwise, that the people of the entire San Joaquin Valley are opposed to this measure—that 99 per cent of the people there are opposing it. Necessarily that would have some effect upon a man who is casting his vote here, because there must be some reason for it when an entire people feel that way.

However, the Senator has stated that only those whom he has named are opposed to it. Does the Senator feel, from the investigation he has made and from information which he has—and I know he has stated it according to his belief—that he is prepared to say that the sentiment of California is universally for it?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not think that I have overstated the proposition. I am prepared to state that the sentiment of California is almost unanimously in favor of it. I am prepared to say that there was no objection made in the Public Lands Committee or to the Senate by anyone except Judge Le Hane on behalf of the parties he represents, and the junior Senator from California on behalf of the same people, and the grounds of their objection have been most accurately stated on this floor. The ground simply is that they want to take away from San Francisco a water right so that it may be used on some public lands that to-day are not occupied nor included within an irrigation district. As to an irrigation district, the people of the Modesto or Turlock irrigation district, which embraces all of the irrigable lands now in the district, are heartily in favor of this bill. I want to say that if 99 per cent of the people of the San Joaquin Valley are opposed to this bill, do you not know that Congressman CHURCH, who was elected from that district, and who is more directly interested than any Member in either branch of Congress, would be before the Senate trying to stop any further action on this matter? Do you think if 99 per cent of that irrigation district were making such complaints, that Congressman RAKER, elected from that congressional district, would not have heard of it? Do you believe that Mr. RAKER, who drafted the bill and who conducted most of the examination before the Public Lands Committee of the House, and who is now sitting beside me, would permit this matter to proceed without objection? Do you believe that if there was any foundation for the insinuations contained in Senator WORKS's telegram that Mr. RAKER would hesitate to ask delay until the matter could be further considered?

Do you not know that if that telegram were stating facts Mr. Needham, the ex-Congressman from that district, and who came here to represent the people of that district, and who stayed here during all the preparation of this bill, would be back here and would be urging all Senators in this body to stop the bill right where it is until further investigation could go on? Do you think for one moment that Mr. RAKER, Mr. CHURCH, Mr. Needham, Mr. KENT, and men of that class would stand under an imputation that they had misrepresented 99 per cent of their district without having an investigation before this matter could go to a vote? Do you not think it strange that the junior Senator from California sent a telegram here stating that 99 per cent of the people of a district represented by a Democratic Congressman, the party now in power in Congress, without communicating that fact to the Congressman representing that district?

Mr. BORAH. I am bound to say, in the absence of the junior Senator from California, that no Senator upon this floor—and I am not making any invidious comparison—would, I believe, more accurately state a fact as he believes it to be than that Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. I agree with the Senator that he believes any statement he makes to be true.

Mr. BORAH. I am sure the junior Senator from California has been misled if he is not stating a fact. I think also that he is a man who would have the courage to state the fact, if it were believed to be a fact upon his part, notwithstanding powerful influences might be brought to bear on the other side.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Idaho if the statement made concerning the attitude of the residents of the San Joaquin Valley is made upon the telegram from Senator WORKS which has been read here? Has the Senator any other information on the subject?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I have some private letters and also private communications personally delivered.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator advise us from what portion of the valley they come and whether they come from the portion of the San Joaquin Valley which might be irrigated from this source?

Mr. BORAH. I did not catch the question.

Mr. WALSH. Can the Senator tell us from what portion of the valley these protests come?

Mr. BORAH. No; the Senator from Idaho is not advised as to what portion of the valley, but the representations are to the effect that practically the people of the entire valley have come to the conclusion that they ought not to consent to the passage of the pending bill at this time.

Mr. WALSH. But the Senator knows that the San Joaquin Valley is at least 300 miles long?

Mr. BORAH. That is the fact which convinced me that there must be some tremendous sentiment against it.

Mr. WALSH. I was very curious to know what particular interest the people up in the Tulare Lake region, in Kings County, for instance, and Kern County, would have in the matter other than a public interest.

Mr. BORAH. I assume that public sentiment in California and public spirit are not entirely dead, and that there would not necessarily have to be any private or personal interest in order to interest men in favor of or against the measure.

Mr. WALSH. That is why I inquired. I wanted to know from the Senator upon what ground those people who live remote from the region put their opposition to it.

Mr. BORAH. The statements which have come to me have been almost entirely by telegraph or letter, and have not undertaken to state the reason or to segregate the people in the different portions of the State. But the statement which has been made to me is practically the statement in the telegram of the junior Senator from California.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I only rose to answer the question of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. Representations of the kind he inquires about have been made to me with a good deal of detail by water users of the Modesto irrigation district. The Senator is familiar with the San Joaquin Valley; he will understand where the persons are located; and also by the owners of other lands in the San Joaquin Valley which are susceptible of irrigation by these waters.

Mr. PITTMAN. May I ask the Senator whether there was anyone other than Judge Le Hane?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There was.

Mr. PITTMAN. In Washington here?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; representatives of residents and of landowners in the Modesto irrigation district or purporting to represent them. I have no doubt whatever as to their authority.

Mr. PITTMAN. Was that in the form of written or oral communications?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Both oral and written. Later on I will present them.

Mr. PITTMAN. I was going to suggest, if not objectionable, that those communications might aid in clarifying the situation.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to his colleague?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me suggest to the Senator from Idaho that the demand of San Francisco for this water as opposed to that of the San Joaquin Valley means the demand of 750,000 human beings about the Bay of San Francisco, whilst the demand of the San Joaquin Valley represents simply the demand of 200,000 acres of land. We have therefore the thirst of 750,000 human beings on the one side to supply and on the other side the thirst of the land. The people of California have decided in favor of the demand of human beings, and that is evidenced by the action of their legislature and by the universal demand of that State, leaving out a very limited area in the San Joaquin Valley, whose requirements can be met from other sources.

Mr. BORAH. That all raises the question which has been the one question which has concerned me—that is, recognizing the rights of the people of the San Joaquin Valley and the rights of the people of San Francisco, what were the other sources of supply for water? I am frank to say if the people of San Francisco have no other source of supply, I do not hesitate for a moment to leave unclaimed the public lands in order to supply the people of San Francisco. The representation is constantly made that there is a difference of opinion as to the supply for either or both.

Mr. PITTMAN. May I ask the Senator a question? Would you be in favor of taking away from San Francisco a water right it has acquired legally for the purpose of granting it to some one else, even if San Francisco could purchase water somewhere else?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that I caught the drift of the Senator's question exactly.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will try to make it plainer. It is admitted by everyone concerned that San Francisco owns a certain portion of the waters of the Tuolumne River; that it owns all the waters of the Tuolumne River except that which in this bill is guaranteed to the Turlock-Modesto Irrigation District. Would you favor preventing San Francisco from using that water if by purchasing it it could acquire an adequate supply somewhere else at somewhat near the same figure?

Mr. BORAH. If there were no other conditions and limitations in the naked proposition which the Senator presents, I think I would agree with the Senator from Nevada. If that question stood alone—

Mr. PITTMAN. Now, the facts presented in this matter and which are undisputed are that San Francisco does own that water and that it has guaranteed to deliver to all others all waters that they own in that river. That is the situation. That is undisputed.

Now, the only people who are at present protesting against this matter are not those who have any vested water rights, not those who have any rights to the use of the Tuolumne water, but simply those who desire that Congress shall destroy San Francisco's right to the water so that it may be utilized to irrigate other lands. That is all the situation is.

Mr. BORAH. How could they destroy a vested water right?

Mr. PITTMAN. They could destroy it by making it practically unavailable for use.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose that what the Senator has reference to is the fact that if they could not overflow this ground or submerge this particular piece of territory they could not use the water right which they had.

Mr. PITTMAN. It would be largely destroyed.

Mr. BORAH. Then, as a matter of fact, they have not a complete water right. If I understand the water-right laws of California—is it not necessary in California, the same as in other arid-land States, before you can have a water right you must not only appropriate it but apply it to a beneficial use?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Has the city of San Francisco appropriated and applied this water to a beneficial use?

Mr. PITTMAN. They are given under the laws of California, I believe, a reasonable time in which to acquire the necessary facilities for placing it in use, and so long as they show a bona fide intention of carrying that out as expeditiously as possible their rights are preserved.

Mr. BORAH. Then they have an inchoate right.

Mr. PITTMAN. They have an inchoate right and they are trying to protect it. Every one agrees that it shall be protected so far in this matter, and the only persons who are not taking that position are Mr. Le Hane's supporters and associates, who believe that the Government should place San Francisco in such a position that the city could not use that water for domestic purposes. That is exactly what Mr. Le Hane admitted before the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate.

All this matter has been thrashed out before the Committee on Public Lands. Is it not perfectly reasonable, if there had been some great conspiracy against the interests of the people of those valleys in California, that the Public Lands Committee would have had some notice of it? Is it not strange that the Public Lands Committee have not been flooded with petitions and letters? That is one reason, I say, why I do not think there has been any such thing. I think the only thing that exists is that Mr. Le Hane's associates are protesting. He has made his protests before the Public Lands Committee. We understand the ground of his protest. We do not think there is anything in his ground of protest, and we have denied his ground of protest unanimously.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Nevada what are the estimated power capacities of this proposition and what is its value and how it is to be disposed of?

Mr. PITTMAN. I take pleasure in answering that. The report has been placed in the Record in full. The exact language is there, but the bill requires that this power shall be delivered at cost. It is sold at cost. They must develop it and they must sell it at cost to users, including the irrigation district, for pumping; and that brings me to this question. The testimony before the Public Lands Committee shows that nearly all this land in that valley is underlaid with water at a shallow depth, and all they need to supply the irrigation is the power to pump water. In fact, Judge Le Hane went before the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate and said what they wanted particularly was the water power, and then they could pump the water and cover the land with it. Now, then, the land has an available supply of subsurface water, but San Francisco could not use that subsurface water for domestic purposes without distillation.

Mr. BORAH. What is the estimated value of this water power?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is $45,000,000, in round figures.

Mr. BORAH. Is there a consideration moving to the Government for that water power?

Mr. PITTMAN. There is. That consideration consists of $15,000 a year after the first year, and then from that time on for the first five years after the fifth year $15,000 a year, for the next five years $20,000 a year, and from that time on $30,000 per annum. The engineers have estimated that that will be a great deal in excess of the price universally paid throughout the country for Government power in such conditions.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. THOMAS. I want to correct slightly the statement of the Senator from Nevada with reference to the compensation demanded by the Government. That compensation is very largely for the use of the land of the Government to be submerged by this lake, and the amounts which the Senator mentioned are paid for that very largely, and are to be expended in the upkeep of those roads. The Government requires in this bill that the water power shall be developed, and at certain times must be developed to its full capacity, failing in which the Government reserves the right to arrange with others to make that extra development, accompanied by a condition that under no circumstances nor at any time shall this water power directly or indirectly pass into private hands.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I trust the question addressed to the Senator from Nevada by the Senator from Idaho does not carry an intimation from the Senator from Idaho that the Government of the United States has any water power out there which it has to sell. Are we to so understand him?

Mr. BORAH. I do not. What I am trying to point—

Mr. WALSH. My understanding about the matter is that the Government of the United States is granting an easement to flood, and likewise an easement for the transmission of the water, and that is all it is granting, and that whatever consideration there is for the conveyance of those easements.

Mr. BORAH. That is my understanding, but I understand the Government is giving permission to impound the waters upon the lands which it now owns, and that by reason of the impounding of these waters and the transmission of them that water power is created. Upon the theory of many of our conservation friends that power would then belong to the Government.

Mr. WALSH. I simply rose to ascertain definitely whether the Senator coincided with that view.

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not want that kind of a precedent established in this bill, and it is the one thing that has interested me in the proposition. I understand that this payment which is being made of so much per year is a part of the consideration for the purchase price of the right of way and the right to flood the land. Is that correct? The Government is not undertaking to regulate and control the waters of the State of California, but it is simply attaching a condition to a specific grant which it is making to the city of San Francisco.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. As a proprietor and not as a sovereign?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is correct.

I will state, Mr. President, that the Government does not pretend that it can grant any water rights either to San Francisco or to the Modesto-Turlock irrigation district. This bill does not recognize any such right in the Government of the United States. It recognizes that right to be fully in the States, the right of disposing of those waters. It simply says that it having been agreed that there are certain persons now undisputably owners of certain water rights, if you are given this right of way you will permit that water belonging to them to pass over the same right of way, and that is about all. It is one of the conditions of easement, and nothing else.

Mr. President, this bill is also a great conservation measure in this: It not only provides that the water power developed by the impounding of these waters shall be supplied at cost to these municipalities and to these irrigation districts, but it further provides that none of this power and none of this water can ever be sold or disposed of in any other way or to any other than these municipalities and these irrigation grantees. It provides absolutely that neither this water nor this power can ever fall into the hands of a monopoly.

Now, then, you have in a nutshell all of the advantages of this bill. It conserves the surplus waters of that river not only for the supply of the domestic use around those cities, but for the benefit of the irrigators of the valley—water that to-day is wasted and that can not be saved except by the building of this dam. It creates a water power, a hydroelectric energy of over 115,000 horsepower, which must be supplied to all of these people at cost, thereby being the greatest aid to relieve them from the monopoly that has been supplying them with light and power in that section of the country for years.

It not only serves the purposes of irrigation and domestic purposes, but it gives power to pump the subsurface water to irrigate hundreds of thousands of acres that can never be irrigated in any other way. It will not only accommodate all of those people, but it goes further. It holds back the flood waters of Tuolumne River, which have on occasions caused great destruction down through those valleys. It goes further than that, it provides a fund for building roads and boulevards and opening up one of the greatest national parks that exist in this country, not alone for the observation and enjoyment of some half dozen men who might make their way through those mountain peaks, but for all the people of this country who want to go in there for recreation or for health or for the purpose of looking at the beauties of nature.

It seems strange to me, except under the theory that they have been misinformed—and I know they have been misinformed—that many good women in various parts of the country should be trying to prevent the millions of people who are suffering from inadequate water supply on the Pacific coast from obtaining relief solely on the ground that a little valley, with two or three thousand acres in it, is proposed to be changed as to its floor from a beautiful valley of moss and ferns to a beautiful crystal lake. It does not seem to me that such arguments should weigh against the absolute need of all of the people of that section of the country, and yet those are the arguments we hear. I confidently believe, I confidently expect, when these facts have reached out through the country to those same good women who are to-day petitioning their representatives against the passage of this bill, that they will no longer look to the beauties of the floor of Hetch Hetchy, but that they will listen to the demands of the monopoly-ridden people of the Pacific coast; that they will be no longer listening to the sounds of nature on the floor of that valley, but that they will be listening to the cry of humanity all up and down the Pacific coast. I believe that when they have studied this question, when they have considered it, that they will see that on the one hand this bill is opposed by greed and monopoly and on the other hand it is opposed by a great many good people who have been led to believe that, instead of being for the benefit of crying humanity, it is simply willful destruction of a national park.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I have always believed that a community should exhaust its near-by supplies of water instead of reaching out a long distance to the possible future supply of other communities. Accordingly for many years I hesitated as to giving my support to San Francisco for the inclusion in its water supply of the far-off sources in the Sierra Nevada. I thought it ought to be demonstrated that the Coast Range Mountains could not supply the water needed for San Francisco and the surrounding neighborhoods before she should be permitted to reach out to remote communities. I have modified my views very materially as the result of the prolonged investigation that has been made of this subject, and I propose to give briefly the reasons for my present views.

We are considering now the water resources of an immense valley of the Pacific coast, extending from north to south a distance of 400 or 500 miles and from east to west a varying distance of from 50 to 150 or 200 miles, the watersheds comprising that enormous valley having their only outlet into the Pacific Ocean through the Bay of San Francisco and the Golden Gate, this valley being surrounded on the west by the Coast Range Mountains and on the east by a very large and high range of mountains, the Sierra Nevada. The Coast Range Mountains necessarily empty a large proportion of the waters that fall upon them directly into the Pacific Ocean, and only a small part spreads toward the east and empties into this valley, whereas the Sierra Nevada, having a very much larger watershed and having a very much greater height, shed their waters toward the west into the valley of which I have spoken. So the main water supply is not upon the Coast Range, but is in the Sierra Nevada.

The first question that arises is as to whether there is sufficient water within a convenient distance to be secured at a reasonable cost from the Coast Range. We have the reports of eminent engineers and the reports of various investigating bodies to the contrary. So it is necessary for San Francisco to reach out, and to reach out a long distance. Los Angeles, also on the coast, has been compelled to reach out away beyond the Sierra Nevada, a distance of 125 miles.

Then comes up the question of the demand—how many people will be dependent upon the future supply. We have around the Bay of San Francisco numerous towns and cities—San Francisco, with a population of over 400,000, and Oakland, with a population of over 200,000.

It is safe to say that in the bay area, the demands of which this water supply is intended to meet, there are nearly 750,000 people, nearly one-third—fully, I imagine one-fourth—of the population of California. So that we have the future demands and, I may say, the present demands of 750,000 people.

What demand is there opposed to this bill? It is not contended that the people of the San Joaquin Valley and of the Sacramento Valley, constituting this enormous valley to which I have referred—the Sacramento River with its tributaries flowing from the north toward the south, and the San Joaquin River with its tributaries flowing from the south toward the north, and both joining their waters near the Bay of San Francisco—it is not contended that the people of those valleys need the water in controversy for domestic uses; they are abundantly supplied; but it is claimed that there are or may be 200,000 acres of land that this water will supply. So, on the one hand, we have the thirst of man to supply, and, on the other, the thirst of land. I imagine that there will be no question of the superiority of the claim of man over land, so far as this water is concerned.

Mr. President, there will come a time when every drop of water that falls within those valleys or within the watersheds of those areas will be conserved, so that they will serve a useful purpose to man before they flow into the Bay of San Francisco and thence into the ocean. At present large volumes of water flow through these waterways into the ocean without being put to any use, and they serve only the purpose of gratifying the thirst of the sun. Man has not yet invented any way of controlling the output of the clouds, and probably there never will be a method devised by which nature will supply water just as it is required by man; but man can take hold of the water falling from the heavens just as soon as it touches the land and can control that water and can put it to beneficial uses, instead of allowing it to be diverted to destructive uses. The beneficial uses are the domestic use and the uses for irrigation and water power; the destructive use is the force of the floods, which in the United States destroy almost $200,000,000 worth of value annually. Therefore we have a beneficial use to promote and an injurious use to avert. I have not the slightest doubt that the time will come when, by cooperation of the United States with the State of California, this enormous valley, with its various watersheds, will be treated as a unit and the superabundant waters of one watershed will be taken over into the lands insufficiently covered by other watersheds, and we shall have one great valley of vast, rich cultivation from the north to the south instead of, as at present, having the northern half of the valley adequately supplied and the southern half of this valley inadequately supplied. It does seem to me that this can—

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. If I may be pardoned for interrupting the Senator, knowing, as I do, his personal acquaintance with that whole geography, I having had the honor of serving in the House of Representatives with him and having heard him present the needs of that whole coast so often, I should like him to let me know what there is in the contention of many communications reaching other Senators besides myself, and certainly myself, that there are other accessible bodies of water to the city of San Francisco than this which could be just as easily obtained and with less expense. I would like to have the distinguished Senator inform the Senate, as I am seeking information myself, is there any other source to which they can go to obtain fresh water for the needs of their people?

Mr. NEWLANDS. There are other sources, Mr. President, but not so good, and involving a very much larger expenditure, an increased expenditure, which I believe is put by the engineers at something like $20,000,000. I will say that all these various sources of supply have been investigated by various boards of engineers, and that almost the unanimous conclusion seems to be that this is the best source of supply for San Francisco, and that this supply can be utilized in such a way as to be vastly beneficial to the cities around the bay without working an injury to the neighborhood adjoining its source.

We have presented to us simply the best plan which can be devised by the engineers, a plan which has been approved by public opinion throughout California. That approval has been manifested by expressions of the press, by resolutions passed by the California Legislature, and by every other form of public expression.

The only opposition to it is the opposition of the near-by neighborhood, comparatively limited in population, insisting not that this water is required to supply the wants of human beings to satisfy their thirst, but that it is required for the future development and cultivation of perhaps 200,000 acres of land with a view to its cultivation.

I am simply dwelling upon the possibilities of so conserving in the future the water supply of this enormous valley, stretching from the north to the south a distance of 300 or 400 miles and embracing numerous watersheds which unite and empty into the Pacific Ocean—the possibilities of so conserving that supply as to supply every acre in that entire area with water sufficient to satisfy its thirst, and I have insisted that the present demand that we should yield to is the demand of human beings, and that we should postpone to the future the satisfaction of the thirst of the land.

Mr. President, it must be recollected that this is a great public enterprise; it is not a private enterprise; it is an enterprise entered into for the benefit of 750,000 people, at least one-fourth of the entire population of California, that population surrounding the bay of San Francisco. It means not only a supply to satisfy the thirst, but an enormous supply of water under a head that will develop 200,000 horsepower. It must be recollected that electricity is entering more into the lives of our people than almost any other force in the way of promoting their comfort and their convenience, and that 200,000 horsepower will be available not only for the supply of the bay cities but will be available for the supply of the San Joaquin Valley itself, and will be a great agency in enabling the people of the valleys to which I have referred to pump up the subterranean waters to the surface of the ground and utilize them for purposes of irrigation, the people of that region discovering that they have not only to rely upon the streams and upon the storage of water in great natural and artificial reservoirs, but that there are subterranean reservoirs immediately at hand, which can be availed of and made just as useful as the reservoirs above the surface of the land.

So that from every point of view this may be regarded not only as a local enterprise affecting San Francisco, but as a great State enterprise, affecting the development of the entire State and as a national enterprise leading the way toward the great public utilization of the resources of nature. As such I believe it is entitled to our support.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, this is an important matter, and I think we ought to have a full attendance. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, this bill is for the purpose of securing for the cities and towns on the shores of San Francisco Bay an adequate supply of pure water—a population at the present time of over 700,000 people.

It grants to the city and county of San Francisco a reservoir site in the Hetch Hetchy Valley, located in the Yosemite National Park; it also grants minor rights, such as rights of way, and so forth.

The people of the city and county of San Francisco have taken the work in hand and have issued bonds for the purpose of purchasing reservoir sites, building dams, and constructing a conduit line from the Hetch Hetchy Valley to San Francisco.

THE HETCH HETCHY VALLEY.

The Hetch Hetchy Valley is located in the Yosemite National Park, 142 miles due east of San Francisco and 25 miles north of the Yosemite Valley, but on an entirely different watershed.

The Hetch Hetchy Valley is a deep gorge gouged out of solid granite; its floor is about 3,530 feet above sea level, the precipitous walls of the valley extending about 2,000 feet above this level.

It is proposed, by erecting a dam at the lower outlet of the valley, to store the water deposited on the mountain watershed above, thereby securing for the people living about San Francisco Bay a water supply incomparable in purity and sufficient in amount to make it assured that there will be no more water famines in San Francisco for generations to come.

THE POPULATION TO BE SERVED.

The cities of San Francisco, Burlingame, San Mateo, Redwood, Palo Alto, Hayward, Alameda, Oakland, Piedmont, and Berkeley, which are to be organized into a municipal water district for development of the Hetch Hetchy water supply, form an almost continuous chain around the Bay of San Francisco.

As stated, their combined population at the present date is more than 700,000.

WATER IN CALIFORNIA.

To gain a proper conception of the value of water in California it is necessary to understand the climate in that State.

We have only two seasons—during six months of the year one may expect rain, but most often rainfall is limited to four months; during the balance of the year there is practically no rain throughout the State. It will, therefore, be readily seen that to supply that present population of the metropolitan district of San Francisco and environs, which we may confidently expect to double within a decade, involves the storage of water for a much longer period and in much greater volume than in a climate where rain may be expected during each month of the year.

San Francisco is supplied with water by the Spring Valley Water Co., a corporation.

This corporation gets its water from the Coast Range of mountains and from Alameda County, on the east side of the bay, and its sources of supply are all within 50 miles of the city.

It is admitted by everyone concerned that these sources do not furnish sufficient water to supply the present needs of the city of San Francisco; in fact, the strictest economy of water must be practiced there now, and the shortage of water is a matter of grave concern to all thoughtful citizens.

Records kept by the Spanish missionaries and well-known traditions tell of certain phenomenally dry seasons which have afflicted our State, separated by intervals of about 50 years.

These dry seasons have been remarkable in the fact that for the whole year but a few inches of rain have fallen throughout the State of California.

One authentic record shows that this phenomenal drought was continuous for two years in succession.

The cattle in the State perished in enormous numbers, and the suffering among the few people in the State at that time for lack of water was intense.

None of these terrible droughts has occurred in recent history, although, in my recollection, we have had two or three seasons in succession when less than 10 inches of rain per annum was precipitated.

My mind draws back from even the contemplation of the suffering that would come to the people of our State, with our present population, should one of these droughts again come in California; but, of course, one must admit the possibility of such a calamity.

A storage reservoir in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, with a supply of stored water, would be the means of saving thousands of human lives in such a drought.

Against this argument the protests against the use of Hetch Hetchy Valley for a reservoir site because it would perhaps destroy some scenic beauty of some camping grounds utterly fall to the ground.

For these reasons it is absolutely necessary that the population living on the shores of San Francisco Bay should secure additional reservoir facilities in the Sierra Nevada Mountains for the storage of their water supply.

There can be no doubt but that an insufficient water supply for the city and county of San Francisco seriously retards the growth of that section of California in population and wealth.

An inadequate and insufficient water supply can not fail to also have a serious effect upon the health and welfare of the whole community, and I believe this situation is one of which Congress should properly and promptly take cognizance and afford what relief it deems in its wisdom justifiable.

After an exhaustive study and consideration of the available sources of water supply in California the engineers for San Francisco, men most eminent in their profession, and a board of United States Army engineers finally decided on the Hetch Hetchy Valley as a reservoir site, which, of course, involves the building of a conduit line from that place to San Francisco.

The city and county of San Francisco, under the laws of the State of California, have taken and performed all necessary acts to acquire, appropriate, and use the waters of the Tuolumne River, which has its source above the Hetch Hetchy Valley, all of which has been done in strict compliance with the laws regulating the appropriation and use of waters in the State of California, and the city now has and holds a valid right by virtue of its acts performed under the State laws.

The route of the conduit line has been determined, the State law gives the city the right of eminent domain to secure the right of way, and active construction only awaits the passage of this bill.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL.

This bill, H. R. 7207, was given careful consideration by the House Committee on the Public Lands.

That committee had extended hearings on the measure, and in their report to the House emphatically and unanimously recommended its immediate passage by that body.

The only opposition to the passage of the bill was on the part of gentlemen, nearly all nonresidents of California, who endeavored to make the point that the utilization of the Hetch Hetchy Valley as a reservoir would destroy the scenic beauty of that section; but it is believed by all concerned that the effect will be just the reverse. It is proposed to convert the valley into a magnificent lake and store the water from the melting snow which now runs off in torrential floods each year, doing good to no one and at times causing great damage.

I believe I am safe in saying that it is the consensus of opinion that this lake will add to the beauties of this wonderful canyon in a great measure.

In addition, the city and county of San Francisco are obliged, under the terms of this bill, to build roads and trails through this inaccessible country to the Hetch Hetchy Valley and the higher reaches of the Sierra, thereby making these mountain beauty spots easily accessible to thousands of people who under present conditions are unable to view the natural wonders there.

I have recently received protests from people who make the point that to flood the floor of the Hetch Hetchy Valley would destroy the camping grounds now used by people in the lowlands in the summer time.

The area of the Yosemite National Park is 1,124 square miles; the area of the reservoir site in the Hetch Hetchy Valley is 1,330 acres.

I can find no justification for this conclusion.

It is true that if the grant is made the city will flood the floor of the Hetch Hetchy Valley and destroy its availability as a camping site, but the valley floor is not particularly well adapted for camp purposes.

Col. Biddle, of the Army board, in his testimony before the House committee, says:

The best part of the land which is now used for camping purposes by the two or three hundred people that venture into the valley during the entire year now belongs to the city of San Francisco in fee simple, and campers could be excluded therefrom at present if the city were inclined to take such action.

On the other hand, in return for these camping grounds, which can only be used by sufferance of the city, and are only suitable for that purpose during about two months of each year, the city proposes to surrender other lands owned by it outside of the valley to the Government for camping purposes.

I refer to the Tiltill Valley, containing 160 acres, situated about 3 miles northeast of Hetch Hetchy; the Canyon ranch, of 160 acres, situated about 3 miles southwest of the valley; the Hog ranch, comprising 322.45 acres, about 8 miles southwest of the valley; and a considerable area of good camping land in the vicinity of Lake Eleanor.

The Board of Army Engineers, on page 51 of their report, says:

The construction of reservoirs, especially the Hetch Hetchy, will destroy a few camping grounds within the park.

The construction of the proposed trails will, however, render accessible other parts of the park now not readily reached, and the number of camping places within the park is large.

This bill is introduced into Congress and urged by the people of California for the purpose of giving the city and county of San Francisco a definite status in respect to their water rights in the Hetch Hetchy Valley and their right of way over Government land.

The theory upon which the bill is drawn is that the United States, having sole jurisdiction over the national park, has the right to refuse the grant, and also has the right in making the grant to impose certain conditions upon the grantee.

The conditions in the bill are designed, first, for the protection of the Federal Government and the users of the national park; second, to secure, beyond the possibility of a doubt, to the agricultural water users who live below the Hetch Hetchy Valley the riparian rights to which they are by law entitled.

I believe the bill accomplishes all these objects; that it is a most meritorious and worthy measure; and I sincerely trust the Senate will favorably consider its passage.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, it is desired to have a very short executive session, after which we will ask for a further legislative session. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Unless there was something of vital importance going forward before the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator think this bill is going forward at any perceptible rate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Half past 5 is my hour.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 7207) granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way in, over, and through certain public lands, the Yosemite National Park, and Stanislaus National Forest, and certain lands in the Yosemite National Park, the Stanislaus National Forest, and the public lands in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there are no further amendments to be offered as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

SENATE.

Tuesday, October 7, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

AMBASSADOR TO SPAIN (S. DOC. NO. 207).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State submitting an estimate of appropriation to pay the compensation of the ambassador of the United States to Spain, appointed by the President by virtue of the provisions of the act of Congress approved September 4, 1913, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Tampa, Fla., praying for the enactment of legislation to extend the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission so as to permit the same to control coastwise steamship lines engaged in interstate commerce, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Globe, Ariz., praying for the enactment of legislation providing a substantial increase in the Pacific coast naval defense, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of Local Union No. 60, Western Federation of Miners, of Globe, Ariz., remonstrating against the use and acts of the State militia in the copper country of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to present to the Senate and ask to have printed in the RECORD several letters from presidents of universities and colleges of agriculture with reference to Senate bill 3091. Before presenting them to the Senate I wish to call attention to the fact that this bill is a redraft of a bill which was introduced in the Senate by myself and in the House by Congressman LEVER during January, 1912, and was known as a bill to provide for agricultural extension work and demonstration work from the State colleges of agriculture. The bill passed the House at the last session and reached the Senate. In the Senate it was amended by the substitution of what is known as the Page bill. The substitute went to conference, and both measures failed. At the present session we reintroduced the original bill both in the House and in the Senate, and Senate bill 3091 is a redraft of the original bill, we think substantially improved.

It is my desire as early as possible to obtain from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry a favorable report on Senate bill 3091, which provides for agricultural extension work in the nature of farm demonstration work from the colleges of agriculture. As there are a number of Senators now Members of this body who were not Members in the last Congress, I wish to call attention to the fact that 50 years ago the Morrill bill was passed, establishing the State colleges of agriculture. Then 25 years ago the Hatch bill was passed, establishing the experiment stations. The purpose of this legislation is to take the information, scientific and accurate in its nature, which has been gathered at the colleges of agriculture and at the experiment stations and place it alongside the home of the farmer and there, by demonstration, give him the benefit of all the information thus acquired.

Mr. President, in pressing this measure it is not my purpose in any sense to oppose technical vocational education. We have passed at this session through the Senate a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a commission of nine to take up the subject of vocational education. That joint resolution is now pending in the House. I hope to see the commission created. If it is not created, I hope still to bring the subject before the Committee on Education and Labor and at the coming session develop and present a separate bill on the subject of vocational education.

What I desire to state distinctly, in view of the debate that has been going on in the other House, is that in pressing the joint resolution for a commission on vocational education in no sense do we abandon as a separate measure the bill for demonstration work from the State colleges of agriculture. A number of us expect here, as I know they do in the House, to press as a separate measure the agricultural extension work from the State colleges of agriculture, similar to the bill which passed the House at the last session, and as a separate measure a bill along the line of vocational education.

Now, Mr. President, as the bill S. 3091 was not read when I introduced it, I ask unanimous consent that it be placed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, such will be the order. The Chair hears none.

The bill is as follows:

A bill (S. 3091) to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, and the United States Department of Agriculture.

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to aid in diffusing among the people of the United States useful and practical information on subjects relating to agriculture and home economics, and to encourage the application of the same, there may be inaugurated in connection with the college or colleges in each State now receiving, or which may hereafter receive, the benefits of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts" (12 Stat. L., p. 503), and of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890 (26 Stat. L., p. 417), agricultural extension work which shall be carried on in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture: Provided, That in any State in which two or more such colleges have been or hereafter may be established the appropriations hereinafter made to such State shall be administered by such college or colleges as the legislature of such State may direct.

SEC. 2. That cooperative agricultural extension work shall consist of the giving of instruction and practical demonstrations in agriculture and home economics to persons not attending or resident in said colleges in the several communities, and imparting to such persons information on said subjects through field demonstrations, publications, and otherwise; and this work shall be carried on in such manner as may be mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture or his representative and the State agricultural college or colleges receiving the benefits of this act.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of paying the expenses of said cooperative agricultural extension work and the necessary printing and distributing of information in connection with the same there is permanently appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $480,000 for each year, $10,000 of which shall be paid annually in the manner hereinafter provided to each State which shall, by action of its legislature, assent to the provisions of this act: Provided, That payment of such installments of the appropriation hereinafter made as shall become due to any State before the adjournment of the regular session of the legislature meeting next after the passage of this act shall be made upon the assent of the governor thereof, duly certified to the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided further, That there is also appropriated an additional sum of $300,000 for the fiscal year following that in which the foregoing appropriation first becomes available, and for each year thereafter for nine years a sum exceeding by $300,000 the sum appropriated for each preceding year, and for each year thereafter there is permanently appropriated for each year the additional sum of $3,000,000: Provided further, That before the beginning of each fiscal year projects setting forth the proposed plans for work to be carried on under this act shall be submitted by the proper officials of each college and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture before the funds herein appropriated shall become available to such college for that fiscal year. Such additional sums shall be used only for the purposes herebefore stated and shall be allotted annually to each State by the Secretary of Agriculture and paid in the manner herebefore provided in the proportion which the rural population of each State bears to the total rural population of all the States, as determined by the next preceding Federal census: Provided further, That no payment out of the additional appropriations herein provided shall be made in any year to any State until an equal sum has been appropriated for that year by the legislature of such State, or provided by State, county, college, or local authority for the maintenance of cooperative agricultural extension work.

SEC. 4. That there shall be in the Department of Agriculture a director of cooperative agricultural extension work, to be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture and report directly to him. The salary of such director shall be such as may be provided for by law from time to time.

SEC. 5. That the sums hereby appropriated for extension work shall be annually paid in equal semiannual payments on the 1st day of January and July of each year by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the warrant of the Secretary of Agriculture, out of the Treasury of the United States, to the treasurer or other officer of the State duly authorized by the laws of the State to receive the same; and such officer shall be required to report to the Secretary of Agriculture, on or before the 1st day of September of each year, a detailed statement of the amount so received during the previous fiscal year and of its disbursement on forms prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 6. That if any portion of the moneys received by the designated officer of any State for the support and maintenance of cooperative agricultural extension work, as provided in this act, shall by any action or contingency be diminished or lost, or be misapplied, it shall be replaced by said State to which it belongs, and until so replaced no subsequent appropriation shall be apportioned or paid to said State, and no portion of said moneys shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, erection, preservation, or repair of any building or buildings, or the purchase or rental of land or in college-course teaching, lectures in colleges, promoting agricultural trains, or any other purpose not specified in this act, and not more than 5 per cent of each annual appropriation shall be applied to the printing and distribution of publications. It shall be the duty of each of said colleges annually, on or before the 1st day of January, to make to the governor of the State in which it is located a full and detailed report of its operations in the direction of extension work as defined in this act, including a detailed statement of receipts and expenditures from all sources for this purpose, a copy of which report shall be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture and to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 7. That on or before the 1st day of July in each year after the passage of this act the Secretary of Agriculture shall ascertain and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury as to each State whether it is entitled to receive its share of the annual appropriation for cooperative agricultural extension work under this act and the amount which it is entitled, respectively, to receive. If the Secretary of Agriculture shall withhold a certificate from any State of its appropriation, the facts and reasons therefor shall be reported to the President, and the amount involved shall be kept separate in the Treasury until the expiration of the Congress next succeeding a session of the legislature of any State from which a certificate has been withheld, in order that the State may, if it should so desire, appeal to Congress from the determination of the Secretary of Agriculture. If the next Congress shall not direct such sum to be paid, it shall be covered into the Treasury.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Agriculture shall make an annual report to Congress of the receipts, expenditures, and results of the cooperative agricultural extension work in all of the States receiving the benefits of this act, and also whether the appropriation of any State has been withheld; and if so, the reasons therefor.

SEC. 9. That Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal any or all of the provisions of this act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have eight short letters of about a page each from presidents of universities and agricultural colleges discussing the bill, which I ask to have placed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALABAMA POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTE,

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT.

Auburn, Ala., September 27, 1913.

HON. HOKE SMITH,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SMITH: I am just in receipt of your letter, together with the inclosure of the agricultural extension bill, and I am hastening to say that I regard the provisions of this bill as of greater significance to the interest of the farmer than any measure since the foundation of the agricultural colleges.

The experiment stations have worked out an immense mass of valuable data for the benefit of agriculture. The colleges are a great teaching agency for training leaders. Now comes this bill opening the way for these leaders from the colleges to carry the results of the experiment station back to the great mass of the people who remain on the farm.

It seems to me that your bill finally completes the great circuit of the land-grant colleges. I sincerely trust that the measure will have a speedy passage.

With high personal regards and best wishes, I am

Very sincerely, yours,

CHAS. C. THACH, President.

UNIVERSITY OF ARKANSAS,
PRESIDENT'S OFFICE,
Fayetteville, September 29, 1913.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of September 17, addressed to former President Reynolds, of the University of Arkansas, and a copy of Senate bill 3091 have been received.

I have carefully read the provisions of this bill, and am of the opinion that its passage would be productive of an amount of good the value of which could not be estimated in dollars and cents.

The college of agriculture of the University of Arkansas has in the last few years made a beginning in a small way in agricultural extension work. It has been difficult to secure from the legislature adequate appropriations for this purpose. The members of the faculty of the agricultural college have devoted two months in the summer of 1913 to extension work in eight counties in Arkansas. In each case the work was done in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture, and the manner in which the farmers have taken hold of it has proved that they are eager for the opportunity.

We have now an enormous amount of agricultural knowledge that is of little benefit to the great majority of the farmers. The attempt to reach them through publications has not succeeded. It requires personal contact between the farmer and the agricultural expert to vitalize the work.

There is no question, I think, that if Senate bill No. 3091 should pass the farmers in every State would quickly realize the value of this work, and their demands on the various State legislatures would become so insistent that ample appropriations by the States would easily be obtained.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN C. FURRALL.

COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE, UNIVERSITY OF ARKANSAS,
Fayetteville, Ark., September 29, 1913.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In a joint meeting of the experiment station staff and the faculty of the College of Agriculture of the University of Arkansas, September 27, your bill, S. 3091, to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges in the several States and the United States Department of Agriculture, was read and its several sections were discussed at length. At the close of the discussion a resolution that a committee be appointed to notify you of their unqualified approval and indorsement of the bill was unanimously adopted. As the committee, we therefore take pleasure in rendering you this report.

Respectfully,

MARTIN NELSON,
W. R. WHEELLOCK,
R. R. DINWIDDIE,
W. L. FOWLER,
Committee.

PURDUE UNIVERSITY, PRESIDENT'S OFFICE,
La Fayette, Ind., September 24, 1913.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SMITH: I am glad to know of the introduction of the new bill, S. 3091, on behalf of agricultural extension. The terms of the bill have been carefully considered; it conforms in its general aspects to other Federal legislation in aid of the work of the agricultural colleges, and if enacted will beyond any question be in harmony with and accomplish desirable results as has all similar legislation preceding it.

I am strongly in favor of its enactment for the following reasons: First, the principle of agricultural extension, while comparatively recent in its application and operation, has given greater results in proportion to the expenditure of money than any other one agency under the direction of Federal and State Government for promoting a better knowledge and practice of agriculture.

Agricultural extension is the third phase of Federal and State aid to agriculture now needed to round out a complete organization. We have the work of formal instruction at the colleges; we have the work of investigation in the stations; what we now need more than anything else is the dissemination of the knowledge at hand and its demonstration before the individual farmer. This agricultural extension does.

Second, I am in favor of the particular form of this bill because it does not create a new organization but utilizes the institutions already established and successfully working in the different States. A machinery already exists capable of obtaining the most effective results from minimum expenditure of money. Appropriations for agricultural extension in various States should invariably be expended through the medium of the State organizations—that is, the agricultural colleges, experiment stations, and extension departments.

Third, I am in favor of that feature of the bill which contemplates a coordination of State with Federal resources. It is right and proper for the States to help themselves so far as possible and it is fair for the Federal Government in making such appropriations as contemplated in this bill to expect the State to meet these halfway.

Our experience in Indiana is that the farmers are quickly responsive to the work of extension; that it is of practical and real aid to them; and that there is no limit, if wisely directed, to the amount of practical educational work which can be done in this way or to its real and genuine benefits.

I beg to be permitted to render any assistance in my power to you and your colleagues in the promotion of this legislation.

Very truly, yours,

W. E. STONE, President.

MASSACHUSETTS AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE,
PRESIDENT'S OFFICE,
Amherst, October 3, 1913.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I noted with great interest that you have again introduced a bill providing for Federal appropriations for extension work at the land-grant colleges of the United States.

As you know, I believe most heartily and thoroughly in the need of this work, and I am still of the opinion that in order to give it national direction and application it needs the stimulus of a moderate appropriation from the National Treasury, such as you have suggested.

Under another cover I am sending you copy of an article of mine printed some months ago which gives in detail my argument for this important bill. You are at liberty to use that article as you may desire.

While abroad this summer with the commission on rural credit I had a good opportunity to observe the development of European agriculture in general, and I was impressed with the universal testimony that one of the chief reasons for the remarkable growth of successful agriculture in all European countries during the past two decades was the popular education of the working farmer. Personally I do not believe that Congress can make any appropriation of a similar amount of money that will do more to stimulate on right lines the development of our American agriculture, and I hope that your bill will become effective as law the 1st of next July.

Yours, very truly,

KENYON L. BUTTERFIELD,
President.

THE UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA,
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
University Farm, St. Paul, September 24, 1913.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have your letter of September 17, with copy of your bill, S. 3091, to provide for cooperative agricultural extension work. Among the most important advances being undertaken in educational work at the present time is the organized extension work in agriculture and home economics. The States working alone can accomplish very little compared with what might be accomplished through plans organized on a national basis. The great research bureaus of the National Department of Agriculture and the facilities for gathering information in the various national departments should be more readily available to the workers in these lines in the States. The plan proposed in your bill unifies this work. If it is carried out, it will bring to the great masses of the farming population assistance in improving agricultural methods and country-life conditions generally. This will aid the city dweller also by increasing the food supply through better methods of cropping and marketing.

The only suggestions we have to make is that in section 6, line 20, the second word "specified" should be changed to "included." You have specified certain things in section 6 which are not to be allowed under this act, but the classes of work allowed are specified only generally in section 2.

Very truly, yours,

GEORGE E. VINCENT,
President.
A. F. WOODS,
Dean and Director.

OREGON AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Corvallis, Oreg., September 24, 1913.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Acknowledging receipt of your favor of the 17th instant, will say that I have carefully read the copy of Senate bill 3091. There are no changes that I would suggest. I sincerely trust that the passage of the bill in its present form may be secured in the near future. I have kept in touch with your work in the Senate in the interest of legislation providing Federal support for agricultural college extension work, and I am sure that all of the land-grant college people throughout the entire country very much appreciate your efforts.

Very sincerely, yours,

W. J. KERR, President.

THE UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
Madison, September 29, 1913.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In regard to Senate Bill No. 3091, Sixty-third Congress, first session, a copy of which you send to me for an expression of opinion, I respectfully submit the following:

Without entering into the details of the bill, which have been very carefully worked out, its fundamental principle is to have the United States Government, through the Department of Agriculture, assist in carrying agricultural knowledge to the farmers of the country, in order that they may apply in their various communities the knowledge which meets their needs. This work is to be done through cooperation of the United States Department of Agriculture and the agricultural colleges of the different States. The United States and the States are both to contribute.

During the past decade our population has increased by 21 per cent, while agricultural production has increased by only 9 per cent. This is one among various factors which have led to the enhanced price of food products. Enough is known about agriculture so that if that knowledge were applied in all districts to each of the products raised, the value of the products of the land could be doubled within a decade. It is therefore imperative that methods be devised by which the people will apply the knowledge which has been worked out in the United States Department of Agriculture, at the various State stations, and in other parts of the world.

When an important discovery is made satisfactory results are not achieved by publishing such discovery in a bulletin. While this method is sufficient to carry the discovery to the specialists in agriculture, it does not reach the common people. There is no way which a discovery in agriculture can reach the farmers upon an extensive scale except by going out among them and by explanation and demonstration showing them the advantages which will come to them from an application of the discovery. In a number of States this method has already been introduced, and there is a well-established service in agricultural extension. In such States the agricultural output has been vastly increased. In regard to certain crops in certain sections, the United States Government has had a similar experience, notably with regard to cotton.

It is therefore already demonstrated that when the movement for carrying out agricultural knowledge to the people is in operation on a sufficiently broad scale throughout the country, the financial returns from the campaign will be nothing short of amazing. In a relatively short time, instead of population outrunning production, production will outrun population. Not only will there be a sufficient amount of food products to feed our own people, but there will be an increasing supply to be sent abroad to other countries.

For the above and for many other reasons which might be given, I am glad to give my unqualified approval to the agricultural extension bill.

Very truly, yours,

CHARLES R. VAN HISE.

NATIONAL-BANK GUARANTEED CREDIT NOTES.

Mr. BRISTOW. I introduce by request a bill for the issue and redemption of national-bank guaranteed credit notes. It is a short bill and I should like to have it read. I introduce it by request because I do not care to indorse its details, but I think it contains an idea that is a very valuable one, and I should like to call it to the attention of the Senate in this way.

The bill (S. 3197) for the issue and redemption of national-bank guaranteed credit notes was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

A bill (S. 3197) for the issue and redemption of national-bank guaranteed credit notes.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act any national banking association having $100,000 capital, which has been in business for one year, and has a surplus fund equal to 20 per cent of its capital, may, in addition to its bond-secured circulation, take out for issue and circulation national-bank notes without a deposit of bonds as now provided by law. Said notes shall be issued in same form and appearance and denominations as the bond-secured national-bank notes. The amount of said notes so taken out by any national banking association may not exceed 100 per cent of the amount of its capital stock.

Sec. 2. That every national banking association taking out notes, as provided in the preceding section, shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States, in the months of January and July, a tax at the rate of 5 per cent per annum upon its average circulation in excess of the amount of its bond-secured circulating notes outstanding during the preceding six months.

Sec. 3. That said taxes so paid shall constitute an expense or guaranty fund to redeem notes of failed banks and to pay cost of printing and redemption.

Sec. 4. That on all of such unsecured notes not provided for by deposit of lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States at the end of six months the rate of tax shall be increased to 6 per cent, and on all of such unsecured notes not provided for by deposit with the Treasurer of the United States at the end of nine months the rate of tax shall be increased to 7 per cent per annum, and after 12 months the Comptroller of the Currency shall order the retirement of such notes.

In the event of the failure of any national bank its circulating notes unsecured and outstanding shall be redeemed in the same manner as if provided for and charged to the expense or guaranty fund, and the Treasurer of the United States shall for any notes of a failed bank so redeemed have a claim as a preferred creditor and first lien on the assets of said bank, and any amount recovered shall be credited back to the said fund.

Sec. 5. That any national banking association taking out notes in excess of its bond-secured notes shall maintain on deposit with the Treasurer of the United States an amount equal to 5 per cent of such notes for a redemption fund, as required for redemption of bond-secured notes, and redemption of such notes shall be in all respects the same as for bond-secured notes.

When any national banking association desires to retire any part of its unsecured notes it shall pay such amount to the Treasurer of the United States, and tax on such amount shall then cease, and such notes in excess of bond-secured notes may be retired at any time without regard to the laws regulating the retirement of bond-secured notes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

DEPUTY COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I ask leave to put into the Record a little information I received this morning from the Civil Service Commission. It shows that on May 6, 1896, Mr. Cleveland put all deputy collectors under the civil service. They were then Democrats. In 1899 all positions of deputy collectors of internal revenue were excepted from competitive examination. Then, of course, our Republican brethren put in their friends. Then in 1906 they were put back in the civil service. I think the paper will prove to be quite interesting.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

The positions of deputy collector of internal revenue were first brought into the competitive service by the Executive order of May 6, 1896; later, by Executive order of November 2, 1896, one position of chief deputy collector in each district was excepted from competitive examination. By Executive order of July 27, 1897, one additional position of deputy collector in each district in which the number of employees in the office of the collector exceeded four and one position of deputy collector in each stamp agency or branch office were excepted from competitive examination. By Executive order of May 29, 1899, all positions of deputy collectors of internal revenue were excepted from competitive examination. All positions of deputy collectors of internal revenue then remained excepted from competitive examination until the Executive order of November 7, 1906, which restored them all to the competitive classified service except those receiving less than $300 a year compensation.

SOUTH AMERICAN TRADE (S. DOC. NO. 208).

Mr. WEEKS. I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a Senate document an article by Charles Lyon Chandler, of the American Consular Service, published in the World's Work of January, 1913, entitled "The world race for the rich South American trade." It relates particularly to the banking situation in South America, and I think will be of value in connection with legislation now pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts wish to have it inserted in the Record also, or simply to have it printed as a document? What is the request of the Senator?

Mr. WEEKS. I ask that it be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the request of the Senator from Massachusetts will be granted. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PRISON REFORM.

Mr. ASHURST. The State of Arizona is giving much careful attention to wholesome prison reform.

I ask unanimous consent to include in the Record a part of the illuminating report of Hon. J. J. Sanders, the parole clerk of the Arizona State Prison. Mr. Sanders is a leader in the humanitarian and now nation-wide movement to bring a reform in our prisons, so that when an erring brother emerges from prison he will emerge reclaimed to society instead of ruined.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Arizona will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

REPORT OF PAROLE CLERK.

A convict is now considered a human being in Arizona. By the same token, these convicts are now believed to have divine attributes inherent within them the same as all other human beings. This attribute is what is known as good. To cultivate and nurture this good in the inmates of State prisons is the goal sought by all advanced penologists. Education and kind treatment are working wonders in all penal institutions of the progressive type in the conservation and regeneration of human beings. The great principles of Christianity are just being introduced into American prisons. Pagan customs of cruel torture were in vogue previous to the dawn of this new Christian era. America has been pagan for the last 50 years in a mad worship of dollars. Humanity has been forgotten in that dark and dismal age of our history. The writing of the Arizona constitution marks the beginning of a new epoch in American history. That bold instrument proclaimed the rights of men and deposed the dollar czar. The Nation has caught the spirit.

A pagan custom of punishment still remains upon the statute books of this State. The pagans threw Christians to the wild beasts in the arena in ancient Rome, or nailed them to crosses until they died. We execute Christians by hanging them by the neck until they are dead. This pagan custom has been grafted onto our Christian civilization.

Quit emulating these pagan Romans by having legal executions and get under the influence of twentieth century progress. Repeal all laws relating to legal executions in this State.

THE INDETERMINATE SENTENCE.

The indeterminate-sentence law, passed by the last legislature, is working nicely. The next step will bring the indefinite sentence. Instead of sending a prisoner to the prison for an indeterminate period, the State will send the convicted party to prison until cured, the same as the State now commits insane patients to the State insane hospital. An abnormal human being has psychic or physical defects. These defects should be cured or remedied before the person is released on parole. The legislature, in creating the board of commissioners of paroled prisoners, placed added duties upon the attorney general and the State auditor. These two officials have been unable to attend any of the meetings of the parole board, because their time was all taken up with the duties of their respective offices. The legislature should remedy this defect, for the State of Arizona should deal squarely with all of its wards incarcerated in the State prison. The letter and spirit of the indeterminate-sentence law will be violated when the minimum sentences expire, if the prisoner has kept faith with the State; the State should in turn keep faith with the prisoner by having a full board at every meeting to hear each application for a parole after having served faithfully his minimum sentence.

PAROLED PRISONERS.

We now have 46 men out upon parole. Twenty-six of this number have been paroled by this administration since March 1, 1912. Only one of this last number broke his parole, and he has been apprehended and is now in prison to serve the maximum of his sentence. Most of our prisoners on parole are holding good jobs or positions and are working steadily, providing for their families and for themselves. The State has been relieved of the expense of keeping them in prison, and they are now respected in the communities in which they reside, thus vindicating the parole system as a great conservator of human beings. The rules and regulations governing these men out on parole are submitted in this report. The sovereign State of Arizona is acting the part of the parent to the child. The danger spots are mapped and the way to higher ideals is pointed out monthly in personal letters to each and every paroled man, who has to report monthly. We have a few paroled by former administrations, who are required to report quarterly. This is not as satisfactory as the monthly report.

MAIL PRIVILEGES.

The present administration inaugurated a daily mail for the prisoners. All inmates can now write as many letters to their relatives and friends as they may wish. They are also at liberty to receive as many letters as are written them by their friends and relatives, subject to ordinary inspection. Many of the daily newspapers of the State and Nation enter the prison reading room. All of the leading magazines and periodicals also are allowed into the reading room. A great many scientific books have been added to the library. Many books and magazines have been presented by kind friends in the State and elsewhere. This reading room and library was established since March 1 last by the present administration. There were a very few books here at that time, and what were here were securely boxed up in the prison morgue.

The letters from mothers, sisters, brothers, relatives, and friends to the inmates always bring cheer and wholesome advice. This one avenue alone is working wonders in the upbuilding of the characters of all the men incarcerated here. Let me pause here to remark—and I say it with a full knowledge of great and lasting results attained—if Gov. Hunt never did anything else for the convicts, their mothers, sisters, relatives, and friends, he would deserve a monument as rugged and lasting as the silent sentinel of Yavapai—Old Thumb Butte. Not only has the letter mail driven gloom and despair from within the gray walls, but the instructive features of our family newspapers and magazines have lent their balm to heal the sores caused by worry and blasted hopes.

PRISONERS' MAIL OF OTHER STATES.

Warden Tynan stated recently at a banquet in the city of Denver, Colo., that prisons are breeding places of crime. This is not the case in the Arizona State prison.

Noting the influence of the daily letter, newspaper, and magazine mail on the inmates of this institution, I caused a circular letter to be sent to all the wardens of the various State penal institutions of the various States that compose our Nation, asking what restrictions, outside of ordinary inspection, they place on prisoners' letter, magazine, and newspaper mail. Nearly all of the States responded, and their replies are summarized in this report.

There is no valid reason why a prison should be a breeding place for crime—no more than any other institution where a body of people are gathered together. A prison should be a place where high ideals are taught, more so than any other institution of man, for the inmates are in greater need of such training. If restrictions are placed on these great educators—personal letters, newspapers, and magazines—it at once becomes apparent that all such institutions employing this primitive method or custom are in a very backward condition, and it must necessarily follow that such prisons can not be rated other than breeding places for crime. To change a man we must change the current of his thoughts and this can be done only by education. Restrictions on this character of mail by any State of its prisoners becomes at once the concern of all the other States. A State penal institution that places restrictions upon any of these great avenues of education other than ordinary inspection becomes a menace to the welfare of all the other States and in the interest of progress, justice, and twentieth-century enlightenment this mail restriction should be abolished.

In connection with this subject I wish to quote from one or two of the letters which I received from the various wardens over the country to whom I wrote in regard to this matter.

Mr. S. M. Melick, warden of the Nebraska State prison, says: "We consider the newspapers great factors and aid in prison discipline."

PAROLE OFFICE.

Number of men on parole Jan. 31, 1913.....	6
Number of men paroled by the present administration between Feb. 29, 1912, and Jan. 31, 1913.....	26
Number of men paroled by this administration who have violated their parole.....	1
Number of men paroled by this administration returned to prison for violation of parole.....	1

Number of parole violators who escaped.....	1
Number of men pardoned from parole under the present administration.....	5
Number of men released from parole by expiration of sentence.....	16
Number of men released from parole by expiration of sentence whose citizenship has been restored.....	2

A little less than 4 per cent of the men paroled by this administration have violated the conditions of their parole. These conditions, as follows, appear in the body of the certificate of parole which is delivered to the prisoner when he is sent out from this institution on parole:

- First. That he abstain from the use of intoxicants.
- Second. That he shall not frequent places where intoxicants are sold.
- Third. That he shall not engage in any form of gambling or frequent places where gambling is done, including pool halls and other such places.

Fourth. That he shall abstain from vicious, lewd, or unworthy companions and associates, keeping his conduct at all times consistent with that of the best and most worthy citizens of his community.

Fifth. That he shall on the first day of each month report in writing to the parole clerk of the Arizona State prison, giving a statement of his occupation, condition, earnings, savings, the name of his employer, and such other information as the parole clerk may require.

The paroled prisoner is at all times in the custody of the parole clerk and may be ordered rearrested and returned to prison at any time at the discretion of the parole clerk or any member of the board of commissioners of paroled prisoners.

All men now out on parole are reporting regularly to the parole clerk, who is in direct communication personally with each and every paroled prisoner who has not been released from parole.

All paroled prisoners are now employed and earning good wages, with the exception of two men who are physically unable to work.

During the 11 months beginning March 1, 1912, and ending January 31, 1913, there has passed through the hands of the parole clerk, for credit of the inmates of the institution, $6,664.39. This amount represents returns from the sale of novelties and trinkets manufactured by the inmates, together with donations from their friends and relatives.

THE PRISON LIBRARY.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 7, 1913.

RAILROAD FRANCHISES IN PORTO RICO (S. DOC. NO. 209).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 32 of the act of Congress approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith certified copies of franchises granted by the Executive Council of Porto Rico, which are described in the accompanying letter from the Secretary of War transmitting them to me. Such of these as relate to railroad, street railway, telegraph, and telephone franchises, privileges, or concessions have been approved by me as required by the joint resolution of May 1, 1900 (31 Stat., 715).

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 7, 1913.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 12 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday next at 12 o'clock meridian.

The motion was agreed to.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, being House bill 7207.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the roll is called, if the Senator from Kansas will withhold the suggestion for a moment, the Chair will inquire if that bill was made the unfinished business?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It so appears on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that it was. The Senator from Kansas suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Norris	Sutherland
Bacon	Hitchcock	Overman	Swanson
Borah	Hollis	Page	Thomas
Brandeggee	James	Pittman	Thompson
Bristow	Kern	Poindexter	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lane	Pomerene	Vardaman
Chilton	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Weeks
Clarke, Ark.	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Williams
Cummins	Myers	Shields
Fletcher	Nelson	Simmons
Goff	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. McCUMBER] is necessarily absent on important business.

Mr. THORNTON. I announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. RANDELL], and ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. BRYAN], and will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My colleague [Mr. CULBERSON] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. SMITH of Georgia answered to his name.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second roll call discloses the presence of 42 Senators. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request the presence of absent Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia moves that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. McLEAN, Mr. REED, Mr. OWEN, Mr. GORE, Mr. LEWIS, and Mr. LEA entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Fifty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that House bill 7207 be proceeded with as the order of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that House bill 7207, granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way, be now considered. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to have the matter suspended for a moment until I can confer with the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the matter will be suspended.

EMPLOYERS' WELFARE WORK.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred Senate resolution 184, submitted by Mr. BURTON on the 25th ultimo, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 5,000 additional copies of House Document No. 1480, Sixty-second Congress, entitled "Employers' Welfare Work," for the use of the Senate document room.

SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I withdraw my request that the Senate proceed with the consideration of House bill 7207, which is the unfinished business, and ask unanimous consent that it be taken up for consideration on Monday, December 1, 1913, and that it then be and remain the unfinished business of the Senate until disposed of, and that it be disposed of not later than the calendar day of December 6, 1913, together with all amendments.

Mr. BORAH. That includes the consideration of any amendment which may be offered?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator in the interest of accuracy. I understood the Senator to ask that the bill should be made the unfinished business. He should ask that it be made the regular order. It becomes the unfinished business when it is the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia will permit the Chair to state that the bill is now the unfinished business, according to the calendar.

Mr. BACON. I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to have the Secretary read the agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed agreement.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that on Monday, December 1, 1913, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7207) granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way, etc., and that before adjournment on the calendar day of Saturday, December 6, 1913, the Senate will vote upon any amendment that may be pending to the bill, any amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill, through the regular parliamentary stages, to its final disposition.

Mr. GRONNA. Not the calendar day, but the legislative day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will permit the Chair to make an observation, an order has already been entered that the Senate shall take up another matter December 8, and that, therefore, if made, the legislative day it might interfere.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The point is, the Senator from Nevada asked unanimous consent that it be concluded not later than the legislative day of December 6, and the Secretary can not change the request of the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will ask the Senator from Idaho if he has any particular reason to have the agreement fix the calendar day?

Mr. BORAH. I have a particular reason, but I do not know that I would urge it. But the legislative day of the 6th will not interfere on this bill with the calendar day of the 8th, and there need not be any objection upon that ground. I would prefer to have it the legislative day, because my experience is that these calendar-day agreements are very unsatisfactory in disposing of a serious measure.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that the effect of the consent to vote upon the legislative day would be possibly to force recesses and cut out morning business between the 6th and 8th instead of having morning business. That is the only practical difference between the calendar day and the legislative day.

Mr. BORAH. A recess is a very convenient affair.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; I do not know that it is objectionable.

Mr. BORAH. I can see no objection to making it the legislative day of the 6th when we have not anything until the calendar day of the 8th. Taking up the bill on the 1st it will likely be voted on even before the 6th.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is true, but if the 6th arrived and it were not finished, what would happen under the agreement for a legislative day would be that the Senate could not adjourn until the 7th, but would have to take recesses until the 8th, and it would be the legislative day of the 6th until the 8th.

Mr. BRISTOW. It would not interfere with anything.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know that it would interfere with anything except to cut out the morning business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call attention to the fact that the 7th would be Sunday and probably we would not want to sit here on Sunday if we could avoid it.

Mr. BORAH. That is a matter which we would determine at that time. It is likely that we would not have to do it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I called attention to it because the Senator from Idaho said that the consideration could go on upon the 7th as I understood him.

Mr. BORAH. Of course we could go on upon the 7th by ignoring Sunday.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We could, but I think we would prefer not to do so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If I may be allowed to make a suggestion, I should think that six entire days, from the 1st to the 6th, inclusive, would be enough time to give all Senators an opportunity to express their views. I hope the Senator will ask that the bill be voted upon on the calendar day, and that that request will be granted.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will ask that it be the calendar day. I do not want to ask for anything that would be objectionable, but I want to have it fixed for the calendar day because it would seem that between now and then there will be ample time for examination and debate, and that there need not be over five days' debate on this subject under any consideration. I think we would be placing it in a position where we might impose on some Senators by fixing upon the legislative day. The object in entering into an agreement at this time is to suit the convenience of all Senators. I therefore ask that it be the calendar day, and then we will know that the debate will be terminated and the bill disposed of at least by that date.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In view of that, I ask that the Secretary may again read the proposed agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the agreement proposed.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] asks unanimous consent that on Monday, December 1, 1913, immediately upon the conclusion of routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7207) granting to the city and county of San Francisco certain rights of way, etc., and that before adjournment on the calendar day of Saturday, December 6, 1913, the Senate will vote upon any amendment that may be pending to the bill, any amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill, through the regular parliamentary stages, to its final disposition.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask the Senator if that contemplates the laying aside of this matter for the rest of the special session?

Mr. PITTMAN. It does, except when anyone wishes to speak on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the entering of the order as read by the Secretary? The Chair hears none. The unanimous-consent agreement is entered into and ordered.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, on this matter I desire to read into the Record an editorial from the Independent of October 2, which is as follows:

SAVE HETCH HETCHY.

Last week the Public Lands Committee reported favorably to the Senate the bill giving the Hetch Hetchy Valley over to San Francisco for a municipal water tank. As the House has already passed this bill, the existence of one of the world's beauty spots is now trembling in the balance against commercial greed.

The sifting of the evidence in the matter reveals the following facts:

1. San Francisco is in need of a new water supply.
2. There is no water-famine emergency which can be relieved by the taking of the Hetch Hetchy Valley, for it would take eight years to develop Hetch Hetchy, and San Francisco must have more water before then.

3. There are several other available and abundant sources of water supply. This is stated by the Board of Army Engineers, who declare that these sources are practicable and abundant and that the matter is simply a question of cost.

4. The board reports that with the exception of the Sacramento River no thorough or able investigation has been made of other sources than the Hetch Hetchy.

5. The board estimates that a maximum difference of cost between the Hetch Hetchy and the next available source of water supply is $20,000,000, or 25 per cent of the cost.

Thus the question is reduced to one of pure commercialism—whether the National Government, in order to save San Francisco additional expense, will sacrifice to it a phenomenal natural treasure house, undoubtedly one of the wonders of the world. It must be borne in mind that a difference of utility exists between the forest reserves and the national parks. The former are created for the purpose of preserving waters and forests for the good of the surrounding public. The national parks, on the contrary, are scenic marvels, of which the United States is properly the trustee for civilization and the future.

San Francisco has endeavored to minimize both the value of the Hetch Hetchy and the damage that will be done by its conversion into a reservoir. They say it is remote, difficult of access, and that it contains mosquitoes at certain times of the year. All these objections would have justified San Francisco a generation ago in taking the Yosemite Valley itself. The time to reserve great scenery is before the hands of the covetous have tightened upon it. The beauty of Hetch Hetchy is the beauty of wildness, and this wildness will be entirely destroyed by the submersion of the valley. Frederick Law Olmsted, the great landscape authority, said that the beauty of these gorges of the Sierras consists in the contrast between the grandeur of the lofty walls, running from 2,000 or 3,000 feet in height, and the exquisite sylvan character of the floors of the valley. Hetch Hetchy has been pronounced by John Muir a marvelous counterpart of the Yosemite, with very attractive differences. William Keith, the California artist, thought it more beautiful than the Yosemite. Were there no Yosemite Valley, it would be visited for the same reasons that the public now flocks to the sister wonder.

In the light of all these facts a duty to humanity lies upon the Senate of the United States. There is no doubt that the enlightened sense of the whole country is against the unnecessary profanation. The persistence with which it is being urged may be partly understood when it is borne in mind that the bill will provide contracts involving the expenditure of $122,000,000.

It is to be hoped that Senators from the East and South, if not from the West, will see their duty to the public by refusing to give away national property to San Francisco without adequate reason.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask who is the author of that article?

Mr. BRISTOW. It is an editorial in the Independent.

Mr. GRONNA. In the same connection I ask to have read a short telegram which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MODESTO, CAL., October 6, 1913.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I congratulate you on your stand on Raker bill. In addition to preventing the irrigation and development of thousands of acres of the finest land in the world it gives San Francisco an exclusive franchise absolutely free of the best undeveloped water power in California, and all this in the face of the fact that San Francisco has plenty of water for its present need and other sources of supply that will not injure anyone. A delay until the regular session can not possibly injure San Francisco, and will give those interested further time to be heard.

C. R. GAILFUS,
Formerly of Rolla, N. Dak.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask in this connection that the Secretary read the following telegram.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The telegram will be read.

Mr. PITTMAN subsequently said: Now, I ask unanimous consent that the telegram I have sent to the desk when read be printed after the editorial article read by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] and the telegram submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], as it is in the nature of an answer to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada to print in the RECORD the particular telegram to which he has referred following in sequential order the editorial and telegram already ordered printed in the RECORD?

Mr. PITTMAN. I should like to have the telegram read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to its being read? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

ALEXANDER VOGELSANG,

Care Senator Pittman, Washington, D. C.:

Le Hane represents none of the authorized organizations in the irrigation districts and only small percentage of irrigators. The Modesto and Turlock irrigation districts have indorsed action of local committee sent to Washington. This committee nor its actions has never been recalled, repudiated, or discredited. We stand by the record in Washington.

ED. KIERNAN,

Chairman of Joint Meeting of Boards of Directors of Modesto and Turlock Irrigation Districts.

T. C. HOCKING,

Editor of Modesto Herald.

E. L. SHERMAN,

Editor of Modesto Evening News.

A. V. HOFFMAN,

Editor of Turlock Journal.

F. M. WICKIZER,

Editor of Hughson Citizen.

J. W. CORSON,

President of Modesto Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. NORRIS. Before that telegram is read, will the Senator yield for a statement that I should like to have go in after the telegram and the editorial, because the Senator's telegram is of a different nature, as I understand.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; I think not.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to make a statement that will fit very well at this point.

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. NORRIS. I simply want to call the attention of the Senate, first, to the editorial read by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], then to the telegram read directed to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], both opposing the bill—one for one reason and the other for another. They are absolutely antagonistic. If in answer to the irrigationists this bill should be defeated and this proposition turned over to the irrigation of the San Joaquin Valley, that would be in direct conflict with the ideas of those who believe as the editorial sets forth, because if the irrigationists use this water and develop this power it must deface beautiful nature just the same as though it were done for the people who are thirsty in San Francisco. The opponents of this measure are united as far as opposition to San Francisco is concerned, but if the irrigationists were to have their way they would be just as bitterly opposed.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish, Mr. President, to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. Of course the Senator from Nebraska understands that this telegram does not express my views on the subject.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no.

Mr. GRONNA. I simply presented the telegram and asked to have it read just as I received it.

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly, I am not finding fault with the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. As I said on Saturday, and as the Senator, I think, knows, when a Member of the House I was also a member of the Committee on Public Lands, and this same matter was considered for weeks and months, and those who were members of the Public Lands Committee of the House at that time and who heard the testimony for and against this proposed measure certainly received information enabling them to understand it.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not finding fault with any Senator, whether he opposes the bill on one ground or the other. I am not making complaint of the men who are opposing it along the line outlined in the editorial read by the Senator from Kansas. Do not misunderstand me. I am not finding fault with the other class of opponents to the bill, who say we ought not to give this water to San Francisco, but we ought to defeat the bill and let those who have land to irrigate develop this power.

I am not complaining; I am simply calling attention to the fact that as between those two interests they are diametrically opposed to each other. I suppose those who are opposed to defacing nature there, as they call it, or obliterating some of its beauties because San Francisco wants the water, would be just as bitter against those who want to use the water for irrigation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield further to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator from Nevada will pardon me, I find no fault with the Senator from Nebraska or anyone who is in favor of the bill. I am sure that all Senators who are members of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, and all Representatives who are members of the Public Lands Committee of the House, have done their duty as they saw it and as they believed to be for the best interest of the people.

But, Mr. President, I have read the hearings over somewhat, as carefully as I could, since Saturday, and the question of water power has not been discussed. According to the figures presented by Mr. Freeman, the engineer who represents San Francisco, this water power is worth $50,000,000 and has an annual rental value of $2,900,000. According to the report made by the Board of Army Engineers, it is worth more than $50,000,000. The board estimates that 115,000 horsepower can be developed, worth at the plants $20 per horsepower year, or a total of $2,300,000 per year.

For that reason, Mr. President, I believe that the least thing the Senate should do is to defer action so that the people of California and of the United States who are directly interested may have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield further, and to whom?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will yield first to the Senator from Colorado who has been on his feet for some time. Then I will yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I expect before this bill is finally submitted to a vote to speak at some length upon it. My only purpose this morning is to add a word or two to what has been suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who, in his very incisive way, has called attention to the fact that here are two diametrically conflicting interests, each of which from its own standpoint is opposing this grant. It is evident that these interests are not reconcilable, because the one proposes to forever prevent the use of the water for any purpose whatever, while the other designs the diversion of the same water, but for an entirely different purpose from that proposed by the pending bill; the one being based upon the sentimental view that the scenic beauties of the Hetch Hetchy Valley should not in anywise be altered or defaced, the other upon the practical view that the water should be diverted because the water is needed more insistently for irrigation than for municipal purposes. Yet, Mr. President, there seems to be in some way a union of these forces for the accomplishment, I presume, of a common object, which means the defeat of the bill.

I have here a letter dated the 1st of October from Boston, signed by Mr. Edmund A. Whitman, president, and Mr. Allen Chamberlain, secretary, of the Society for the Preservation of National Parks, Eastern Branch. In this letter my attention is called to the water shortage in San Francisco; to the Tuolumne, which flows through the Hetch Hetchy Valley and which empties into the San Joaquin Valley; to the fact that this valley is excessively arid and that every drop of water that runs into it can be used for irrigation; to the claim that there are various other sources from which San Francisco and other bay cities can get abundant water; and then I am urged to see that action is delayed upon this bill until the relative rights of the farmers, who must store water in foothill reservoirs, and the people of San Francisco can be more fully determined.

If this society is what it purports to be, Mr. President, it is strange that the effort should be made by it to contend for the right to divert this water for irrigation purposes, instead of for municipal purposes, when the effect upon the floor of the valley must be precisely the same.

Mr. President, I believe that all of the great beauty spots of the mountains should be preserved as a heritage not only for the next but for all future generations, but I am not one of those who believe that any part or any resource of nature should be preserved if that which it contains is essential to human well-being. If the demands of the growing population upon the waters of the arid West require the diversion of those waters for the use of human kind, that ought to be our first and greatest consideration.

We have heard a great deal about conservation in the last few years, but in its discussion the conservation of man, woman, and child has been largely lost sight of; yet I can conceive of nothing that should appeal to the legislature of a great people's government more eloquently and irresistibly than the needs of the people who compose that government. Every other consideration should give way to that; and I confess, Mr. President, that I hear with a little impatience the various assertions made here and elsewhere that the people of San Francisco can obtain an adequate supply of water by going somewhere else if they have the mind to spend a trifle of $20,000,000 more for it. Twenty million dollars is a bagatelle in the minds of many people of this country in these modern days of huge financial enterprise, but nevertheless $20,000,000 is an enormous sum of money to those who must assume and bear it as a burden of debt. When we consider that the great city of San Francisco has passed through an ordeal of affliction never yet endured by any other community in America; that out of its smoke and its ashes and its destruction it has risen phoenixlike and to-day crowns the bay of the Golden Gate with a beauty and a splendor and a promise unparalleled in all its past; that it is to-day engaged in the construction of buildings for one of the greatest expositions ever held, all at its own expense, in order to properly commemorate and celebrate the completion of the greatest of engineering undertakings of which the world's history gives account; and that it has indebted itself all that it is possible for it to endure, first, for its recreation, and, next, for this great work, $20,000,000 is a tremendous sum, which it is insisted shall be superposed upon it in order that a place which nature seems to have designed for the purpose of furnishing a water supply to a great community should be left untouched and its resources wasted forever and forever, to the end that some of its beauties may not be destroyed—when not even that is contemplated. It will only be transformed by the erection of the dam and the retention of the waters for the use of man. Mr. President, $20,000,000 may mean to San Francisco all the difference between the success and the failure of its very laudable effort to procure for itself a proper and needed water supply.

In this connection, before I take my seat I want to refer to one other matter that has come to my attention. I refer to the protest of some citizens of Los Angeles to the making of this grant. Los Angeles is a magnificent city in southern California. It is growing more rapidly than any other city in the world, and in all probability the next census will show it to have a population in excess of that of San Francisco. It occupies a similar region, so far as concerns the matter of moisture. As a consequence, it has been obliged to ask aid at the hands of Congress, which it has received, and received generously and freely, to the end that its water supply might be adequate to its present and its future needs. The Congress granted it the same right to the waters of the Owen River that the people of San Francisco ask to the waters of the Tuolumne. Its aqueduct is longer—I do not think I can be mistaken about that—than the one which must be constructed to convey these waters to San Francisco. It has completed that magnificent enterprise, Mr. President, and I hold in my hand here an invitation to attend the celebration that is to be held on the 5th and 6th of next month in that city to commemorate the completion of that wonderful enterprise; and yet, curiously enough, some of the good people of Los Angeles, doubtless with the best motives in the world, are protesting that Congress shall deny to its sister city the same largess, the same generosity, and the same grant of a necessity of life which that beautiful city asked for and received. If there is a community in the United States anywhere that should unite with San Francisco in its effort to obtain this needed water supply, it is the magnificent city of southern California, which must continue to grow and improve, confident in the fact that it has an adequate water supply from the resources of the territory and domain belonging to the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, would the Senator object to a question at that point?

Mr. THOMAS. Not at all.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Is not the Senator satisfied that the Hetch Hetchy Valley, being filled with clear water, in that part of those rugged mountains would add to the beauty of the scenery there, rather than detract from it?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, there is no question about it. The lake which will be created by the construction of this reservoir for the retention of the flood waters of the river will add—it must add—to the natural beauties of its surroundings. The photographs which we have had exhibited, the report of the engineers, and everything else confirm it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In this connection, if the Senator will pardon me, I want to say that I have heard that a great landscape painter, who wanted to paint a picture of Hetch Hetchy Valley, considered it necessary to put in the picture, in order to make it really beautiful, a lake which did not exist.

Mr. THOMAS. All of which, Mr. President, justifies our contention that this great enterprise will result in the improvement, rather than in the destruction, of the beauty of that section.

Now, just one word more and I am through; I did not intend to say as much as I have said, but I want to emphasize the fact that while Hetch Hetchy Valley is a part of a national park, the Government does not own all of it. The city of San Francisco long ago acquired the title to two-thirds of the valley of Hetch Hetchy; owns it, as I understand, in fee simple, and if it were disposed to be at all vandalistic, it might enter its own territory and destroy, change, cut away, and remove the growth that at present encumbers the ground which it owns.

I merely mention this to emphasize the fact that this is no newborn project of San Francisco, but that it has long been making an effort to free itself from the monopoly of a private water supply and to obtain a free municipal supply for all time, not only for itself—for San Francisco is generous—but for Oakland, Alameda, Berkeley, Palo Alto, and all that beautiful string of communities encircling the shores of the Golden Gate and of San Francisco Bay, those communities now representing an aggregate population of over 700,000. It is no new thing on the part of San Francisco; and I am amazed that anyone could imagine that any attempt has been made here to force a measure, or what some are unkind enough to designate as a job, through the Senate of the United States, when the city has been knocking at the gates of Congress, begging for the relief which it needs, and needs so badly, for the last 10 or 12 years. I thank the Senator from Nevada for yielding me the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator before he takes his seat what is the present system of supplying water to San Francisco?

Mr. THOMAS. The system is known as the Spring Valley system; that being the name of the company which supplies San Francisco with water.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is it a private corporation?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; and its supply is inadequate. San Francisco is in a region of country which has a wet and a dry season. When the wet season is on, of course water is abundant; but when the dry season is on, water is the most precious thing in the country. During the dry season the company is unable to furnish the city of San Francisco with more than 40,000,000 or 45,000,000 gallons a day, which is about 50 per cent of what the people of my city, with a population of 225,000, consume. The company has confessed its inability to meet the present emergency and the future demand.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is it possible that some of the opposition to this measure arises by reason of that interest?

Mr. THOMAS. It has, Mr. President, I will say to the Senator, in the past been a source of opposition; but this company perceives its inability to meet the growing needs of the community, and has, in conjunction with other interests in the city of San Francisco, united in the request that this grant be made.

Mr. FLETCHER. I presume it is likely that the city will take over the rights and interests of the present company in case this bill passes?

Mr. THOMAS. It intends to do so; it must do so.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I merely desire to suggest to the Senator from Florida that I do not understand that the Spring Valley Water Co. could have any particular objection to this enterprise so far as it is concerned, because I understand San Francisco must take over that property anyway. It does not militate against the interests of that monopoly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in that—

Mr. FLETCHER. In reply to the Senator's suggestion, I presume the city could take it over under condemnation proceedings; and if that is what is meant, the city could acquire the present system of water supply by condemnation proceedings.

Mr. BORAH. I am not altogether familiar with the details, but I have always understood that one of the elements of a complete water system for San Francisco would be the Spring Valley Water properties.

Mr. PITTMAN. I desire to answer the question—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not so understand. I thought that I had the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair at first thought so, too, but the Chair was in error.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have been trying to retain the floor to secure reading of the telegram which I sent to the desk some time ago, and I have yielded from time to time. Before having the telegram read I should like to state that the whole plan of San Francisco, under which it will supply this water and issue bonds, proposes a purchase of all the existing water rights in the city. That is an understood proposition.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in order that we may have a variety of views in reference to the situation, I ask to have printed in this connection the telegram which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BORAH. I will ask that the telegram may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., October 6, 1913.

Hon. W. E. BORAH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Hetch Hetchy issue not understood; have wired Senator PITTMAN Tuolumne water needed for development; 42 organizations in San Joaquin water problem association voting on protest submitted by committee; returns not all in; bill should go over till Congress has complete data.

A. L. COWELL,
Secretary Association.

Mr. PITTMAN. Secretary of what association?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed the telegram does not state.

Mr. BORAH. I am not responsible for the telegram, and so I do not know what the association is.

I ask to have read the telegram which I send to the desk, beginning with the word "have." The first part of it is a mere personal reference, which I do not think is necessary to go into the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reading of the telegram presented by the Senator from Idaho? There being none, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MODESTO, CAL., October 5, 1913.

Hon. Senator BORAH, Washington, D. C.:

Have Hetch Hetchy bill postponed to give us chance to be heard on our rights, which we have never had in Congress or Senate; 99 per cent of water users oppose Raker bill, and should it pass and this great injustice be imposed upon us the results can not be measured at this time. May God help to defend the interests of the thousands of home builders.

LEVI WINKLEBLECK,
Acting Chairman Water Users Modesto Irrigation District.

Mr. BORAH. While I am on my feet I desire to say a very few words in regard to this measure. As I was one of those who felt that this matter ought to go over, I desire to say that the object I had in view was not necessarily permanent or final opposition to the bill, but rather that before I voted on the bill I might be informed more thoroughly than I was able to be informed in regard to it.

Naturally I am in sympathy with the desire of San Francisco to have sufficient water. I think everyone would have to concede that if San Francisco needs this particular source of supply her interests are paramount, and that neither scenic beauties nor the demands of arid lands which might be irrigated by it should supersede the demand of San Francisco. But the question in which I was most concerned was whether or not this was the only source of supply for San Francisco; whether there were other means by which she could secure water for the purpose of furnishing it to the people of that city, or whether this was the sole source of supply.

I was unable myself to determine from the record, in so far as I have had time to investigate it, whether or not this was the only source of supply. If I find in the end that it is, I shall unhesitatingly vote for the bill. On the other hand, there was a feature of this measure which came up at a late hour which did interest me, and that was the one concerning which I have just introduced a telegram.

I do not think this bill settles the rights of those farmers, nor do I think we can settle the rights of those farmers by an act of Congress. If the users of water upon those lands think their rights have been adjudicated, as it were, they are simply being misled—not intentionally, perhaps, because I understand that was not put in at the suggestion of San Francisco, but rather at the suggestion of other people. But I do not know of any power which Congress has to go into any State and adjudicate the priority of water rights as between water users; and the undertaking upon the part of Congress to insert it in an act here is a vain thing, because, in my judgment, it will not determine the rights of anyone nor settle any question of priority.

Nevertheless, it seems that these people came here, through their representatives, and agreed to certain terms, and added to the bill certain conditions which they supposed would protect their rights. Afterwards they claimed that those who were to represent them did not represent them in good faith; that their interests were not properly protected, even if we should concede that this could be done legally; so they have telegraphed here to have the matter postponed. For that reason I felt that it ought to go over, although by urging that it shall go over I do not indicate what shall be my final verdict when I come to examine the facts.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I rose rather to comment upon the question of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] in regard to the attitude of the Spring Valley Water Co. as to this bill. The fact of the case is, as I understand, that the Spring Valley Water Co., which now supplies San Francisco with water, is a defendant in a suit already instituted in the courts by the city of San Francisco for the condemnation of the properties of the Spring Valley Water Co.; and whatever may be the fate of this bill that suit will go on, and that property will be acquired. So there can not be any interest or motive on the part of the Spring Valley Water Co. either to promote or to defeat this bill.

Furthermore, as to the "great emergency" that has been spoken of here, that is rather irrelevant just now, in view of the agreement that has been reached that the bill shall go over until December; so that all concerned will have reasonable opportunity, I think, in the intervening time, to make a showing as to their interests in the water involved in this proposition. But there is no emergency in San Francisco which will be affected in any way whatever by taking up this bill now or by taking it up in December. There is a shortage of water in San Francisco; but the Spring Valley Water Co. has already begun work upon a dam, called the Calaveras Dam, which will be completed a long time before the Hetch Hetchy project could be completed, even if work were begun upon it to-day. That dam will be completed in two years, and when it is completed it will add some 40,000,000 gallons a day to the water supply of the city of San Francisco, which will meet its needs for the next 20 years.

Before taking my seat, and not to go into this question at length at all, I wish to say that it seems to me the proper solution of the question requires a comprehensive view of the water supply of the great valley of California, its sources, and the comparative needs, not only as between San Francisco and the landowners in the San Joaquin Valley, but as between them and the entire people of the Sacramento Valley and the San Joaquin Valley, and a consideration of the comparative supply of water and need for that water in the two valleys.

Taking that view of it, we are confronted at once with the proposition that the San Joaquin Valley, into which the Hetch Hetchy water flows, is a great, dry, arid region, generally speaking, over 7,000,000 acres in extent, with a very small supply of water, and that it will take all the water tributary to the San Joaquin Valley to irrigate one-half of the land which is estimated to be susceptible of irrigation from an engineering standpoint; while, on the other hand, there is available to San Francisco the water supply of the great Sacramento Valley, which has more than double the quantity of water which the San Joaquin Valley has, and less than half the need for water which the San Joaquin Valley has. The rainfall in the San Joaquin Valley is 10 inches a year, while in the Sacramento Valley it is 20 inches a year. The depth of water which comes out annually over the area of the San Joaquin Valley, as estimated by measurements taken at a certain point in the lower valley, is 18 inches covering the floor of the valley, while the depth of water covering the floor of the Sacramento Valley and flowing out annually is 8 feet.

The deduction is that all the water San Francisco will ever need can be taken from the Sacramento Valley without in any way depriving a single soul of water which he may need for irrigation or any other purpose; whereas, if the water which San Francisco will need for all time, as proposed by this measure, is taken out of the San Joaquin Valley, it will deprive a great many people, landowners in that valley, of the only possible source of water for irrigating their land.

That is one of the great, underlying questions which ought to be considered, and must be considered, in the proper solution of this problem.

I want to add only one word more, as to the possibility of getting this water, of which there is such a vast quantity, in the Sacramento Valley. On that point I wish to call attention to the report of the Board of Army Engineers.

It is said that there is no available means of securing water from the Sacramento Valley; but the report of the Board of Army Engineers shows the availability of the McCloud River project. Everybody who has traveled on the Southern Pacific Railroad to San Francisco is familiar with that beautiful stream, which the railroad follows for many miles around and through the foothills of Mount Shasta, fed by the glaciers and the eternal snows of Mount Shasta and the surrounding mountains. On page 138 of the Engineers' report the cost of procuring from the McCloud River 400,000,000 gallons of water a day is stated at $64,951,100, while on the same page the cost of procuring the same amount of water from the Hetch Hetchy project, through the bill under consideration, is stated at $77,367,400.

In order to avoid the effect and force of the lower cost of the McCloud River supply as compared with the Hetch Hetchy supply—I do not mean with any improper motive at all, but avoiding its effect—the engineers' report goes on to show that a larger amount of money will be required for immediate expenditure on the McCloud River project than on the Hetch Hetchy project, and that the entire capacity of the McCloud River project will have to be developed at once, requiring larger capitalization. Upon such considerations as that, considering the saving of interest, the engineers' report arrives at the conclusion that the Hetch Hetchy project would be cheaper than the McCloud River project, although the amount of money required for the complete development of the two projects is only $64,000,000 for the McCloud River project in the Sacramento Valley as against $77,000,000 for the Hetch Hetchy project in the San Joaquin Valley.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OWEN in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator whether or not the cost of the McCloud River project includes an electric current supply?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator means the development of power?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; whether the McCloud River project is not one of water supply only.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am so informed; that it is not contemplated as a part of the McCloud River project that hydroelectric power shall be developed.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course the Senator is aware that San Francisco is operating a municipally owned railway system and expects to furnish itself with a supply of current for that purpose, and also for light and power, as well as these other cities, and also the owners of land in the San Joaquin Valley for the purpose of pumping subterranean waters to the surface, which could not be done with the McCloud River system at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The value of the power which can be developed in the Hetch Hetchy project will be just as great if the water from which the power is derived is used for irrigation as if it is used for domestic purposes in the bay cities. In other words, whenever that project is carried out power can be developed when the water is put to its best use, whatever that may be. I think its best use is to supply the urgent needs of those people who have no other recourse rather than to furnish it to the city of San Francisco simply because the city has set its heart on it and has been trying to get it for so long.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true, Mr. President; but it is equally true that these advantages are entirely absent from the McCloud system, if my recollection from reading the report is correct.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have already stated my agreement with the Senator in that regard; but it seems to me the important consideration in this question is to make the best use of these great resources. Everybody who has ever lived in a dry country knows the immense value of water. It is life itself.

Mr. THOMAS. That constitutes the only difference, I think, between the Senator from Washington and myself. His contention is that the right of the irrigator who up to this time has made no location, and who consequently has no legal right, should be the first object of consideration. My contention is that the municipal and domestic needs of the people of the cities around the Golden Gate should be the first object of consideration.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Oregon will allow me just one second, then I will yield to him. I did not intend to go into a debate on this question at this time, because, as the Senator from Colorado has said, I expect later on to go into it at some length.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not intend, of course, to intrude upon the Senator's time or to change the course of his discussion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will say, however, since the Senator from Colorado has stated the proposition from his standpoint, that I do not think he has included in the question all the elements that should go into it. I might agree with the Senator from Colorado that if there were a question, all other things being equal, between giving the water to landowners for irrigation and giving the water to the people of San Francisco for drinking and for all domestic purposes, the city of San Francisco should have the water. But when you put into the equation these conditions, which I believe exist in this case, that the city of San Francisco can get just as good water, as ample a supply, at just as low a cost from some other source, while the landowners can not get it from any other source, it leads to a very different conclusion.

Mr. THOMAS. I quite agree that that would make a difference, but of course I do not concede the assumptions. However, as the Senator has said, that will be a subject of debate when the bill is reached under the order which was made to-day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there are a great many other elements that enter into this case.

Mr. LANE rose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator from Oregon wish to interrupt me?

Mr. LANE. I just wish to ask a question of the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. LANE. The Senator said the development of the Tuolumne or Hetch Hetchy plan would allow the generation of power, and they have granted the right to the people at the head of the San Joaquin Valley to pump the subterranean water to irrigate their lands. I wanted to know if there was any information respecting the amount of subterranean water and its accessibility at hand or whether there is water there under the ground. I presumed that it was a very dry country.

Mr. THOMAS. It has been some time since I have read all these reports, and my memory may not be entirely clear as to the details. My recollection, however, is that there is a supply of water not at a very great distance under the surface which only needs pumping facilities to make it adaptable for irrigation purposes, and that with cheap electric power which can be used for that purpose this subterranean water can be made to furnish an abundant supply for a very large extent of territory.

Mr. LANE. My information in regard to that matter was that the water which is now closely under the surface at the upper end of the San Joaquin Valley is the surface water which goes down through the Tuolumne River, and when they divert it above and develop the power to carry it off in flumes their supply will immediately cease, and there will be no water to pump, and they will be pumping dry bedrock.

Mr. THOMAS. That may or may not be the result, with the introduction of power. The engineers, according to my recollection, do not think so.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. On that point I want to say at the present time there is a certain amount of water being pumped from the valleys for use in San Francisco, and that has reduced the subsurface water level from 15 and 20 feet to about 45 feet. That was taken into consideration.

It has also appeared, and it has been taken into consideration, that if this plan is adopted by the city of San Francisco, a level of about 15 or 20 feet below the surface will be maintained and this level is a feasible pumping proposition.

But, what I rose to say is in regard to the McCloud proposition. On page 49 of the report of the Army board, after some of the tabulations, they reached the following conclusion, stated in this language:

From the above table it is seen that in actual expenditures the cost of the Hetch Hetchy project is about $20,000,000 less than for any of the others proposed except for the McCloud River. If the dates of expenditures are discounted, the Hetch Hetchy project is about $20,000,000 cheaper than the McCloud. Moreover, there can be no power development on the McCloud under the proposed plan. If it be necessary to store water to supplement the low-water flow of the Sacramento, the cost of the McCloud project will be still larger.

I wish to call attention to just one other thing in the report.

On page 20 of the report by the Army officers we find their discussion of the Sacramento project as follows:

(c) Sacramento River: The plan in this case would be to pump water from near Rio Vista, the point nearest to San Francisco at which it is always free from sea water, and filtered before delivery. The cost of delivery would be relatively great on account of the filtering and pumping. The water, though harder than Sierra water, would be good in quality and ample in quantity. As population and irrigation increase in the valley, the quality is liable to deteriorate. This is considered a perfectly practicable source, if no better is available. In cost for 400 M. G. D. and in quality it is inferior to the Tuolumne supply.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to read from the Army engineer's report on the McCloud River, from page 122 of their report. I have already commented, I think, on the phases of the question that the Senator from Nevada has just spoken of, and I think there is no disagreement between us in regard to those matters. The exact figures are given, showing much less initial cost of the full development of the two projects in favor of the McCloud River, but the money having to be expended sooner in the McCloud River, because it must be developed in an entirety and to its full capacity, there will be more interest to pay. That was the only difference that I saw.

Mr. PITTMAN. And the fact that the power would be created incidentally in the Tuolumne and could not be created in the McCloud project.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That does not affect in any way the question of the expenditure of money for the development of the project. If power is developed, that is an asset which results from it; but it does not lessen in any way the amount of money to be expended, and as I have already said the power would be there, whatever purpose the water is used for. Speaking of the McCloud River:

McCloud River: The remarkably even flow of this river, as compared with those of other California streams which have been reported upon, is well shown on the mass diagram (fig. 22). It is this feature that renders the construction of large and expensive storage reservoirs in connection with a municipal water-supply scheme, depending on the McCloud River, unnecessary.

The snow banks and glaciers of Mount Shasta, together with the porous lava formation, through which the water from the melting snow and ice (as well as the precipitation on other parts of the watershed) percolate before they emerge as springs, serve as most effective reservoirs in regulating the flow of the McCloud.

United States Geological Survey records of run-off measurements extend back to 1902 only. No record was kept or measurements taken between June, 1908, and December, 1910.

There has been a United States fish hatchery at Baird, about 2 miles above the mouth of McCloud River, for many years. In a letter replying to a request for information as to a possible record of gauge heights that it was thought might have been kept by the Bureau of Fisheries, Mr. G. H. Lambson, the superintendent, said that in January, 1911, the river was lower than at any other time during the 15 years that he had been there, and that the oldest residents on the river stated that it was lower than ever known before.

The United States Geological Survey gauging records show a flow in the river at Baird of 1,240 second-feet for a period of five days in January, 1911. On January 4, 1912, the same low stage was again reached, but the river raised the following day. On September 28 and 29, 1912, the discharge fell to 1,210 second-feet. Since the latter date it has been greater.

The earlier gaugings (1902-1908) were at a point about 12 or 15 miles above Baird. A minimum discharge of 1,180 second-feet is recorded. The catchment area above Baird is enough larger than that above this station to account for a difference in minimum discharge of 30 second-feet (1,210-1,180).

The Weather Bureau records of precipitation for stations in the vicinity of Mount Shasta do not extend further back than 1889. A study of these records indicates that the only period during which a materially smaller flow in the McCloud than in September, 1912, seems probable is that from 1897 to 1899. At Sisson from 1893 to the winter of 1899, six years, the seasonal precipitation was continuously below the normal, and for the season 1898-99, the last of the series, it was but 40 per cent of normal.

Fillings prior to those of the proponents of this project on water for power development and applications for rights of way over public lands have been made. Conflicting rights are still unadjudicated.

There are extensive lumbering operations on this catchment area. There are also some agricultural and dairy interests.

Analyses of the water at Baird show it to be a very pure soft water, and the Government fish culturists have found it particularly well adapted to their uses.

Contamination by sewage from the sawmill town of McCloud will have to be guarded against, though no evidence of such contamination has been noted.

Delivery of the water for San Francisco directly to the Crystal Springs Reservoir (via Dumbarton Point, as for supplies from sources south of American River) would add unnecessarily to the cost. But the peninsula reservoirs and others in Alameda or Contra Costa County would have to be given the greatest possible capacity, to be filled and held in reserve against the contingency of the McCloud River conduit being closed for repairs.

The plan proposed by the Mount Shasta Aqueduct Corporation for a water supply from the McCloud River provides for the delivery by gravity of 400 M. G. D. at an elevation of 300 feet into twin reservoirs, having an estimated capacity of 30,000 M. G., on Pinole and San Pablo Creeks, in the Contra Costa Hills north of Berkeley. From these reservoirs the conduit would have a capacity of 400 M. G. D. to Oakland, thence across the bay to San Francisco 200 M. G. D. Delivery in San Francisco would be at elevation 200 feet above sea level.

The distance to San Francisco from the San Pablo Reservoir is substantially the same as from Crystal Springs Reservoir. The distance to center of Oakland from San Pablo Reservoir is no greater than from Lake Chabot, to which Oakland water would be delivered from the Hetch Hetchy Aqueduct by a branch conduit about 16 miles long.

The route of the proposed Mount Shasta Aqueduct is such that for most of the distance it can be kept very near the hydraulic grade line, thus permitting the use of cut and cover gravity section and reinforced concrete pressure pipe instead of the heavy steel pipe under a head of from 300 to 600 feet for a distance of 40 miles across the San Joaquin Valley, as is the case with supplies from the Sierras east of San Francisco.

Summary of distant supplies: The following table shows, for each of the sources of supply from which it has been shown that a suitable supply might be made available to San Francisco and the bay cities, the quantity of such supply and the feasible combinations of such supplies to produce a total of 400 M. G. D. or more.

I have read that in order that it may be a portion of the proceedings in this case for the consideration of anyone who is interested in it. It can not be disputed that there is in the McCloud an ample supply of as good water as there is in the world probably, which can be had at much less cost than the Hetch Hetchy for the actual expenditure of money for the complete development of the project.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask it entirely for information, because I am not at present advised with reference to this matter, and I have not at all made up my mind as to whether I shall support it or not.

As I understand the position of the Senator, it is that San Francisco ought to take the McCloud proposition rather than the Hetch Hetchy proposition, because in taking the McCloud it will not interfere with the use of water for irrigation, whereas if they take the Hetch Hetchy they will deprive the farmers in the San Joaquin Valley of the opportunity of using that water. I wanted to ask the Senator in that connection whether or not the waters of the Hetch Hetchy Valley in their natural flow are tributary to the San Joaquin Valley.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They are.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And have they been appropriated for use in the valley?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They have.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The entire natural flow of the stream of the Hetch Hetchy Valley?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think the entire natural flow has been appropriated, but a large quantity of water. San Francisco also has claims to water in the Tuolumne. I will read into the RECORD in a moment the exact amount that has been appropriated, but it is stated, and I do not think it can be successfully denied, that the entire flow is needed for the irrigation of the lands that are susceptible of irrigation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have no doubt there is a very large area of land in that valley that is capable of successful cultivation if it had water.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In that connection I will read to the Senator now, so that he may have in mind in his consideration of the question, a statement which was filed with me by Mr. W. C. Le Hane, referred to in the telegram introduced by the Senator from Nevada. Mr. Le Hane's authority to represent the landowners in this valley is shown by telegrams, copies of which are attached to the statement which I will read into the RECORD later. On the question which the Senator from Utah asks, Mr. Le Hane says:

Let me quote from a letter written May 27, 1913, to Dr. Thomas F. Hunt, dean and director, Berkeley, Cal., by Frank Adams, irrigation manager of the irrigation investigations conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture office at Berkeley, Cal., the seat of the State University—

Quoting:

As I have heretofore stated to you in our conversations about the use of Hetch Hetchy by San Francisco, it is my notion that the important consideration is not how much water Modesto and Turlock irrigation districts need, but how much San Joaquin Valley needs. Our studies show a total irrigable area in San Joaquin Valley of about 7,576,000 acres, including plains but exclusive of foothills. Of this, 1,728,975 acres were figured as being irrigated in 1913, with 3,850,000 acres estimated as the probable future maximum irrigated area. The total mean annual flow of all streams entering the valley is about 12,000,000 acre-feet. Our studies show a total irrigable area of valley and plains most naturally tributary to Tuolumne River of about 450,000 acres, of which approximately 240,000 acres are within Modesto and Turlock districts. Further, there are additional areas of irrigable land both north and south of the Modesto-Turlock on which Tuolumne River water could be advantageously used if that river furnished a supply in excess of the needs of the 450,000 acres of plains and valleys most naturally tributary to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is one other question I wanted to ask the Senator. I understand from the report that by an expenditure of something like $77,000,000 there can be developed approximately 400,000,000 gallons of water daily. Am I correct about that?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator has overstated the cost. Do you refer to the McCloud River project?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; I am referring to the Hetch Hetchy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. About $77,000,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. $77,367,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Can the Senator tell me approximately how many acres that quantity of water would irrigate?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can not answer that question at this moment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Perhaps the Senator can tell me whether there would be a sufficient area of land capable of irrigation with that quantity of water to justify the expenditure of that sum of money?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not prepared to answer that question, but I will say in regard to that that $77,000,000 would not have to be expended if the water is used for the purpose of irrigation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It would not need to be expended?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would not need to be expended. By far the greater part of the $77,000,000 would be for conduits and for appurtenances of the water-supply system of San Francisco, such as conveying it under the bay, which is a very expensive process.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is included?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is included. It will not be needed in irrigation at all. Approximately $3,000,000 will cover the cost of impounding the water for irrigation. The canals are already constructed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What would be needed in the Hetch Hetchy Valley would be simply to build a large impounding dam leading to the land.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is contended that a greater part of this water could be impounded by dams lower down in the stream than the Hetch Hetchy, for irrigation, but that would not develop the hydroelectric power.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What information has the Senator which indicates that if they were permitted to do it the land-owners of the San Joaquin Valley would take hold of a project of this kind?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have information from representatives here of those people that they are in a position to take hold of it, and if the Senator will pardon me a moment, I will read a statement which they make on that subject.

I read from the statement filed by W. C. Le Hane, chairman of the committee of water users. He says:

In the debate on the Baker bill last Saturday, Senator NEWLANDS said, in effect, that in a struggle for water the "thirst of the people" must prevail over the "thirst of the land," even though 200,000 acres of land must remain forever without water.

In California, with its long seasons and high-priced products, the yearly crop on 200,000 acres of land is worth from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000. This is too valuable to be lost forever.

The only reason San Francisco is going to the Tuolumne instead of the McCloud River or other sources is because of cheapness. She does not need to take a drop of water out of the dry San Joaquin Valley in order to have an ample supply of mountain water.

Levi Winklebleck, acting chairman of this committee of water users' association, sends this telegram to the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. A part of the telegram sent to the Senator from Montana has a direct bearing upon the question of the Senator from Utah.

We, the undersigned committee, representing the water users of the Modesto irrigation district, 475 of whom have signed a petition to the effect that the lands tributary to the Tuolumne River are able and willing to store the Hetch Hetchy waters, are asking and urging that the Senate postpone action on the Baker bill and appoint a commission to investigate and report on our claims. Said petition was signed by 99 per cent of the water users to whom it was presented. W. C. Le Hane, of this committee, will represent us in person before your committee.

With the climate of the San Joaquin Valley and the immense fertility of the land, I should think there would be no question about the practicability of developing and paying for practically any project which would put water on it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If it will irrigate 200,000 acres of land, of course it would be well worth while to expend that amount of money.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That statement is made by a resident and one who is directly interested in it, and I think it is reliable.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator from Nebraska will pardon me just one final question, the Senator has undertaken to show that it would really be more economical for the city of San Francisco to take hold of the McCloud proposition rather than the Hetch Hetchy proposition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will pardon me, I did not undertake to show that it would be more economical if the city borrows the money and pays interest on it, which it would have to do. What I did say was that it would cost a less amount of money by some $14,000,000 to develop the McCloud River project with 400,000,000 gallons daily supply than it would to develop the Hetch Hetchy project to that full capacity.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The question which occurred to me was, why is it that San Francisco prefers the Hetch Hetchy proposition if the other is less expensive?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that is due to a number of causes, Mr. President. Of course I will not underestimate the fact I have already stated in every statement I have made upon the proposition, that the McCloud River project, as I understand it, will have to be developed to its full capacity at one time while the Hetch Hetchy project can be developed by degrees; in other words, that the full amount of its cost will not have to be expended now, but that it can wait until some future time, thereby saving the investment during that time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is, the Hetch Hetchy can be gradually developed?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; while the McCloud River project must be developed as a whole. Furthermore, in addition to that I will say in answer to the Senator—

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERN in the chair). Will the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will in just one moment. San Francisco apparently, by degrees has committed itself to the Hetch Hetchy project.

First, it owned this land and then conveyed it to the Government—or at least the State owned it and conveyed it to the Government—and in one way or another they became interested in the proposed supply and put it forward as a San Francisco project. They have acquired more or less property. They have invested some money. I think there is less than $200,000 of actual investment in the property, but there has been a very large amount of money expended in the employment of engineers in making minute plans for the complete development in detail of the project. It has been put forward in San Francisco as the great alternative relief of the city of San Francisco from the oppression of the Spring Valley Water Co.

So, as I suggested the other day, I am inclined to think that they have got in a state of mind there where they are not in a position—and I think that is frankly admitted by the Senator from Nevada—to consider with an open-minded attitude other propositions. They have gradually become committed to this one.

I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. I want to say that the advantage of the Tuolumne River project or of the Hetch Hetchy Valley project is that it is capable of supplying 400,000,000 gallons daily, and at the same time it is capable of being constructed at a smaller capacity at the present time, and it can be increased as needed. In other words, the report shows that $37,500,000 will at the present time construct all that is necessary, still leaving the opportunity to increase as there is use for it.

Another reason for it is this: We must eliminate the Sacramento River, because it is a filtration proposition. The McCloud River project requires to be constructed all at once and possesses no power features. In addition to that, the grantees in this bill can build the Hetch Hetchy plant or proposition for $20,000,000 cheaper than any other, according to the report of the Army board. Of course, interest on the money constitutes part of the cost, as the Senator from Washington says; but no matter how you figure, the cost will be $20,000,000 greater.

That is what the Army board figures it will eventually be. While Hetch Hetchy costs them less by $20,000,000 it really saves the grantees much more than that because it not only furnishes them their water at reduced rates by reason of the municipal ownership of it, but it equally furnishes them their light and power at municipal rates. That is another reason why it is more desirable. The other reason, why it is more desirable—

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will ask the Senator from Nevada, if he will allow me to ask him right in that connection, if San Francisco gets this water from the McCloud River, and the Government allows the landowners to take the Hetch Hetchy for irrigation, developing by that irrigation project this same power which the Senator is now talking about, is it not still within the power of the Government to give favorable conditions by which its use can be had for the public on every principle of generosity that would be involved in the pending bill?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will answer that by saying that, if the Government should expend $88,000,000 on the McCloud project, and not develop any power, and then the irrigators should attempt to build power plants as an individual enterprise on the Hetch Hetchy, the combined enterprises would be then nearly twice as great as the joint enterprise would be on the Hetch Hetchy; and the use of the Hetch Hetchy would reach the same people, whether built by the joint enterprise or by the single enterprise, because the bill itself provides that this power shall be sold to these same irrigators at cost; but if they build it themselves as an individual enterprise, they could not build it any cheaper. That is the reason of that.

Another reason is that they can not build that project, except they build it under one of two ways: Either to syndicate it and give control to a water concern for advancing the money, which would place them in the grasp of a monopoly, or to bond their lands to raise money.

The lands that are inhabited to-day are in the Modesto-Turlock irrigation district. These lands are already mortgaged and bonded, and those people realize that they can not mortgage and bond the land for enough more money with which to build this project. They have therefore gladly accepted the proposition of San Francisco to build that project and convey to them the water to which they are legally entitled, the water that has been granted to them, and at the same time to sell to them at cost the electric power that is created. Everyone who resides in those districts is satisfied with that proposition. The telegram that I have just read comes from one of those districts. The only people who are dissatisfied with it are people who wish to utilize it for speculative purposes, to put under irrigation land that is not now under irrigation, land that is not now occupied by anybody whatsoever; in other words, as Mr. Le Hane testified before the Public Lands Committee of the Senate, he admitted that we could not by this bill either grant to anyone any additional water or deprive anyone of any water rights. He admitted that every water right that was prior to the water right of San Francisco was taken care of in the bill; that any persons who were protesting against the bill at this time, if they had any rights to water at all, were subject and inferior to the filings and rights of San Francisco. Then it comes down to the plain, simple proposition, Do you want to destroy San Francisco's water rights by prohibiting them from using it, by prohibiting them from building the necessary structures to use it, so that the water may go to irrigate 200,000 acres of land that to-day are not occupied and have no rights whatever to water? That is the simple question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada can not in this day, after the proof which we have had of the bountiful returns from irrigation, cry down a proposition to irrigate 200,000 acres of land, even though it is not now irrigated.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not think it compares with furnishing wholesome water in sufficient quantities to nearly a million people.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would agree with the Senator upon that if that were the question; but that is not the question at all. Nobody is proposing to deprive the city of San Francisco of wholesome water; but what we are asking is that attention be given to the fact that there is not only one source but that there are several other sources from which the city of San Francisco can supply all of its wants.

Mr. PITTMAN. May I—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment. As to the question of water rights, of which the Senator speaks, stating that all of them are cared for in the bill, if that were determinative of the question, there would be no occasion to have a bill. If all the essentials in this proposition, if these water rights, as the Senator says, can not be effected by the bill, then we are talking about something that is of no consequence, and we are uselessly taking up the time of the Senate in discussing the bill. Those water rights can not be used without certain appurtenant land rights; certain other property rights which are necessary to be used in connection with the water rights for the development of the whole into a useful and paying proposition. If San Francisco has water rights, then those rights are protected. If she gets her water supply from some other source and wants to sell the water rights, if she has water rights which are worth money, she can sell them. The proposition is made to pay San Francisco for any water rights which she may have in the Hetch Hetchy Valley, which she would surrender by going elsewhere for her city water.

Mr. PITTMAN. And who will pay San Francisco for those rights?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have a statement of that kind in letters which I have received.

Mr. PITTMAN. The only land that is settled is in the Modesto and Turlock irrigation district. The only land that has any value at present is in that district, and those people do not offer to pay San Francisco for her water rights. On the contrary, they request in this bill that San Francisco be allowed to utilize those water rights.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems to me that those questions are perfectly obvious, as I say. I have statements in letters that San Francisco can dispose of her rights, and it is obvious she can dispose of them if she has rights, and water which is needed for the irrigation of valuable land, of course, she can dispose of.

I want to pass on and only say one word about the Eel River source of supply. The Army Engineers did not include the Eel River source of supply in their estimate of cost or in the conclusion which they reached that the Hetch Hetchy was the cheapest. On page 83 of the Army Engineers' report is a description of the Eel River source of supply. In order that it may be in the Record, as it is only very brief, I will read it:

2. Eel River: Eel River is a Coast Range stream rising in the northerly part of Lake County, flowing generally north and emptying into the Pacific Ocean about 15 miles south of Humboldt Bay. It is in a region of high precipitation. At a point near Potter Valley the South Fork of Eel River is separated from the South Fork of Russian River by a narrow ridge through which a tunnel has been bored. Below this the Snow Mountain Water & Power Co. has a power plant, under a head of 450 feet, with a capacity of 350 cubic feet per second. The Russian River, into which this water is discharged, flows to the south, toward San Francisco, a distance of over 60 miles.

Above the Snow Mountain Water & Power Co.'s point of diversion on South Fork of Eel River there is a drainage area of 326.5 square miles. Of this, 268 square miles are tributary to an excellent reservoir site at Gravelly Valley, which, with a dam 140 feet high, will store 180,000 acre-feet. A detailed report on the available water supply of the Snow Mountain Water & Power Co. by Messrs. W. R. and N. A. Eckart, consulting and resident engineer, respectively, has been presented to your board.

A mass diagram showing run-off from watershed above the company's power plant accompanied my preliminary report of April 8, 1911. Actual measurements of discharge cover a period of 5 years. In deducing the run-off from precipitation records for 33 of the 38 years covered by the diagram, Mr. N. A. Eckart used what he calls a "minimum curve," which not only gives results more conservative than the usual "mean curve," but gives a value for the run-off month by month instead of annual totals only. The diagram shows that, with the storage capacity given above, this watershed would have yielded a supply of 180 M. G. D. through the most critical seasons occurring within the period of observations, viz, 1877 to date. Mr. Eckart estimates that by taking advantage of large storage capacity at the San Francisco end of the conduit, or on the peninsula, and by giving the conduit a capacity a little in excess of 200 M. G. D., the mean supply may be increased to that figure through the most critical periods.

A conduit to carry this water from Potter Valley to San Francisco across the Golden Gate would be about 125 miles long. If instead of crossing the Golden Gate its route were via San Pablo Bay and Oakland and thence across San Francisco Bay, it would be 10 miles longer.

Even this greater length of conduit is less than that for any of the Sierra sources. This scheme has also the advantage that the pipe line could be laid much nearer the hydraulic grade line, and thus the weight of steel pipe would be less than for the Sierra schemes, or reinforced-concrete pipe could be used over portions of the distance.

The tailrace of the Potter Valley power plant is at about elevation 1,000 feet, giving sufficient head for delivery of water to Crystal Springs Reservoir by gravity.

The crossing of the Golden Gate, where the water is 360 feet deep for the shorter line, or the double crossing of the bay, for the line via Oakland introduces features which, in point of great depth, would be somewhat similar to the tunnel crossing of Hudson River at Storm King by the Catskill Aqueduct. The elements of cost are not comparable with those of the other schemes.

To use the Russian River itself as a conduit and thus save 60 miles of pipe line, as has been suggested, would require a large increase in power over that which could be developed from the water supply itself to deliver the water and would make thorough filtration necessary, so that the scheme would not have advantage over one for using Sacramento or San Joaquin water—

That is, supposing they use the Russian River itself as a conduit—

The president of the Snow Mountain Water & Power Co. states that he has plans for the utilization of this supply in the Russian River Valley, and has made no proposition to the city of San Francisco regarding its acquirement by the city.

A supply from Eel River could not be advantageously combined with one from other sources. The investigation of this project has not been carried further.

Mr. PITTMAN. Right in that connection, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. That was taken from the report to the board by Mr. Wadsworth, who was one of the assistant investigators on behalf of the board. The board itself, however, on page 19, has this to say about the Eel River—and remember that their report was made up from the consideration of more matters than the report of one deputy—

(a) Eel River rises in Mendocino County and flows northwest to the Pacific. Investigations show it could be developed to supply from 170 to 200 M. G. D. of suitable water. As this amount is not sufficient and as it would be unduly costly to develop this in connection with other supplies, it is not considered available and no estimate of cost has been made.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, one purpose I had in reading the matter I have read was to supplement it by a statement which I have in my hand, showing in detail that the Eel River source of supply can be combined with other sources of supply, and that the entire combined supply will be much cheaper than the Hetch Hetchy supply. A letter from Mr. Henry M. McDonald, of Stockton, Cal., who refers to a number of Senators as being willing to vouch for his standing in the community, states with reference to this Eel River source of supply as follows:

I inclose you sketch map. I have indicated on the map by green ink the sources of the supply, line of aqueduct, and location of impounding reservoirs connected with the proposed system to which I refer at the beginning of this letter.

(1) The proposition contemplates securing 200 M. G. D. from the southerly Eel River watershed. This source of supply is considered by H. H. Wadsworth, assistant engineer (pp. 83 and 84 of the advisory board's report). This source of supply, although favorably spoken of by Mr. Wadsworth, was not given full consideration by the Army board of engineers, for the reason, as stated by Mr. Wadsworth, that "a supply from Eel River could not be advantageously combined with other sources."

(2) The Eel River supply is to be carried by a gravity conduit along the westerly slope of a spur of the Coast Range Mountains to a point 5 miles north of Calistoga, Cal.; thence by a short tunnel into the Putah Creek watershed basin. This procedure is entirely feasible, since the elevation of the intake at the point where the Eel River supply would enter the conduit is 980 feet above sea level; the elevation of the point north of Calistoga at the westerly entrance of the tunnel mentioned is 720 feet; the elevation of the point at which the Eel River water is to be discharged from the easterly end of the tunnel into Pope Creek, a tributary of Putah Creek, is 640 feet, while the elevation of the northerly end of the impounding reservoir described in the following paragraph is 325 feet.

(3) The Eel River supply will then discharge itself into the northerly end of an impounding reservoir having a storage capacity of 727,700 M. G. This storage is to be secured by the construction of a dam 300 feet in height at Devils Gate, a narrow defile in the Putah Creek Canyon, located 10 miles west of Winters, Cal. This dam will flood a natural reservoir embracing 15,000 acres to an average depth of 145 feet.

(4) The reservoir just mentioned will also impound the run-off of that section of the Putah Creek watershed located above the Devils Gate Dam. The entire watershed contains, according to a report of the United States Geological Survey, 810 square miles, of which area 605 square miles is located above Devils Gate. The average yearly run-off of the Putah Creek watershed, as shown by the United States Government reports, was, for a six-year period extending from 1906 to 1911, 510,000 acre-feet. As the section of the watershed above Devils Gate is approximately 75 per cent of the entire watershed, the run-off which would be impounded in the Putah Creek Reservoir would average, per year, 382,500 acre-feet, which is equivalent to 124,695 M. G., or a daily supply of 341 M. G.

(5) From Devils Gate Dam the water would be conducted through an aqueduct to Carquinez Strait at a point near Benicia, Cal.; under the strait by a tunnel; thence by tunnel and conduit to a point on the Oakland water front, from which place submerged iron pipes would carry the water across the San Francisco Bay into the city of San Francisco.

Length of Eel River-Putah Creek supply system.

	Miles.
From Gravelly Valley reservoir to Eel River supply intake.....	15
From Eel River supply intake to the point of discharge into Pope Creek, a tributary of Putah Creek.....	85
From point of discharge into Pope Creek to Devils Gate Dam.....	30
From Devils Gate Dam to San Francisco.....	65
Total.....	195

As the 30 miles included between the point where the Eel River supply is discharged into Pope Creek and Devils Gate Dam is open waterway, the distance covered by construction work is 165 miles.

It is, however, to be borne in mind that the 100 miles construction carrying the Eel River supply conveys less than two-fifths of the aggregate supply, while the construction carrying the entire supply does not exceed 65 miles; consequently, if the 100 miles construction were considered on the basis of the capacity of the 65 miles construction, the full capacity mileage would not exceed 115 miles, as against the 180 miles involved in the Hetch Hetchy project.

Amount of water supply.	Gallons daily.
As stated, the Eel River watershed will supply.....	200,000,000
The Putah Creek watershed will supply.....	341,000,000
Total.....	541,000,000

Deducting 20 per cent to cover evaporation, the net daily supply is 446 M. G., or 46 M. G. D. in excess of the highest estimate of the daily supply procurable from the Hetch Hetchy.

In addition, the Putah Creek Reservoir would impound 595,276 M. G., which, upon the basis of supplying San Francisco and the bay cities with 400 M. G. per day, represents a full four-year supply for the cities mentioned. Under these conditions it is utterly impossible that the supply would run short at a "critical" period.

On the other hand, the utmost total Hetch Hetchy Reservoir storage (Army Advisory Board Report, p. 36) which can be made utilizable will not in "critical" years furnish sufficient water to meet the demands of San Francisco and the bay cities, and also the requirements of the Turlock and Modesto Irrigation Districts for even one year.

Cost of construction.

Taking as a basis of estimate the units of cost adopted by the advisory board, the cost of the Eel River-Putah Creek system would be.....	$53,874,000
The estimated cost of the Hetch Hetchy project is (Army Advisory Board Report, p. 30).....	77,367,000

This estimate includes only the construction of the Hetch Hetchy, the Lake Eleanor, Cherry Valley, and Poopenaut Reservoirs. The tabulation (Army Advisory Board Report, p. 36) includes 20 additional reservoirs which the board finds necessary to supply the required storage. The construction of these additional reservoirs would add several million dollars to the cost of the Hetch Hetchy system.

The entire Eel River-Putah Creek supply system could be fully completed within three years from the date of commencement of the work. In this connection it may be stated that the construction of the Hetch Hetchy system will unquestionably require from 8 to 10 years.

The Eel River water supply can develop 15,000 horsepower just above the intake of the conduit. The Army board values the Hetch Hetchy power at $20 per horsepower. On this basis the Eel River power has a value of $3,000,000.

Very truly, yours,

H. M. McDONALD.

Mr. President, that is all that I desire to present at this time, and I present that as showing, though not as a complete showing in any way, at least two alternative sources of supply for the water needs of San Francisco, which will leave the water of the Hetch Hetchy and the San Joaquin for the irrigation of lands in the valley, which can not otherwise be irrigated.

My attention has been called to the statement of the Senator from Nevada that these lands are already bonded to their full value, or something to that effect. I have some figures in regard to that. The Turlock district is bonded for $15 an acre; the Modesto district is bonded for $20 an acre; and the San Joaquin adjoining lands are bonded for $56 an acre.

A statement is made by representatives of the Turlock and Modesto districts that they can bond their land, which is now bonded at fifteen and twenty dollars an acre, respectively, to the amount of $50 an acre, leaving a very considerable margin of resources for the development of irrigation, if the matter is left so that they can have the water.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I did not state that the lands referred to were bonded at their full value, but I stated that they were already heavily bonded, and that I did not believe the owners could raise sufficient upon that land to carry out this project, and I do not think so now; in fact, I think that they have made several efforts to do so during the last few years which have utterly failed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The statement which I have just made, Mr. President, is direct from the representatives of the district, and I assume that they are equally as well informed about the matter as is the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I wish to state that the official representatives of both of those districts have petitioned for the passage of this bill, and therefore they can certainly have no desire to attempt to build this project at their own expense.

In this connection I desire to state that there are a great many people who are claiming to represent these districts. Telegrams and letters have been sent to Senators purporting to come from representatives of these districts. As a matter of fact, these are irrigation districts legally organized under the laws of the State of California and in accordance with the land laws of this country. They have officers just the same as a corporation has officers; they have their meetings for the purpose of determining the policy of such irrigation districts in the same manner as the stockholders of a corporation have meetings to determine questions. The people of those districts have met; they have determined upon a policy; they have determined as to what is to the best interest of those districts, and they have expressed that determination through their duly elected and qualified agents whom they sent to the city of Washington and who were present during all the time this bill was being prepared in the House of Representatives. They sent here five men whom they elected, and those five men testified before the Public Lands Committee of the House; they assisted in framing this bill, and they stayed here until this bill passed the House of Representatives in the form in which their people wanted it.

We are constantly having a telegram or a letter read here purporting to be from the representative of some district. The official representatives of those districts are known. Representative CHURCH, from that very district, knew them, and he was on the Public Lands Committee of the House; ex-Representative Needham, of that very district, knew them, and he was one of the representatives before the committee of the House; Representative RAKER knew them, because he was from the congressional district where the Hetch Hetchy Valley is located, and he was a member of the Public Lands Committee of the House; Representative KENT, of California, knew them, and he is known to be one of the greatest conservationists in California, and he was a member of the Public Lands Committee of the House.

I am simply calling attention to this for the purpose of warning Senators against being influenced by telegrams and letters which are coming from unauthorized sources. The idea of a deliberative body of this kind being influenced by a telegram which is signed by some one saying he represents the water users of a certain district or represents 5,000 women in the State of Washington or the State of Kansas! Has there been a meeting of 5,000 women in any of those States? Has there been any public assemblage whatever for the purpose of taking action on the subject of this bill? Do you not know that if there had been an assemblage in any State in this country for the purpose of taking united action with regard to this bill the press would have been full of it? Yet we are flooded with telegrams signed by some individual, which say "representing 5,000 women in this State" or "representing 5,000 women in that State."

I tell you that the thousands of women of the various States, whom these people have assumed to represent and whom they are in fact misrepresenting, will be sending individual telegrams to the Senator from Washington and to other Senators in this body repudiating such representation before the discussion of this question is finished.

I do not understand how a Senator who is sent here to determine questions in a deliberative body can be influenced by telegrams sent by individuals throughout the country, except to the extent of giving the question consideration.

As I stated before, this question has been discussed for 12 years. Four years ago it was taken up in the House of Representatives and had a thorough, full hearing and discussion. Again, at this Congress, it has had a long, full hearing and discussion in the House of Representatives. I do not believe there are Senators in this body who are going to be influenced in their determination by these unauthorized telegrams and letters when there are now lying upon their desks, or in the public document room, subject to their inspection, copies of a long, exhaustive report by a disinterested, impartial, capable board, composed of Army engineers, and two volumes of public hearings before the Public Lands Committee.

I wish to say, on behalf of the proponents of this bill, that we have to-day gladly postponed voting on this matter until December 6, in the hope that some of the Senators who are relying on these unauthorized letters and telegrams will do their constituency and the country the honor to investigate this matter as United States Senators should investigate it.

I trust that when the matter comes up for discussion again, instead of a United States Senator saying that he has formed his opinion from what some landscape artist has written him, or from what some dear friend has told him is his opinion of the Hetch Hetchy matter, he will be able to place it upon sounder and better reasoning, and that he will at least be able to say that he has performed his duty by reading the hearings and the reports upon the subject.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I shall not assume that the lecture which the Senator has just delivered as to the duty of Senators is directed at me. I suppose he is referring to some other Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. I most certainly am.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I say that because I have read the report, and I have not formed my conclusion, and furthermore I have not said that I have formed my conclusion upon unauthorized telegrams or upon authorized telegrams. I have formed my conclusion very largely upon the admissions of the Senator from Nevada as to certain great, essential facts in this matter. I shall be a little more generous than the Senator from Nevada, and readily concede that men may honestly draw differing opinions from the same facts. I do not think any Senators have been misled in regard to any material facts in the case.

The representative of the landowners to whom I referred a moment ago is here present. He comes directly from meetings of the landowners of these districts. Out of 481 landowners, 475 unanimously concurred in appointing Mr. Le Hane as one of a committee of three to represent them in this matter. I assume that the absent Senator from California, who sent the telegram here the other day stating that 99 per cent of these landowners were opposed to the consideration of this measure at this time, and wanted further hearing in regard to it, knew his ground before sending such a telegram, and was assured that it was correct.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington whether the 481 people represented by Mr. Le Hane constitute all of the landowners in the valley?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They do not.

Mr. THOMAS. Are they not a very small proportion of the total?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think they are a very large proportion of those whose interests are affected by this measure.

Mr. THOMAS. The statement of Mr. Le Hane before the committee was not reported; but it was a very interesting one, a very intelligent and a very earnest one. In response to my question as to whether any legal right existed, by way of location or attempted diversion of any of these waters for irrigation purposes that had not been fully provided for by the terms of the bill, he said no, but that he thought the people of that watershed had a moral right to the water for the lands that were not covered by irrigation, in consequence of which he protested against the diversion of the water to another watershed.

I say very freely that if he had mentioned any legal rights to any of that water—and by "legal rights" of course I mean rights which are acquired by compliance with the requirements of the statutes of the State upon the subject, and the State statutes in the arid regions are practically all the same—I should have insisted upon some recognition of those rights in this bill. But certainly we can not consider what is called a moral right when that so-called moral right conflicts directly with the legal locator's rights of the city of San Francisco. While I do not doubt that these gentlemen are perfectly earnest and sincere in their claims, it certainly seems to me that after these investigations and hearings these gentlemen should come here with something more than a general, undefined, so-called moral right to something which legally belongs to somebody else.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I will assume that this committee, which was appointed at a public meeting of these landowners, was authorized to represent them in that respect. However, if other Senators differ, that is a matter which can be easily ascertained and determined. I will pass it over for the present, and comment upon the objection to Mr. Le Hane's position as stated by the Senator from Colorado.

I would not use the language that Mr. Le Hane used in calling it a moral right. I would prefer to call it a great public policy. I do not think this matter ought to be determined upon investigation as to what legal rights to a certain number of inches of this water have been heretofore acquired by somebody. It is now within the power of Congress to influence the future disposition of this water, and it is a question of public policy for a great portion of the State of California as to whether it shall have water available to which, if the people who now live there have not a legal right, they will have an opportunity to acquire a legal right.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, of course public policy is an element that enters into every discussion of this sort. It is a general and somewhat indefinable term. Like charity, it sometimes covers a multitude of sins as well as a multitude of very desirable elements.

From my standpoint, my consideration of public policy, I can not conceive how that subject can be involved in a proposition represented on one side by legal vested rights and on the other by what is called a moral claim. Certainly public policy is entirely inconsistent with the proposition that you must take away from a man what he has simply because somebody else wants it. That is true whether the contest be between individuals or between communities. I say again that if these gentlemen had any right, public or otherwise, of a legal character which had not been guarded against, I should feel very much disposed to insist upon inserting in this bill some provision a little broader than the one already made, which gives to the holders of legal rights to the water of this great river 2,350 second-feet, and at certain times of the year 4,000 feet or more. Certainly public policy can not be stretched so far as to deprive a great city of its right to use this water when that right, among other things, is vested upon prior acquired appropriations in compliance with law, and when it is also united with a fundamental proposition of law and of morals and of necessity that domestic use is superior to agricultural or any other use of the water of the country.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, when a corporation or individual applies to the Congress of the United States for the grant of certain property rights, as is proposed in this bill, and it appears to Congress that by granting those rights by the passage of the bill a great section of a State will be deprived of the water needed for irrigation, then the question of whether or not the bill should pass becomes a question of public policy.

There are no vested rights in the rights which are proposed to be granted by this bill. If the bill passes, they will be vested rights; but they are not vested now. The question is whether or not they shall be vested.

We will suppose, for the sake of argument, that the city of San Francisco has filed upon the flow of the water to a certain extent and has what is called a water right. She proposes to use that water for domestic purposes in the city of San Francisco. Our contention is that she can get an ample supply at less cost in other places. Suppose our contention should prevail and this bill should not pass. San Francisco then would not have the privileges granted by this bill, which are necessary to enable her to use whatever water right she may have for the domestic supply of the city of San Francisco. Consequently she would have to do something else with her water right.

What would she do with it? She would do something. She could do anything she chose to do that was possible without the privileges granted by this bill. One of those things is the irrigation of the San Joaquin Valley. She could use the waters for that purpose; and if, by virtue of her constitution and nature as a municipal community, she could not go into that enterprise, the natural thing for her to do would be to dispose of whatever water right she may have to other people, who would use it for the irrigation of the San Joaquin Valley.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator has now made the issue very clear, admitting that San Francisco has a right to the water, except—

Mr. POINDEXTER. No, no, Mr. President.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let me state the question, then. I will state this without saying that the Senator said it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not admit that, but I said "suppose she did have." I do not know.

Mr. PITTMAN. Suppose, then, that San Francisco had a right to all of that water with the exception of the 2,350 second-feet owned by the Modesto and Turlock irrigation districts. The Senator's proposition is that it is for us to determine whether it is the best policy for this country to utilize all of the water of that river for the irrigation of more arid lands or whether we shall take that water to the seven hundred and odd thousand people around San Francisco Bay and furnish it to them for domestic purposes.

The Senator says his policy is that it should go for the irrigation of land, providing San Francisco can get water anywhere else for domestic use, no matter if it does cost San Francisco more; and he goes to the extent of saying that he will take away by an act of Congress a right that has been granted by the act of a State; that by an act of Congress he will commit the crime—because it is illegal—of divesting some one of a vested right so that that right may be subsequently acquired by some one else for another purpose. If that be the case, then this Government is in a position constantly where it can obstruct the vested rights of States, and thereby nullify the law of those States.

As a matter of fact, this bill does not grant any water rights to anyone; it does not take away any water rights from anyone; because, no matter what the bill may say, the jurisdiction is in the State to adjudicate who is entitled to the flow of this water. All the bill says is simply this: We are not going to obstruct a great use of this water. You ask us to allow you to place a dam away up in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, across the mouth of a little gulch, and flood 1,320 acres of land, two-thirds of which you yourself own to-day. That is all you ask of us. You ask us not to interfere with you in the use of something that is already yours. You ask us not to interfere with your furnishing 750,000 people with the water that they have bought, with the water for which they have fought for 12 long years, and we will not interfere.

That is all they ask of us. That is all this bill grants. That is all it means.

In opposition to that, we find men coming here holding the same policy as the Senator from the State of Washington, who say they believe it should be the policy of this Government to destroy a vested right if, in its judgment, the vested right can be used by some one else for a more convenient purpose.

Take the question of water power as raised by the Senator from North Dakota. The value of that water power is estimated to be $45,000,000. When? After the city of San Francisco has expended $77,000,000 in making it worth $45,000,000.

What is it worth to-day as the flood waters run down that canyon and run out to sea without irrigating the land? Nothing. What would it be worth without the expenditure of the $77,000,000? Nothing. Who is to spend that $77,000,000? The only people who have been able to show their capability of doing it within the last 12 years are the people of the city of San Francisco. The real members of the Turlock irrigation district and the Modesto irrigation district believe it is a godsend to them. They want it. They believe this power will furnish them the means to pump up the subsurface water to irrigate that whole country.

The subsurface water is just as good for the irrigationist as any other water; but the subsurface water is not just as good for domestic purposes as the mountain water. When you are weighing two conveniences ought you not to be just and fair in the matter? The irrigationist can get all the subsurface water he wants when he is furnished power at cost, and the people around that bay will get pure water, and get relief from monopoly.

I heard some one say: "Are you going to give away $45,000,000 worth of power?" That power is created by water. That water is owned by the city of San Francisco, and the Government has nothing to do with it. All on earth the Government could do would be to follow the policy of the Senator from the State of Washington and act as an obstructionist to the development of the natural resources of the country. The power of the Government is not sufficient to grant water rights. The power is in the Government, if it wants to do so, to obstruct the development of nearly everything. That is the policy that the Senator from Washington seems to advocate.

If the power is created by water, and the water is owned by the city of San Francisco, and the money is put up by the city of San Francisco to turn that water into power, how much should the National Government require? The National Government does nothing except to say that a part of the public domain, about a mile square, shall be utilized for the building of a dam and a reservoir to turn that water into power.

To what better use could the Government put that power than that to which it is to be put by the city of San Francisco? The power could not be carried to the city of Washington. It could not be carried anywhere else except within the range of the power. The bill provides that within the range of the power—that is, down in those irrigation districts and along the bay cities—it shall be furnished at cost to the people who need it, and it could not be furnished any cheaper by anyone else on earth.

I want to know if there is any higher use on earth to which that water power could be put than to furnish it to the people in the vicinity at cost? I want to know if there is any higher use to which that water could be put than to furnish 700,000 people with pure, healthful, invigorating drinking water? I want to know if the irrigation district is not being protected to-day in this bill as far as it can be protected, and if the outside land will not be put in a position where it will be irrigated by subsurface water?

Those are the conditions. To those who say, "Do not give away this power for nothing; do not give away the power of the Government for nothing," I want to say this: While the Government is not entitled to collect 1 cent for power that does not belong to it, as far as concerns the right of way for placing this dam the Government of the United States is to receive from the city of San Francisco $15,000 a year for the five years immediately following the first five years, and $20,000 a year for the next five years, and $30,000 a year for every year after that; and I want to say to the Senator from Washington that the Government experts have testified that that payment is a better consideration to the Federal Government than is being received from any of its other leased powers.

That is the situation as it appears to those who favor the bill to-day.

In closing, I simply want to say that in what I said awhile ago I was not referring to the Senator from Washington, nor to the other able Senators on the other side who have so far participated in this debate, because the words they have used in the debate and the study they have shown would negative any such idea on my part. I have the highest admiration for those Senators and for their opinions, and hope I have manifested it in this whole debate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not desire to prolong the debate; but I can not refrain from saying that if I had the view of the purpose and effect and nature of this bill which the Senator from Nevada has just stated, I should be compelled to support it. If I thought that by failing to pass this bill we would destroy vast property interests, or if I went to the extent to which the Senator has gone, and thought it would be a criminal thing to do not to pass the bill, I undoubtedly should be in favor of its passage.

I have understood, up to the present time, that the question before Congress in this bill was whether or not we should grant certain privileges to the city of San Francisco; not whether we should take away from San Francisco anything that it has, or whether we should destroy any property that it has, but whether or not we should grant to San Francisco certain property which it does not now have. That is the question before Congress.

The Senator from Nevada says it amounts to nothing. It seems to me that San Francisco is putting forth a tremendous effort to obtain something which amounts to nothing. If the privileges and grants set forth in this bill are not valuable to San Francisco or to any grantee, I fail to understand why she has put forth such a tremendous effort to acquire it.

Mr. PITTMAN. I said it amounted to nothing to the Government, but everything to San Francisco and the other grantees.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will permit me, I am sorry to see a public corporation assume the attitude the private beneficiaries of bills of this kind usually assume, asking on the one side of Congress for the largess of the Nation and upon the other side expressing a contempt for the property which they seek to obtain by national legislation.

It seems to me if San Francisco gets the grant which is contained in this bill, instead of assuming a contemptuous attitude and saying it is of no value or of small value, the municipality ought to be thankful to the United States for a great gift of enormous value to her and her people.

I agree with the Senator from Nevada that that city ought to be relieved from the domination and the oppression of a private water monopoly. I think it ought to have been relieved a long time ago. I believe that a great deal of the insistence of San Francisco upon the passage of this bill and the feeling of her people upon the subject is nothing more nor less than the concentration of the resentment and of the hostility on the part of the population of San Francisco against the Spring Valley Water Co. But it does not follow that because she is oppressed by this private holder of a monopoly of one of the necessities of life it is necessary for her to take this great park which belongs to the Government and to obtain grants which will enable her to use water which is the only resource of the people of San Joaquin Valley for irrigating their desert lands. She can be relieved from her situation and leave this power to be developed, this water to be used, and possibly this park with its wonderful natural beauties to be preserved for the enjoyment of all the people of this country.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield to me before he sits down?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. How will the Senator preserve the beauties of this park that he fears is going to be destroyed if he gives to the irrigation people the same rights that the bill gives to San Francisco?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator did not state the proposition as I made it.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood the Senator in his closing remark to make some allusion of that kind. Nevertheless I may be mistaken. If I am, my question need not be answered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is correct in saying that I referred to the subject, but the Senator injected an element into it which I did not include, and that is that the landowners be given the same right which San Francisco is seeking; that is, the right to construct a dam at the outlet of the Hetch Hetchy Valley.

Furthermore, I qualified the statement which I made by saying that this water could be used, "possibly," without destroying the park, because I am informed, and I have seen the reports, that the water can be impounded lower down the stream for the purposes of irrigation, without damming the Hetch Hetchy Valley.

Mr. NORRIS. What would the Senator say in that respect, then, about the development of this power?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Power could be developed, but not to the same extent. I assume the full amount of power would not be developed, to the extent of $45,000,000 worth. A large portion of the power development contemplated in this project would be in the Cherry and Lake Eleanor portions of the project, which, with Hetch Hetchy, are the three constituent sources of supply, but which are entirely outside of the national park and whose development would not affect the Hetch Hetchy Valley in any way.

Mr. NORRIS. In regard to the irrigation, I want to ask the Senator if he has any information that the full extent of the waters of this spring can be used for irrigation, or for any other purpose, unless somewhere dams are built to preserve the flood waters of the stream?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly not. That is perfectly obvious.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not believe there is any other place where you could build a dam that would hold back the waters in sufficient quantity unless you went to the very same expense and a very much greater expense than this dam will cost.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Even if that were true, while we would have then to concede the sacrifice of the park, it would still leave a choice between supplying the water for irrigation and taking it for domestic purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. I concede that; but I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that if we did what these irrigationists want us to do, it seems to me that it would necessarily follow that we would come in direct conflict with the other objectors who want to preserve the park just as it is now.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That would be a question which would have to be further investigated before a satisfactory answer could be given. If we eliminate the project for supplying water to San Francisco, a new project will have to be taken up, and it is perfectly possible, I am informed, that water could be taken out of this stream for irrigation without destroying the park. It undoubtedly would not develop power to the same extent that San Francisco wants to develop it.

Mr. NORRIS. There are seasons of the year when that stream practically goes dry. I understand, late in the season. I believe it is conceded—I have not heard the contrary advocated—and if the Senator has any information to that effect I wish he would give us the source of his information—I believe it is conceded that there is only one way to use this water either for municipal purposes or for the purpose of irrigation, and that is to store the flood waters of the stream.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will undertake to furnish the Senator from Nebraska before this debate is concluded the sources of my information as to the possibility of using the water for irrigation without damaging the Hetch Hetchy Valley.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. THOMAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will inquire if the Senator from Colorado was going to address himself to the pending bill?

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President; I was going to make a motion to adjourn.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea. I will state that I make the motion not with the expectation that there will be any debate upon the bill to-day—

Mr. THOMAS. I certainly, even if there were to be any debate, would not interpose a motion to adjourn against it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But that the bill may become the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay the bill aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the bill will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. THOMAS. If there is no other business to come before the Senate, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, October 9, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SECURING A QUORUM.

Mr. LEVY rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman just reserve his point for a moment?

Mr. MANN. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment before he makes the point?

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I just wanted to ask the gentleman when he came to town?

Mr. FOSTER. He just came to town to-day. He wants to get into the Record this morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I got to town before the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] did, and I have been here when he was not here. Now does the gentleman want to ask another question? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (after counting). Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, did the urgent deficiency bill come from the Senate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It did.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would the gentleman from Illinois object to sending that bill to conference?

Mr. MANN. I made the point of order that there is no quorum present, and the Chair has declared that there is no quorum present. The House could not do anything with it now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman was not here the other day when a quasi agreement was made with the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to the effect that—

Mr. MANN. I do not see how the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] knew I was not here. The gentleman himself is seldom here.

Mr. PAYNE. I think, Mr. Speaker, it should be made clear what gentleman from New York is being referred to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was speaking of the other gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] when I said that a sort of agreement was made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House refuses to adjourn.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I made a motion for a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair put the motion of the gentleman from Florida.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will summon the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll call discloses the presence of 162 Members, not a quorum.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it in order now to move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to bring absent Members back?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is in order.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to notify and to send for and arrest absent Members, in order to secure and retain their attendance, and that for this purpose the Speaker pro tempore issue his warrant, and that absent Members be arrested wherever they may be found by the officers appointed by the Sergeant at Arms for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Would the present occupant of the chair have authority to sign such a warrant?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair the Speaker pro tempore has the same authority as the Speaker himself would have in securing a quorum. That matter was raised once in the Forty-fourth Congress, and upon a point of order being made the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Sunset Cox, of New York, ruled that the Speaker pro tempore had such power.

Mr. MANN. I would mildly suggest that the Sergeant at Arms be a little careful about arresting Members under such a warrant.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I understand that motion is not debatable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BARTLETT. I ask unanimous consent for just a minute or two, to make a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not in order to submit a request of that kind in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think the Chair is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I rise for the purpose of notifying the Speaker and the House that my colleague, Mr. ROTHERMEL, who is sick in this city, is absolutely unable to appear here and has sent word to that effect.

Mr. BARTLETT. And he requests the statement to be made.

Mr. MANN. The statement is out of order unless the gentleman moves that he be excused.

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I move that my colleague, Mr. ROTHERMEL, be excused on account of illness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that his colleague, Mr. ROTHERMEL, be excused from attendance upon the House on account of sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves that the House do now adjourn. The Chair is in doubt as to whether a call of the House having been ordered under clause 2 of Rule XV such a motion should be seconded by a majority of those present. Being in doubt, the Chair puts the question of seconding the motion. Those favoring seconding the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House do now adjourn will rise. [After counting.] Those opposed to seconding the motion will now rise.

The question being taken, the House divided; and there were—ayes 29, noes 27.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to adjourn is seconded.

Mr. COX. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There are no yeas and nays upon seconding a motion. The question now is upon the motion to adjourn.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. FOSTER and Mr. Cox) there were—ayes 28, noes 32.

Accordingly the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recorded as present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Has the Clerk the roll at the desk in order to call the name of the gentleman? I understand that the original roll has gone out of the hands of the Clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that it is the duty of the Clerk to record a gentleman as present upon his request.

Mr. MANN. But the Clerk must call the gentleman's name from the roll.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Clerk has noted the gentleman from Massachusetts as present.

Mr. MANN. The Clerk must call his name.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the name of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MANN. The Clerk must call his name, and he can not do it through the tally clerk. He must call it from the roll, and the roll has been sent out in connection with the warrant.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The roll is constructively always in the possession of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so holds. The Clerk will call the name of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts, and he answered "Present."

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. BREMNER, of New Jersey, is confined to his home by an attack of serious illness, and I therefore move that he be relieved from the operation of any process under the order of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that his colleague, Mr. BREMNER, be excused from attendance in the House under the order.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on seconding the motion to adjourn. As many as are in favor of seconding the motion of the gentleman will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] As many as are opposed will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Six Members have voted in favor of seconding the motion to adjourn and 22 Members have voted against seconding the motion to adjourn.

So the motion was not seconded.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. Is it proper to suggest where a quorum may be obtained in order to aid the Sergeant at Arms to find a quorum?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not present a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I submit a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Several new leaders on the Democratic side having been voted down on the motion to adjourn, would it be proper to inquire if the Sergeant at Arms is endeavoring to secure the presence of the real Democratic leader so that he may move to adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not advised as to what action the Sergeant at Arms is at present taking.

Mr. MANN. May I submit another parliamentary inquiry? The hour of 2 o'clock will shortly arrive. Will we then be notified in reference to the ball game in the city of New York?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not state a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. That is where the Members are.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. DONOVAN. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I have in my mind that if the Sergeant at Arms is directed to find a particular Member we will not have to wait long for a quorum. Is it proper to direct the Sergeant at Arms to seek a certain Member?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms is directed to seek all absent Members and to cause their attendance on the House.

Mr. DONOVAN. Is this a proper question: What knowledge has the Chair as to how the Sergeant at Arms is performing his duty—whether he is in his office neglecting his duty or whether he is out seeking absent Members?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry; but as a matter of information the Chair will state that he has no knowledge.

Mr. DONOVAN. Has any report or information come from the Sergeant at Arms?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not to the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. DONOVAN. Then, in other words, we are here like so many dolts and can not get any information from the Chair. Is that the situation?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman, of course, can size up the situation for himself.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman from Connecticut yield while he is making his parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. DONOVAN. I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. My private information is that the Sergeant at Arms has notified every Member who is in the city and that they have all been here.

Mr. DONOVAN. I was going to suggest, Mr. Speaker, if permitted to do so, that for several months there have been some flagrant cases of absenteeism—most flagrant.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut is not in order.

Mr. DONOVAN. Does the Chair so rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so rules.

Mr. DONOVAN. Then, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of a quorum the Chair declines to entertain the appeal of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Not in the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is entitled to have a quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I submit that is not an appealable matter, but if it were, and if it is right to submit a proposition in the absence of a quorum, he would have a right to appeal on any matter of procedure on the calling in of any absent Members.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman did not state anything about the calling in of absent Members.

Subsequently,

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Connecticut rise?

Mr. DONOVAN. To a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONOVAN. Are we now acting under a call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are.

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, is a Member permitted to state a fact in connection with the call?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Nothing except in the nature of a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DONOVAN. It would be a parliamentary inquiry, because it would state a fact in connection—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Oh, that is not a parliamentary inquiry, the Chair takes it. Nothing is in order except the calling of the roll.

Mr. DONOVAN. I wanted to say the minority was absent altogether.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman might want to say it, but it will not be so.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, it looks now as if it were impossible to obtain a quorum here to-day, and I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERLEY). The gentleman from New York moves that the House do now adjourn. As many as favor seconding the motion will rise and be counted. [After counting.] Seven have voted in favor of seconding the motion and 27 against it, and therefore the motion is not seconded.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was seconded—ayes 26, noes 5.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, October 8, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, October 8, 1913.

The House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. SHERLEY] at 12 o'clock noon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the following order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SPEAKER'S ROOM,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., October 8, 1913.

Hon. SOUTH TRIMBLE,

Clerk of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I hereby designate Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY Speaker pro tempore for Wednesday, October 8.

CHAMP CLARK, Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is it signed by the Speaker of the House, Hon.

CHAMP CLARK?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. MANN. Does it bear his signature?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.

Mr. MANN. Of course, that is an impossibility, because he is not here this morning. He is out of the city and could not sign it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think it will require a plea of non est factum to make that point hold.

Mr. BARTLETT. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the letter is on the letterhead of the Speaker's room, and I suppose that is all there is about it.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the fact of the matter is that somebody has undoubtedly signed his name to the letter.

Mr. ADAMSON. The prudent man foreseeth the evil, and provideth therefor.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman state that somebody forged the Speaker's name?

Mr. MANN. If that is the fact.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us have the Chaplain's prayer. Go ahead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hold that this is the signature of the Speaker of the House and that it authorizes the present occupant of the chair to act as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. MANN. I do not criticize the holding of the chair, notwithstanding I suppose that the Speaker's secretary signed his name to the letter without his authority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chaplain will offer prayer.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who hast made us and endowed us with wonderful faculties of mind and soul, and hast made it possible for us to develop those faculties to perfection under the leadership of the world's great Exemplar, we bless Thee for the noble souls who by their integrity and the rectitude of their behavior have added to the sum of human happiness, and we most fervently pray that our lives may be so ordered that we may press forward to larger attainments for ourselves and for our fellow men. In the spirit of the Lord Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the minutes as read will be approved.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if it would be proper to have the Journal record the fact that, owing to so many Members being absent, even the bats have taken possession of the Hall of the House? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal as read will stand approved.

There was no objection.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 7898) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913, and for other purposes, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 7898, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman wish to make an agreement to give the House an opportunity to vote on a number of these amendments?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say very frankly that, so far as I am concerned, there are a number of these amendments to which I shall not agree, and the House, I am inclined to think, will be compelled to vote on them.

Mr. MANN. Well, why would it not be just as well to vote on them now as to vote on them at some other time? The House has plenty of time on its hands. There are a number of amendments which are subjects of controversy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What are the amendments to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. BUTLER. No. 8 is one, for instance.

Mr. MANN. I have listed a number.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish the gentleman would proceed.

Mr. MANN. No. 8, No. 38, No. 44, No. 54, No. 61, No. 71, No. 74, No. 82, No. 83, No. 93, No. 97, and No. 107.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me just for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. Would the gentleman mind telling in just a word what those amendments are? I make that inquiry because some of the balance of us may want to vote on some of those amendments, and we want to know if the gentleman includes what we are after.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will refer to any special amendment, I will answer him.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is the amendment relating to deputy collectors and deputy marshals one of them?

Mr. MANN. That is one.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is the amendment referring to marshals of courts one of them?

Mr. MANN. That is one of them, too.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman include amendment No. 93?

Mr. MANN. I did. That is the automobile amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; the automobile amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. No. 8 is the amendment relating to the civil service, is it?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. May I inquire of the gentleman from Illinois if he includes the appropriation of $400,000 for a Red Cross building?

Mr. MANN. No. 107 is the Red Cross amendment. That is included.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, of course all of these amendments will be disagreed to by the House if it grants this request.

Mr. MANN. I understand that; but there are some gentlemen in the House who desire to have these amendments rejected and other gentlemen desire to have the House concur in them. Some Members would like to have a vote.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the gentleman that we might make an arrangement that these amendments be brought back in disagreement. We might be able to clean up the bill pretty well otherwise. As far as I am concerned I have no desire—

Mr. MANN. Yesterday we went to considerable pains, those of us who were here—sometimes a very small number—to try to get Members who had been called out of the city to return, at least temporarily. It seems to me it would be best to take a vote now rather than to wait until perhaps nobody is here.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand the gentleman's suggestion is that if the Senate amendments are disagreed to and the bill is permitted to go to conference now without further objection, either by being required to be sent to the Committee on Appropriations or otherwise, it shall be agreed that the House shall have an opportunity to vote upon these amendments to which the gentleman has called attention when the conference report is presented, and that if that agreement is reached, the gentleman will then raise no objection to the bill going to conference. Is that his suggestion?

Mr. MANN. My suggestion is to have these amendments acted upon separately now while the House has a fair membership here.

Mr. BARTLETT. There are some of these amendments which, if agreed to, ought perhaps to be agreed to with amendments. Will the gentleman permit me to make the suggestion that the bill go to conference, with the understanding that when it comes back from conference, whatever the agreement of the conferees may be, the House shall be permitted to vote separately upon these amendments that the gentleman has suggested instead of having the House act upon them now, because if the House acts upon them now it might be that the conferees would be compelled to take the action of the House as an instruction. It occurs to me it would not be wise for the House in the beginning, before any conference is had, to take such action as would in effect be an instruction to the conferees as to what the House desires in the matter. Of course, when the conference report is made, unless such an agreement as the one suggested by the gentleman is made, we would have to act upon the conference report as a whole and would have to vote it up or down.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We would have to do that anyway, unless these amendments came back in disagreement.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Of course, if the House should concur in any Senate amendment, that would not be in disagreement, and would be beyond the jurisdiction of the conferees. Of course, if the House should vote to nonconcur in any particular amendments, those amendments would still be in conference, and the conferees would understand the attitude of the House, but would not be bound by it. I think we ought to have a vote to-day upon these amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The difficulty about voting now would be this: If a motion is made to concur in one of these Senate amendments and the House refuses to concur, that is in effect an instruction to the conferees not to agree to that amendment.

Mr. MANN. I do not quite agree with the gentleman. It would be an instruction to the conferees that the attitude of the House was opposed to the amendment; but of course that is not binding upon the conferees. The gentleman himself proposes to disagree to the Senate amendments and to take the attitude of the House on that. Of course the conferees would understand the attitude of the House, and then it would depend upon the attitude of the Senate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would be very difficult to reach any agreement in conference unless the conferees brought the matter back to the House and tested the sentiment of the House a second time.

Mr. MANN. Here is a situation which seldom arises in Congress. Under the rules of the House these Senate amendments have to go to the Committee on Appropriations, and when reported back are referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That is the rule of the House, but it is a rule that is practically never followed. It might be very good instruction for us all when the House is not occupied with much other business—nothing else that I know of at present—to take up a few of these amendments, a few out of 107 amendments, and follow the rules of the House just, for instance, to see how it works. We might want to do it again in the future some time. I think myself that a reform is very much needed in the matter of making appropriation bills in conference. Whether it is possible to do it in the House on Senate amendments under pressure of business at a regular session of Congress I do not know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman, of course, understands that there are 107 Senate amendments?

Mr. MANN. I have just so stated, and so understand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The rule to which the gentleman refers has not been literally followed in my experience in the House—

Mr. MANN. I think that is correct.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because of the practical impossibility of attempting to consider all of the Senate amendments to appropriation bills in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. And, on the other hand, it is also true that in the gentleman's experience there never has been a time when the House was expected to remain in session for two months with nothing else to do except to pass this one appropriation bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We hope that we will not be on this appropriation bill for the next two months.

Mr. MANN. I hope not; but still we have the time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because the Committee on Appropriations has serious work to do in the next few months that will probably require its absence from the floor.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Appropriations has taken plenty of time to bring in this bill, and it ought now to be willing to give the House an opportunity to consider at least one dozen out of 107 amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A dozen is correct.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. If we proceed under the rule, as the gentleman from Illinois suggests, would it require two months to dispose of it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, for the present I reserve the right to object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, there are some of the Senate amendments that I have not examined sufficiently to know what their effect would be, and there would be considerable embarrassment in an attempt to discuss them if the matters were now called up in the House.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps some other Members of the House can give my distinguished friend from New York information that would be of great assistance to him in conference when considering these Senate amendments.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is undoubtedly true; but I would be in the unfortunate position of being compelled to submit certain motions and discuss them without information that I should have.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman can at all times submit the same motion that he now asks unanimous consent for, namely, to disagree to the amendments, and he will know just as much when he makes that motion as he knows now, and perhaps more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; some gentlemen may take advantage of the situation and move to concur in some amendment, and, being in charge of the bill, I will be compelled to antagonize the amendment, and I should be in possession of information that the House is entitled to expect when such a motion is made.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to the request in so far as it relates to amendment No. 8, the civil-service provision, unless the gentleman from New York will consent that the House may vote specifically upon it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If I am a conferee on the bill, and I assume that under the practice—

Mr. MANN. There is some possibility of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). Under the practice of the House I shall be—

Mr. BUTLER. We hope the gentleman will be.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). I shall not agree to the amendment in conference, and if it be adopted it will have to be adopted by the House.

Mr. BUTLER. We all have confidence in the gentleman from New York, but some of the rest of us want to be squarely upon record on that amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman's colleague, who will be named a conferee, Mr. GILLET, of Massachusetts, is as sincere in advocating civil-service reform as I am myself—

Mr. BUTLER. I hope he is.

Mr. MANN. A little more sincere, I think.

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). I do not think there will be any desire on the part of anyone representing the House to assent to that amendment.

Mr. MANN. But we are notified, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment can not go to conference and be finally disposed of without a vote in the House at the same time, and from that side of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We have other amendments—

Mr. MANN. I say we are notified from that side of the House privately that the amendment can not possibly be disposed of without a vote in the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will make that statement, that that amendment will not be disposed of without a vote.

Mr. MANN. Then I say let us dispose of it and give our attitude on it to-day instead of waiting until everybody has gone out of the city.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are a number of other amendments—

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, there is no hardship in compelling the House to vote on some of these amendments, because when the matter was up just after the tariff bill was finally voted upon I gave my colleagues and the House notice that they had better keep a quorum here, because I should insist in the first instance on a record vote on some of these amendments, having in mind, and I do not know but what I stated it, the amendment in regard to the civil service and the amendment in regard to the automobile and another amendment in regard to the Commerce Court judges. I stated they would be required to have a record vote upon them before we would send the bill to conference and they had better keep their quorum here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have the same notion. I do not believe a Democratic House, having taken an automobile from a Republican Vice President and a Republican Speaker, would be justified then in giving one to a Democratic Vice President, although I was not in sympathy with the movement to take the automobiles away from both of those officials.

Mr. MANN. I believe in giving both automobiles myself, and I want to test the temper of the House on that if I can.

Mr. PAYNE. I would vote for an amendment giving the Speaker and the Vice President both automobiles. I voted for that before and I have not changed my attitude. I heard a great deal about the extravagance of it at that time, and I want some gentlemen who were so exercised over the extravagance that they carried it all through the campaign to be on record now on that subject. It is a matter of curiosity largely now, and I want to see the House vote on knocking out that amendment, and the same way with the civil-service amendment and the item in regard to the Commerce Court. I want to save what little the Senate has saved of that amendment and want a vote on that on its merits. The other, on the automobile, is simply a matter which you gentlemen on that side of the House believe in and have sworn to so often during the campaign and put into your handbook and into your platform almost.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire the attention of the chairman of the committee. I wish to ask if he is willing for the House to have a vote on Senate amendment No. 44 when the conferees report?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. What is amendment No. 44?

Mr. BATHRICK. Amendment No. 44 is to make good the supplies of the Ohio National Guard which they lost during their service in the recent flood disaster in Ohio.

Mr. MANN. That is one of the amendments which I included as wanting to have voted on now, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]?

Mr. MANN. As it is put, I shall have to object if the time has come when you have to dispose of it.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] yield for a question? I want to get clear the chairman's attitude on two amendments. I want to say that I have most implicit confidence in the gentleman, and when he gives me his word that is all I want. I would like to know if whether or not before the gentleman will yield in conference on the automobile proposition to the Senate he will bring it back and let the House vote on it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall not as conferee agree to such an amendment in view of the history of the transaction.

Mr. COX. And also in regard to the amendment giving employees an extra month's salary?

Mr. FITZGERALD. So far as I am concerned.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. And so, in regard to the amendment asked about by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK]?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The House has a right to determine these questions. I do not wish to force my views in opposition to the House.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill with the Senate amendments be taken from the Speaker's table, the Senate amendments be disagreed to, and that the conference requested by the Senate be agreed to.

Mr. MANN. My suggestion is that there be time given for general debate in the House, a length of time to be agreed upon, and a separate vote be permitted on the amendments which I enumerated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time? Under the five-minute rule?

Mr. MANN. I think there should be some general debate first, and after that I am perfectly willing to have the amendments considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much general debate does the gentleman believe we should have? An hour?

Mr. MANN. There ought to be more than that. There are several gentlemen who want to be heard. There probably is not a quorum in town to-day. I presume there will be to-morrow. I do not see why you should try to hurry the matter. It is almost certain there will be a roll call on some of these amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman speaks about general debate. Does he mean general debate on these amendments alone, or on anything?

Mr. MANN. On anything. The ordinary rule, I will state. Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman uses the term "general debate" in its real sense?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much debate does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. MANN. Well, I should say two hours and a half of general debate on this side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not consent to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object. I am quite willing, if you wish to do so, that you pass the appropriation bill under a rule when you have nothing else to do, instead of considering it in the House. Some gentlemen suggest a rule. That does not bother me any.

Mr. METZ. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee if he has any idea of when the bill is likely to come back here from conference?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. METZ] asks the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANN. My colleague wants to know whether he can get to New York to make a speech.

Mr. METZ. I do not care anything about staying here listening to hot air for nothing. Why not be frank amongst ourselves, at least?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. MANN. I was not objecting, Mr. Speaker, to the request of this gentleman from New York, Mr. METZ. It was to the request of the other gentleman from New York, Mr. FITZGERALD.

Mr. METZ. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. My inquiry was what the prospect was of having this bill come back from conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. MANN. The objection I made was to the request of the gentleman's colleague; not his.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order has been demanded, and this being Calendar Wednesday, the call of committees is the regular order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is that correct? Is not the vocational education bill the unfinished business? Does not the House automatically resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not advised at present whether that is the unfinished business or not.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I have a request to make, and that is that my colleague [Mr. METZ] be excused from further attendance to-day. He wants to go home to New York.

Mr. METZ. And to-morrow.

Mr. PAYNE. I will include to-day and to-morrow. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my request for unanimous consent be put, that my colleague [Mr. METZ] be excused from further attendance to-day and to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this being Calendar Wednesday, this is all out of order.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has so ruled. On the last Calendar Wednesday the House had under consideration Senate joint resolution No. 5. Under the rule the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of said resolution as the unfinished business on Calendar Wednesday, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] will take the chair.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia rose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES] did not call his bill up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The understanding of the Chair is that automatically on Calendar Wednesday the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering unfinished business in order on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. It does.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the rule the committee must be called, and the gentleman has not called his bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York is mistaken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the gentleman is mistaken, but would be glad to hear him if he can cite any authority.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that we lay that resolution aside temporarily.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's motion is not in order. The Chair holds that automatically the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 5.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 5, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 5, which the Clerk will read by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 5) providing for the appointment of a commission to consider the need and report a plan for national aid to vocational education.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES] moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 119, noes 35.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. SHERLEY] having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration Senate joint resolution No. 5, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The call of committees having passed beyond the committee that called up that vocational educational bill, I suppose that is dead until that committee is reached again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rule on that matter when it is presented, and would not care to express an opinion prior to that time.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

The Committee on Appropriations was called.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BARTLETT. That point has been made over on this side.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman withdrew it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; he withheld it.

Mr. MANN. He can not withhold it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] both make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-one Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will summon absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. J. R. WALKER, my colleague, be excused from attendance on the House on this call for the reason that he is confined to bed on account of illness at the Congress Hall Hotel in this city.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that his colleague, Mr. WALKER, be excused from attendance on the House on account of illness. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll call discloses that 187 Members have answered to their names—not a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to bring in the absentees and that the Speaker be authorized to issue the warrants therefor, and that they be arrested wherever found.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to arrest and bring before the House the absentees and the Speaker issue the warrants authorizing him so to do.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Later,

Mr. DONOVAN rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PAGE). For what purpose does the gentleman from Connecticut rise?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, is it true that not a Member from Missouri has been here to-day or yesterday?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not able to answer the gentleman's question as to whether it is true or not.

Mr. BARTLETT. The roll call shows.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll call will disclose whether or not that is true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Is a quorum present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; there is not a quorum present.

Mr. MANN. And the Chair might further answer there will not be to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will not take that liberty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many are present, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We lack 20 of a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, as notice of this proceeding will probably result in a quorum being present to-morrow, and we will be able to proceed, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to ask the gentleman from New York if it is his intention to stay in session to-morrow until we do secure a quorum?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think it will be necessary.

Mr. MANN. I am in favor of staying in session to-day until we get a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERLEY). As many as second the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House do now adjourn will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Twenty-five gentlemen second the motion and 15 oppose it, therefore the question is, Shall the House now adjourn?

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many demand the yeas and nays; the record shows how many are present.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it does not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The record shows those who have answered to their names, and the gentleman must have one-fifth of those Members who answered present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks those actually present determine whether a sufficient number have risen to order the yeas and nays, and, in order that the Chair may accurately determine those who are present, those who have not risen to order the yeas and nays will please rise. [After counting.] Twenty-seven have risen to order the yeas and nays, and there being present in the Chamber 60 Members, the yeas and nays are ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 87, nays 62, answered "present" 8, not voting 269, as follows:

YEAS—87.

 Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be recorded. Is this a call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a roll call on a motion to adjourn, pending the obtaining of a quorum.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Am I entitled to vote?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman is. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, and he answered in the affirmative.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. SIMS, and he voted in the affirmative.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman qualified?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks a motion to adjourn, pending the obtaining of a quorum, is such a proceeding as entitles anyone appearing, prior to the announcement by the Chair of the vote, to the right to vote.

Mr. MANN. May I inquire whether or not that is a settled opinion of the Chair or whether he has looked it up?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would be glad to hear from the gentleman if he has any information on the subject.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that on a roll call under the rule a man is not entitled to vote unless the roll call is an automatic roll call on a motion to adjourn or a roll call which requires a quorum. A motion to adjourn does not require a quorum to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair at first was rather inclined to that opinion, but in the limited time allowed it to investigate it was unable to find an authority, and it seems to the Chair, in the absence of a quorum, this motion being a motion made while an attempt was being made to obtain a quorum, that the reason applying in the case that the gentleman has cited of an automatic roll call ought to obtain here, and it should be so held in the absence of a prior ruling to the contrary.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, the theory upon which a Member can vote where no quorum appears is that the purpose of the House is to obtain a quorum. Hence on an automatic call a Member can vote, although he was not present at first, and on any roll call when no quorum appears Members are permitted to vote after the roll call is had in order to help make up a quorum. But these are votes where a quorum is required. Now, a quorum is not required on this vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is true; but in the opinion of the Chair, if the vote should not be determined in the affirmative—and it can not be assumed that it will be so decided—the need of a quorum to be ascertained would still exist.

Mr. MANN. But should the House not adjourn, these gentlemen will have their names called at once on a call of the House to ascertain whether a quorum is present. This roll call does not require a quorum, and if the House should not adjourn the gentlemen coming in will have their names called on the roll call just now pending, this latter roll call being an automatic roll call. I am not concerned whether these gentlemen vote or not, although it may later become important, and I would not wish that question to be considered as settled unless the Chair has had opportunity to look it up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not looked it up.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, there is no conceivable circumstance under which it could do any harm, because the only motion in order is a motion to adjourn.

Mr. MANN. There are conceivable circumstances where it would do harm to permit a rule of the House by which Members can refrain from voting when their names are called and then walk down, one at a time, and ask to vote later on on any question. That is the purpose of the rule of the House. One of the purposes is to prevent obstructive tactics, and this method could be easily used in that way. Suppose one-half of the Members of the House should refuse to vote on the roll call and have their names called twice, and then come down and be recorded. It takes a great deal of time, and—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It makes a difference when the motion to adjourn is in order.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the motion to adjourn is a favorite filibustering motion.

Mr. KINKADE of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois knows that we are not attempting to filibuster to-day.

Mr. MANN. No. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKADE] knows nothing about anything except his preconceived notion of the Beef Trust.

Mr. KINKADE of New Jersey. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman from New Jersey knows what he is talking about in connection with the Beef Trust. A newspaper dispatch from Detroit says that a carload of Canadian beef has been coming in every hour since the tariff bill was passed, thus proving my contention that once the tariff wall was cut away that we would have competition from Canada.

Mr. MANN. May I ask whether the Chair has examined the rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is trying to ascertain if there is any precedent upon the matter and has been unable to find any.

Mr. MANN. Will the Chair permit me to call his attention to the language of Rule XV, paragraph 1, where, after referring to the second call, it says:

And thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair unless the Member's name has been noted under clause 3 of this rule.

That is the rule providing for the noting of the presence of Members, which is not to be done unless the roll call requires a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question that is worrying the Chair is whether under a proceeding to obtain a quorum the ordinary rule to which the gentleman from Illinois has referred would apply, and whether the exception stated in clause 3 of Rule XV does not apply. The language of clause 3 is not limited to questions requiring a quorum to decide. Manifestly, if there had been no call of the House, it would not have been the right of any gentleman to have himself recorded on a motion to adjourn or on any other roll call, unless he qualified under the rule by stating that he had been present when his name was called, giving attention, and had failed to hear it. The question that raises the doubt in the mind of the Chair is whether, there being a proceeding pending to ascertain the presence of a quorum, even though not arising by an automatic call of the House, and any Member having the right to come in and have himself recorded, a subsidiary motion like the motion to adjourn would not also carry with it the right of the Member to be recorded prior to the announcement of the vote.

Mr. MANN. I think it is plain that that is not the case under the rule. The rule provides that after the second call of the roll a Member can not vote unless his name is noted under paragraph 3 of Rule XV. It can not be noted in this case under paragraph 3 of Rule XV, because that can only be done where a quorum is required upon the vote. This vote does not require a quorum. On an ordinary roll call, if no quorum is present and the roll has been called twice, it has been customary for a Member who comes in to vote, although the point of no quorum has not been made, upon the theory that under clause 3 of Rule XV the Speaker has noted the presence of that Member, as he has the authority to do; and having noted the presence of a Member, he is entitled to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Prior to the announcement of the vote upon the motion to adjourn, would it not be within the power of the Chair to note the presence of a Member, the House then being without a quorum and desiring to obtain one? And that being so, would not the Member have the right to have his name recorded?

Mr. MANN. The Chair could note the presence of the Member after the motion to adjourn is disposed of, if that motion does not prevail; but the motion to adjourn not requiring a quorum to dispose of it comes at this time as it does at any other time. The reason for the rule which prevents a Member voting after two roll calls is that the Member has had fair opportunity; and if nearly half the House are permitted to refuse to vote when their names are twice called, and then they come up and ask to be recorded, it might become a favorite method of filibustering, and I do not believe in giving any more opportunities to filibuster than are necessary. They are plentiful now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi, the gentleman from Tennessee, and the other gentlemen may be permitted to record their votes on this motion.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to their being recorded on the original call of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I mean on this motion to adjourn. They have been recorded on the other. I ask unanimous consent that they may be recorded upon this motion to adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Of course the rule provides that the Speaker shall not entertain a request to permit a Member to vote after the roll has been twice called, unless the Member qualifies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair appreciates the importance, as a precedent, of a ruling of this kind, although of no importance in its bearing upon the present situation. Not having had an opportunity to examine the precedents, and as far as the Chair is aware, the point not having been raised heretofore, the Chair would prefer not to have to make such a precedent.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request to have my vote recorded. Having stepped out of the Hall, I asked leave to be recorded, and I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will take the liberty of putting the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr.

GARRETT] for unanimous consent that those present who have not voted on this roll call be permitted to vote, which will avoid the necessity of the Chair passing upon the question of their right so to vote.

Mr. MANN. The Chair will note that the rule provides that thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request that a Member be permitted to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is aware of that. The Chair is also aware of the fact that many matters of this kind are arranged by unanimous consent. If the gentleman insists upon his point of order, which is equal to an objection, the Chair will hold that the gentlemen whose names have been called and have been permitted to vote have the right so to vote.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the House can give permission to change the rule.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, October 9, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, October 9, 1913.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday last was read and approved.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, there is a great deal of talk in the newspapers about what is being done by the Committee on Banking and Currency and when we are to have a report. We have been here some time waiting for a report from the committee. This Congress is not going to adjourn until we have some currency legislation. The committee has been having hearings for three weeks. There was spent $100,000 or more in sending a commission abroad to study this great question. Now we are marking time here in Washington, adjourning from day to day, and I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee, whom I see on the floor, when we are going to have a report from his committee, in order that we may know something about whether we can stay here or go home to our families until the committee does report.

It does seem to me that there is some effort on the part of some people, not Senators, to prevent any action from being taken during this session. I notice in the papers this morning that there was a great convention held in Boston yesterday by the bankers of the country and also that a resolution was introduced by a man who is not a banker, so far as I know—a defeated Member of Congress, a very able man, who knows a great deal about the tariff and is a tariff expert; but I never heard of him as a banker—and when it was announced who should control the money and the currency of the country, the bankers or the Government, with one accord they shouted, "We should! We, the bankers, should!"

I hold in my hand a telegram received from a man who was in the convention who is vice president of a million-dollar bank, and he says that the whole and the only plan of leaders here is to defeat if possible any action on the bill at this session; and the resolution adopted yesterday has that underlying object. The country banks are all right, but simply have been hoodwinked, and will catch on later.

I know the sentiment of the country. The people in my State and the country banks there want action taken on this subject. If we get the bill back here, we can discuss it in open session and pass a bill that will be satisfactory to the people. I should like to know from the chairman of the committee when we may expect a report from his committee.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, if the chairman of the committee had his own way about it he could report the bill next week. The chairman of the committee has not had his own way about it. I do not know when the committee will be ready to act. The hearings, I believe, have had a beneficial result upon the minds of the country, at least, and also upon the members of the committee who approached this matter with more or less lack of complete information with regard to it. By these hearings we have had the point of view of a great number of men—bankers and, in some few cases, business men—but for the most part the bankers have desired to be heard, claiming that they wanted to have their views understood by the committee; and they have been heard with great patience and with great repetition of what we have heard over and over again.

We have now taken testimony that will probably fill 2,000 pages, a copy of which has been promptly sent to every Member of the Senate as it has been printed. The bankers had been heard quite extensively by the House committee during last winter, and those hearings comprise over 700 pages of printed matter and were made available to every member of the committee. The examination by the Pujo committee, also of several thousand pages, has been available, as well as the 32 volumes of the National Monetary Commission.

Mr. OVERMAN. Did the same bankers who are appearing before your committee appear before the House committee?

Mr. OWEN. Practically; their leaders did.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it expected that every banker in the United States will be heard before reporting the bill?

Mr. OWEN. I am not answering for the committee; I am answering only for myself when I say we have heard a great many of them and that the committee thought it well to continue the hearings not later than the 25th of October. It passed a resolution a day or two ago to that effect. The 25th of October is next Saturday two weeks. I was only recounting the hearings that had been given and the volumes of information available to the committee and to those attempting to make the preliminary draft of a bill that might be made satisfactory to the country and which would seem to be in accord with the best opinion of the country. I myself took part in it, and a very active part, and before venturing to put into form my own ideas in the bill I did consult not only this record which was taken in the House—I read that record—but I consulted also with the members of the American Bankers' Association who were designated by that association as the currency commission. I spent hours and hours with them trying to ascertain with precision and as intimately as possible their views. They were also heard by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the President of the United States in connection with this preliminary draft of the bill. Somebody had to draft it. It could not be drafted by everybody, of course. It had to be drafted by some men who would give it special attention, and they did the best they could with it. It was a preliminary draft and is fundamentally sound, although, of course, it can be improved by common counsel. It went before the House, was discussed at great length in Democratic caucus, was variously amended, and then on the House floor it was further discussed and an extensive record made. The debates on it are before the Members of the Senate.

I think that in reality we have had about all the hearings necessary for me to make up my mind. I can not speak for any other member of the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator if, in his opinion, there is any concerted effort on the part of the bankers of this country to prevent legislation at this session?

Mr. OWEN. I have no way of ascertaining what their motive is. I think this Boston meeting had for its obvious purpose to work up opposition to this bill and either force the bankers' view or to delay or defeat the bill. What the purpose may be beyond that I have no means of knowing. It is difficult to ascertain the purposes of men. We generally have to judge of purposes by the actions of men. I do not like to attribute any ulterior purpose to the bankers; but I, of course, recognize the fact that they are having a very active propaganda carried on about it, because there have been called numerous State bankers' meetings, and they have passed various resolutions about this bill. I attended several of those State meetings myself, one of them in Virginia, where I explained the bill quite fully, and they passed a vote in favor of the principles of the bill quite unanimously. Not very long afterwards, when they had had an opportunity, I suppose, of consulting with the leaders of the propaganda, they met and passed a resolution against it.

So I do not know what the motive is. I simply know that we have given a great deal of time to hearing their point of view. The committee has been very patient about it. In fact, I think that the hearings have gone so far that they are not really necessary to be continued any longer. But that is a matter which is in the control of the committee, not in the control of the chairman. I really hope that the committee will soon be ready to report the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand, then, by the official action taken, the committee will not report before the 25th of October?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is when the hearings will be closed.

Mr. OWEN. The hearings might close before that time, if the committee orders it to be done. The matter is in the hands of the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand, then, the committee has taken action that the hearings will close on the 25th?

Mr. OWEN. Not later than the 25th.

Mr. OVERMAN. And there is no telling when we will get a report from the committee on the bill.

Mr. OWEN. No, sir; there is no definite information I could give the Senator upon that matter. The hearings will conclude not later than the 25th. The committee has it in its power to conclude the hearings earlier if it sees fit.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator think we can get a report from the committee by the 1st of November?

Mr. OWEN. I greatly regret that the chairman can not definitely forecast when the report will be made.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I read last night rather a remarkable statement in one of the evening papers, and I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether he has any information upon the subject. One of these papers, in the endeavor to right the President with respect to an alleged interview that had been given out in the Post, attributed to the President this statement, that he neither expected nor wanted the support of any Republican to this measure. Does the Senator from Oklahoma know whether the President made the statement which I have just quoted?

Mr. OWEN. The statement is obviously preposterous.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to say in answer to the query of the Senator from Iowa that I have it from the President's own lips that the statements attributed to him are without foundation—a statement which I assured him I would repeat on the floor of the Senate if the occasion arose requiring it. Those of us who know the President intimately know that this assurance from him was unnecessary. The statement does not sound like him, it is not characteristic of him, and it is entirely foreign to the tenor of his whole political life. I am sure the President would welcome, as we all would, the cooperation of both sides of this Chamber in the accomplishment of any great act of national legislation that is designed for the general welfare.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am very glad to hear what the Senator from Colorado has just said. It seemed to me inconceivable that a President of the United States could say what is imputed to him. A President who would utter a sentiment of that kind is not worthy of the high place which the occupant of that office holds, and I asked the question because I felt that the people of this country ought to be advised definitely whether a statement of that kind had been made. I am sure that they will receive with great relief the denial of the Senator from Colorado, and I accept it absolutely and implicitly as the truth.

Mr. THOMAS. I am sure the Senator does, and I think he will agree with me also that those who are responsible for placing such words in the mouth of the Chief Magistrate of the United States are themselves unworthy of public confidence.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know who is responsible for it.

Mr. THOMAS. Neither do I.

Mr. CUMMINS. The statement to which I referred appeared in the Evening Star yesterday.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I feel that a declaration or publication of that character is utterly scandalous, and it is so utterly at variance with the thoughts and expressions of President Wilson that it seems to me it can find but little lodgment in the mind of any sensible man in this country. His whole life and his political life in New Jersey during the time when he was a candidate for governor and during the time when he was governor of our Commonwealth have been so utterly contrary to any such thought and expression as to make it sheerly senseless and ridiculous.

He has courted, and our party in New Jersey has courted, the fair-minded, honest men of all parties to join with us and with him in the matter of reform and clean, good government to advance the welfare of our Commonwealth, and I believe thus far it will be the universal consensus of opinion in this broad land that whatever act has prompted President Wilson it has been not to advance partisan supremacy but for broad, patriotic, and just purposes. I feel that the country may rely upon his judgment and his wisdom, at least upon his fairness, to urge the assistance of all parties for better government, for cleaner government, and for relief from conditions that have burdened the masses of our country.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, these numerous misrepresentations appearing in the press, not only with regard to the President but also with regard to members of the committee, with regard to the chairman of the committee, are obviously inspired by some desire to create mischief by exciting hostility, and by stirring up ill feeling between members of the committee and between members of the committee and the President, and between the President and the Congress of the United States. Numerous false statements have appeared in the press. I have not felt called upon to enter a public denial, much less to defend the President with regard to the absurd and unreasonable charge that he should have said such a thing as that he did not expect nor care for Republican support on a great public measure. No human being knowing the President's high character, his delicate consideration for others and for the proprieties, would believe such an utterly unreasonable statement, and the country will not give a sigh of relief to be informed that the President has not said this for the very common-sense reason that no common-sense citizen has believed it for a moment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I have heard with a good deal of satisfaction, as I think the other Senators on this side have heard, the disclaimers on behalf of the President. I am very glad to know that the President has no intention of doing the things which it has been stated in the newspapers that he had in mind to do; but there is another matter which I regard as of quite as much importance, and upon which I should like to have the disclaimer of the Senator quite as emphatically, if he is in a position to make it.

It has also been stated in the newspapers that, unless this bill can be forced through the committee and brought to the attention of the Senate within what some regard as a reasonable time, it is the intention to take it into the Democratic caucus. I would regard it as exceedingly unfortunate if a bill of this character should be treated in that way; and I should like to ask the Senator, who has been exceedingly frank in his statements, whether or not, to his knowledge, there is any such intention on his part or upon the part of any considerable number of Senators upon the other side?

Mr. OWEN. I will answer the Senator presently, when I have concluded my remarks, which he interrupted.

This obvious propaganda carried on in the press really would seem to have some other than a patriotic purpose. Why should the President of the United States be misrepresented day after day, and why should he be compelled to enter disclaimer after disclaimer with regard to these obvious falsehoods circulated about him? Who is responsible for it? Nobody? Has it no source, no purpose? It justifies the suspicion or the statement of the telegram sent from Boston to the Senator from North Carolina, to which he has just called attention.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Oklahoma said earlier in his statement that the bankers of Virginia had first indorsed this bill.

Mr. OWEN. The principles of this bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. But that later they had held a meeting, after probably conferring with others, in which they had condemned it. The Senator from North Carolina, my colleague [Mr. OVERMAN], has stated that the bankers of his State and my State are in favor of this measure. I believe that statement to be true, from information in my possession. I want to ask the Senator from Oklahoma what particular class of bankers in this country, in his opinion, are making this opposition and are responsible, if the bankers at all are responsible, for this propaganda that the Senator is talking about?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it is difficult to describe them as a class, and I do not like to enter into a description of a class responsible for anything. I think that these bankers' conventions are often engineered by a few active gentlemen who have what they conceive to be a class purpose to serve, and that they do not of necessity at all represent the sentiment of the bankers of the country. I have great respect for the bankers of the country; I believe they comprise a class of honorable and useful men; and, as a rule, I believe they are as patriotic as other citizens. Where they have an interest to serve, an interest which they think it their duty to protect, I should expect them to actively do those things which they think necessary to protect that interest; but I do not believe that those who conduct these conventions in reality always represent the great body of the bankers by any means. More than that, the attitude of mind of these gentlemen was fairly illustrated in a meeting which I had the honor of addressing at Cleveland, Ohio, not long since, where there was a State bankers' convention of the State of Ohio.

The question arose before them whether or not we should have prompt action on this subject matter. They voted almost unanimously in favor of that. That did not satisfy one of the bankers who was present and who, I afterwards was informed, had a large volume of country-bank deposits in his bank, and he arose and put this question to the assemblage of bankers: "All of those who are in favor of this bill passing in its present form hold up your hands." Well, there was only a very negligible quantity, perhaps four or five, who held up their hands. I then put this question to them: "Let every man who has read this bill or who knows what it is in its present form hold up his hand." Not a single man held up his hand, not even the gentleman who had made the first proposal. They had not read it, they did not know its meaning, and were in no position, therefore, to pass upon its merits. My own opinion is that the country bankers and the bankers in general will almost unanimously rejoice to avail themselves of the opportunities provided in this bill when it is perfected and submitted as a statute.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] has asked me the question whether—

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator from Oklahoma leaves the present aspect of the subject he is discussing, I wish to say that my understanding is that the bill that passed the other House and was referred to the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate will, if it becomes a law, decentralize the reserves which are now held in a few of the larger financial centers of the country. Has the Senator from Oklahoma any reason to believe that this persistent opposition, this agitation, this propaganda against this bill, is in any way influenced, brought about, or carried on by the bankers in the financial centers who are interested in preventing a decentralization of these reserves?

Mr. OWEN. I believe that there is violent and intense opposition on the part of some of those who would like to have these reserves pyramided in New York, where they may be used for speculative purposes. I want to say, also, that some of the greatest bankers in New York state very frankly that they favor this bill in its reserve aspect for the very reason that it will enable those banks to withdraw loans from the speculative market. The president of the National City Bank of New York, Mr. Frank Vanderlip, formerly Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and now president of that great bank, with $250,000,000 of deposits, is before the committee to-day, and has stated to the committee that under the present law the great banks in the central reserve cities, having no place where they can go for discounts, and being led by their natural interest to earn money for their stockholders and being compelled to use their funds down to the 25 per cent reserve limit, have been thus led to make these call loans on stocks and bonds, subject to an immediate sale, because it affords them a species of quick reserve in case of demand on them for any urgent need.

It is perfectly obvious that these men are almost compelled by necessity to carry the call stock loans, and the natural tendency is to make loans on stocks and bonds subject to immediate sale—call loans—because they have no other place to go where they may supply themselves with funds in case of necessity, that it would enable them to withdraw their resources from the call loans on the New York Stock Exchange and invest them in the commerce and industries of the Nation. Call on collateral has thus grown up because of the deficiencies of the law which we are now about to correct.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If we are going to debate the provisions of this bill—

Mr. OWEN. I am not going to debate the bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should feel called upon to suggest the absence of a quorum, which I do not do at present, however.

Mr. OWEN. I am not going to debate it. I was simply answering the question which the Senator from North Carolina asked me.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It struck me that the discussion was proceeding to the merits of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. OWEN. I do not propose to debate the bill. I was simply answering the question and speaking of the opposition and attitude of mind on the part of certain people.

It was pointed out by the witness to whom I have referred that if the banks had a Federal reserve bank to which they might go in times—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Did not that witness also state that if this bill should pass in its present form it would increase the domination of New York over the money markets of the country? I so read his testimony as reported in one of the local newspapers, and that is the reason I have asked the question.

Mr. OWEN. That is not an accurate statement of what he said. I can not remember his exact language, of course, but the substance of what he said was—

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am stating the substance of what the newspapers reported that he said. I have not seen the official report of the hearings.

Mr. OWEN. He only spoke of the dominant size of the New York reserve bank in comparison with the size of other reserve banks, if they should be multiplied in number. That was all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if the chairman of the committee will yield to me, I will remind him of the fact that Mr. Vanderlip stated that his bank would lose $50,000,000 of country bank deposits by the enactment of this measure in the way of having less money to lend on call; but he also stated that, by diverting the money they had on call, they could lend it in legitimate commercial transactions, and thereby make considerable money. I think that is about all he said on that phase of the matter.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oklahoma will yield to me, I desire to ask him a question.

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Inasmuch as the attitude of Senators and other distinguished officials of the Government is freely commented on by the press now—not always quite accurately, however—I will state my recollection of a part of an interview that I read in one of the "palladiums of the liberties of the people" last evening as to the attitude of the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] who is a member of the committee. It was something to the effect that 20 days have been consumed now in the hearings before the committee on this great bill; and I wanted to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether he thinks that up to date the information elicited by the committee in those 20 days of hearings has justified the expenditure of time on this great question or whether the time has been wasted?

Mr. OWEN. I do not think it should be regarded as wasted, although there has been much said over and over again, merely repeating the arguments of the Chicago conference; in fact, almost all of the evidence has been but a repetition of the arguments of the Chicago conference in one form or another. There has been no attempt made expressly to summon before the committee witnesses who advocate the bill. It was thought better to let those who were opposed to the bill have as full opportunity as possible to indicate its weak points, and that that would be a more useful course of procedure. That course has been substantially followed by having those who were not in favor of the bill in its present form suggest amendments and changes and give the reasons therefor. The Senate, in so far as they have read the reports of the hearings, will doubtless perceive that that is the case. Does the Senator wish to interrupt me any further?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator does not criticize the policy of the committee, does he?

Mr. OWEN. The Senator from Oklahoma has not criticized the committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But the Senator himself does not favor the passage of the bill as it came from the other House, does he?

Mr. OWEN. I favor certain amendments to it, but in the main I think it is the most valuable banking bill that has ever been written.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator favors quite a number of amendments, does he not?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; verbal and otherwise, and some in punctuation that I should like to have made, but the great principles of the bill are sound.

Now, answering the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], I will state that from the time I became a member of the committee and its chairman I have with great freedom consulted the Republican members. I have felt at perfect liberty to do so, and have done what I could to secure their cordial and friendly cooperation in writing this bill from a high and patriotic standpoint. We held our meetings in common, and while occasionally we have had conferences of the majority members in connection with the bill, it has been more for the purpose of studying the bill out than for taking any concrete steps independently of the Republican members.

The Senator from Utah asked me the question point-blank as to whether or not I would favor a party conference on this bill or whether there would be one. I do not really know whether there will be one or not, nor have I consulted with any sufficient number of my colleagues to justify me in drawing a conclusion upon that matter.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? Has it not been the consensus of opinion on this side of the Chamber that this should be a nonpartisan bill? Has it not been thought that it is a great question that ought to be settled without regard to politics and without regard to any partisanship?

Mr. OWEN. I think that has been the consensus of opinion. But I will say to the Senator very frankly that if I thought it was necessary, in order to pass this measure, to have a Democratic caucus, I should strongly and directly favor it. I believe in responsible party government. We have two great parties in this country—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President—

Mr. OWEN. Or perhaps three.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not rise to ask anybody to yield to me. I rose, Mr. President, to inquire how this debate is proceeding?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can only answer that it is proceeding, as about everything does in the Senate of the United States, by common consent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not quite everything, Mr. President. I do not wish to interpose the rules of the Senate to prevent a reasonable latitude on any subject matter that is taken up in this way. I will say that I have myself been in favor of the continuance of this session for the consideration of this subject matter. I believe the committee is considering it seriously, as its importance demands. I do not believe any discussion is necessary to justify the committee in taking all the time that in their judgment should be taken. I do not believe any discussion of this sort is necessary to be used as a spur or a whip or a lash upon them to hurry them. I can not help saying that to me this has the appearance of a prodding of the committee. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the presentation of petitions and memorials, there being an objection to the further discussion of a matter that does not appear to be properly before the Senate. If there be no petitions or memorials, reports of committees are in order. If there be no reports of committees, the introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 3204) granting an increase of pension to Wallace W. Chaffee; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 3205) granting an increase of pension to Nettie Randolph (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

RELIEF OF SUFFERERS IN ALASKA.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I introduce a joint resolution, and ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington offers a joint resolution the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 71) for the relief of sufferers from the recent storms in Alaska.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

SENATOR TILLMAN'S RETROSPECT OF 18 YEARS (S. DOC. NO. 210).

Mr. FLETCHER. I have been requested by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to move that the order of the Senate of October 3 providing for the printing as a public document of an article prepared 18 years ago for the New York World, giving the impressions and the then beliefs of Senator TILLMAN about Wall Street and what is called "the money power," be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order of the Senate of October 3 will be reconsidered.

Mr. FLETCHER. On behalf of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and at his request, I offer the following order and ask for its adoption.

There being no objection, the order was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the remarks of Senator TILLMAN of October 3, 1913, together with an article prepared 18 years ago for the New York World, giving the impressions and the then beliefs of Senator TILLMAN about Wall Street and what is called "the money power," be printed as a document, with accompanying illustrations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

THE NAVY.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not rise to introduce a concurrent resolution, but to make an inquiry concerning one which I introduced about two months ago.

On August 15 I introduced Senate concurrent resolution No. 7, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and it directed them to inquire and report to the Senate and House:

First. What increase is desirable in the Naval Establishment.

Second. Whether it is desirable and feasible to provide a definite naval program, to extend over a series of years, with respect to the construction of new ships.

Third. In what order the United States Navy ranks among the first eight naval powers in naval efficiency, in view of the number, type, age, armor, and armament of its ships and the quality, skill, and discipline of its personnel.

Fourth. What proportion of our naval fighting efficiency is constantly available for instant active sea service in case of emergency.

As I stated before, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I should like to ask some member of the committee, several of whom I see present, whether that committee has been able to give the resolution any consideration.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, so far as I am aware the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs has been unable to muster a quorum of late; and about all the business we have done has been in the way of reporting upon nominations. Nothing has been done by a quorum of the committee; and I doubt whether a majority of the committee could be convened to-day, with the limited number of Senators present.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have counted on the floor of the Senate to-day a majority of the committee—a majority of the Republican membership and one-half of the Democratic membership. While I do not know that to-day is the regular meeting day of the committee, I simply wish to urge that the committee shall give this matter some consideration.

I did not ask that the Senate should instruct the committee at the time I introduced the resolution, but being framed as a concurrent resolution, if the committee think there is any merit in it at all, it would involve going to the House as well as to the Senate. I should like the committee at least to consider it and see whether or not they care to report it.

I bring up this matter particularly at this time, because I am not an alarmist nor a jingo nor a quarrelsome person, and I have no object in doing anything or saying anything in relation to our military affairs that can involve us nationally in any trouble or compromise us at all with foreign nations or in any way detract from the utmost friendliness of this Nation with all foreign nations. It goes without saying, however, that it is the duty of the Government to maintain an adequate Navy. I believe all party platforms agree to that. Unfortunately in the use of words, there is some difference of opinion as to what is adequate.

I had some experience in these matters as a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives. My State also is a maritime State. The entire southern border of the State is practically upon the ocean, being upon Long Island Sound, which immediately connects with the ocean. My constituents are interested in the Navy, and we feel the necessity of an adequate Navy at all times being maintained by the United States. Whether it is in any party platform or not, the Government of course should maintain an adequate Navy, as much as it should maintain an adequate police force in the District of Columbia.

I introduced an amendment to the last naval appropriation bill proposing to increase the number of battleships provided by the bill from one to three. In the wisdom of Congress, one was provided. I introduced that amendment, because I considered that it had been the established policy of the Congress to appropriate for two battleships each year; and inasmuch as the previous bill had appropriated for only one, I thought if we appropriated for three in the last bill it would make the average good for two. I am still of the same opinion about the necessity of keeping our naval efficiency up to the standard which had been agreed upon, I thought, as a policy of Congress several years ago.

I shall not make any motion this morning in relation to this concurrent resolution or in relation to the committee, but shall simply express the hope that the committee will call up this matter and consider it. A majority of the committee is in town, and the Senate is not especially busy at this time about other matters. I make this statement now in order that the matter may be considered at a time when there is no acute foreign question pending before the country and when the inquiry can not be thought by anybody to have any particular drift or slant or reflection upon any foreign power or application to any particular nation. I think this is a proper time to consider this question, which I deem very important, indeed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions? If not, morning business is closed.

BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to recur for a moment to the subject of the earlier discussion of this session—the subject which was presented by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] by the presentation of a telegram from a member of the bankers' convention now being held in the city of Boston.

I am one of those who believe that the time of the Committee on Banking and Currency has not been wasted in giving to this all-important subject full opportunity for hearings. My experience—and I do not think it differs from that of the average man—is that there is more difference of opinion, and of arbitrary opinion, among men upon the subject of banking, currency, and coinage than any other subject of public importance, and each man who has an opinion is generally very tenacious of its soundness. As a consequence it is quite natural that these hearings should be extended and should involve the statements of all sorts and conditions of men. I believe that out of it much good will come, because while the people of this Nation, almost without exception, believe that legislation of this character is demanded by existing conditions, they are also very naturally and very properly solicitous as to the nature and ultimate scope of any measure that may be adopted.

I believe, too, that the great mass of bankers in this country are honest, conscientious, capable, upright, and patriotic citizens. I have no doubt that they are quite as anxious to secure the enactment of a proper measure as we are or as any other class of citizens are. At the same time we must recognize the fact that banking in this country has become greatly concentrated, and therefore subject very largely to the domination of the great banking institutions at the great centers of trade and commerce, and that this domination is so extensive and so complete as very largely to mold the expression of official sentiment and course of action taken by this body of gentlemen as a class when speaking through their conventions and conferences.

Those who are in power, those who are in control of the credits of the country, are also anxious for banking legislation, provided that legislation can be made to accord with their sentiments and policies. Unless it is so in accord, they will have none of it. Hence these conventions and conferences which are being held all over the country by men engaged in the business of banking, and that common consensus of expression of disapproval of the bill which reaches the committee and the country through the press, all designed in my judgment, either to postpone the ultimate passage or enactment of a banking measure at the special session, if not indefinitely, or to secure such a measure as will address itself to the interests, the purposes, and the ambitions of the few overshadowing institutions and individuals who are at the head of financial affairs in this country.

There is nothing new in that attitude of the banking world. There is nothing remarkable about it, except that in these days its scope, and its power, and its influence are much more extensive and far-reaching than at any previous time in the Nation's history.

I believe that a part of the propaganda having for its purpose the framing and enactment of a measure satisfactory to the great financiers of the country finds expression in efforts to antagonize the President of the United States with the Democratic majority in the Senate, and also to antagonize the President with the Republican minority; in other words, to create dissension, and through dissension to prevent the community of work which is essential for the enactment of a great national measure like this.

Yesterday morning on reading in the Washington press what purported to be certain statements of the President concerning this measure, and the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, I at once came to the conclusion I have just stated, knowing that it was impossible that such sentiments could either have been entertained or expressed by the head of the Nation, and that there was some sinister purpose behind it, a purpose to create through dissension, through misunderstanding, which might serve to lead this bill into the channels of disaster. I believe this is going to continue, unless it is promptly exposed and the attention of the country riveted upon it; and I believe that if continued it may, to some extent, consummate the purpose for which it is designed. To speak plainly, I think it is part of a conspiracy to defeat any financial legislation whatever, except such as can be dictated by the interests which, as shown by the report of the Pujo committee, have for a long time controlled and directed the credits of this country through the centralization of the financial affairs of the Nation in the hands of a few men.

Some time ago, Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency gave public utterance to his views concerning the character of this bill, and some of the criticisms that had been made against it, which brought forth much comment, and among others this statement from Mr. Vanderlip, the president of the National City Bank of New York, which claims to be, and probably is, the greatest of the financial institutions in this country. He says:

We are not leading in any movement to kill the currency bill, but I consider any move for the purpose of bettering legislation a wise and patriotic thing. It is all moonshine about a propaganda to defeat the bill. I want to see financial legislation effected. This bill has some correct principles, but it must be changed according to the lines suggested at Chicago.

Mr. Vanderlip's statement has all the arrogance of the Aldrich régime. It takes us back to a very short time ago, when men in high position in the financial centers of this country could speak with authority and with the voice of command. This gentleman says that this bill must be changed according to the lines suggested at Chicago. In other words, the American people, through their representatives in Congress, must act according to the direction of a bankers' convention in the city of Chicago.

Mr. REED. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I might say to the Senator that while I have received some letters like that, I have also received a great many letters saying that this bill must be passed just as it came from the House, and that it must be passed immediately. Now, I do not believe that the Senator from Colorado, with his learning and experience and ability, or any other Senator, ought to allow the extreme statements made by any man or by any class of men to in the slightest degree affect our judgment or indicate our course. We ought to proceed in this matter as we would with any other grave and important question—carefully, patiently, and with that degree of expedition which is possible under the circumstances.

I believe the less we have of agitation until the bill is ready to report, and then when it is reported the more nearly we approach it in a judicial frame of mind, having in mind that the welfare of the country is largely concerned, the more nearly we will accomplish a good result.

If the Senator will pardon me, for I am trespassing upon his time, I want to say this before I go: So far as I am concerned, I hope that this bill will receive the careful, unbiased thought and attention of the Members who sit upon the other side of the Chamber, and I hope it will be taken up as a great national question and not as a partisan question.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has anticipated to some extent what I intended to say, and has said it so much better than I can that I shall not attempt to refer to that phase of the subject further than to say that I believe every member of the Committee on Banking and Currency has regarded and will continue to regard this measure as one of great national importance, every provision of which must appeal to their judgment and should receive their candid criticism. I believe that each member of the committee is striving to the best of his ability, notwithstanding the influences to which I have referred, to work out some measure that will receive the support of a majority of Congress and be acceptable to the Nation.

I want to say further, Mr. President, that in common with others I find much in the House bill to criticize and reject. Whether upon further information my views will change as to some of its provisions I do not know. I have endeavored, as far as possible, to look at this great question from the standpoint suggested by the Senator from Missouri. I believe that every Member of this body on both sides of this aisle has been actuated by the same purpose and the same motive. Nothing would give me greater concern, I might say alarm, than that this bill should assume or be required to assume a partisan aspect, and I think it will assume no such aspect unless it becomes absolutely necessary to prevent the failure of all financial legislation.

Mr. President, I am aware of the fact that others have been equally imperative in their demands that this bill must pass as have been some in their demands that certain changes shall be made. But it makes all the difference in the world, Mr. President, who speaks and by what authority, and when we find a great body of influential gentlemen, having great interests at stake, announcing a certain policy with reference to financial legislation, followed by the assertion of a man who sits higher than all in authority, that a bill must be changed according to certain lines laid down by his associates, I think it is not only a subject of proper criticism upon the floor of this Chamber but a decided indication of the trend which financial opposition is taking to this measure.

I am confirmed, Mr. President, in that conclusion by an occurrence in the city of Boston yesterday, where the American Bankers' Association is holding its session. That association, as I stated, is composed of men of the highest character and standing, men just as patriotic and just as sincere in their desire to subserve the welfare of this country as am I. But it is the statements which are made, the influence which governs, that must determine our criticism of what occurs. After a practically unanimous vote had been taken condemning this measure as socialistic in its nature, Mr. McRae attempted to be heard in protest against the resolution. It was almost impossible for him to obtain a hearing.

I am a banker myself—

He said—I read from the report of yesterday's proceedings—but I am unwilling to sanction the language of Chairman Hepburn, of the currency commission, when he charged the President and Congress of this Republic with being a pack of socialists.

Mr. President, no movement of any sort or character opposed to the interests or the views of a powerful class of people in this country can escape the charge of socialism, if by the application of that epithet it can be brought into disrepute.

The word "socialism," Mr. President, has no terrors for me. I hold no brief for the socialistic movement nor am I in any wise identified with that propaganda. But if I were compelled to choose between socialism, as I understand it, and the domination of the banking interests of the great interests of this country I would prefer socialism; and I say that deliberately, for I do not understand that that word which bears a cast of reproach by constant repetition and by the custom of attaching it to everything that relates to the varied movements of the industrial and social world deserves the stigma popular opinion seems to take for granted as one of its attributes. Socialism has taught us many things in this country; it has brought about many changes for the better; and as all movements have their extremes, so between the two extremes lie much that is good, that is desirable, that is plausible, and that is frequently necessary. If this bill be socialistic, then so be it; but if, nevertheless, it embodies something desired by the people, should it therefore be condemned by the application of a term generally applied to everything repellant to the tastes, the judgment, and the interests of those who until recently have dominated the political and industrial and economic world? Let us proceed, Mr. President:

Do not sidestep this issue—

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. One of the arguments the socialists advance is that this assembling or congregating of the different powers and business is a step in the direction of socialism. They say that the gathering of our great industries in the United States into a few corporations and gathering of commerce into three or four corporations and the assembling of them and congregating them is just a step in the direction of socialism. It might be that the bankers had in view that phase of it, because it will be found, of course, that this is an assembling of the banking power in the hands of a few men—some seven men. It is socialistic in the sense that it gathers up and assembles the banking powers. I presume that is what the bankers had reference to. The wisdom of the matter I do not now discuss, but it is just as socialistic to assemble the banking powers and turn them over to the Government as it would be the railroads.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I quite agree that the argument on which is based the conclusion that these large combinations are socialistic in their character is sound. Our school system is socialistic. The most socialistic law on the statutes of the United States is the tariff law. I disagree with the conclusion of the Senator from Idaho as to what the Boston conference meant, for it was not the thing itself to which this epithet was applied but to those who are behind it. It was declared "that the President and the Congress are a pack of socialists."

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am interested in that. Did anyone say that the President and Congress were a pack of socialists?

Mr. THOMAS. I read again—

Mr. CUMMINS. And if so, who said it?

Mr. THOMAS. I read again. Mr. McRae, formerly a Member of Congress from the State of Arkansas and a banker, got up to defend President Wilson and Congress. I read from the World of to-day:

When Mr. McRae got up to defend President Wilson and Congress the 2,400 bankers began to howl at him.

"No! No! Question! Question!" they shouted. Mr. McRae demanded a hearing. "I am a banker myself," he said, "but I am unwilling to sanction the language of Chairman Hepburn of the currency commission when he charged the President and Congress of this Republic with being a pack of socialists."

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely, Mr. President; but that is the statement of the gentleman who was then on his feet. That is not the statement of the chairman of the association or committee, and to whom reference is there made. I think in the same paper will be found what Mr. Hepburn said with regard to the matter. He did not say that the President and Congress were a pack of socialists, although I am not using that word in any disparaging sense.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

Mr. CUMMINS. I think a man can be called a much worse thing than to be called a socialist. But Mr. Hepburn said nothing of the kind, as I read the paper. He said that the bill was socialistic in its character, and in my own opinion you can not praise a thing more than to say that it is socialistic, if it is socialistic in the right way.

I think the Senator from Colorado is doing Mr. Hepburn a very great injustice in accepting the characterization of the man from Arkansas instead of going to the language that Mr. Hepburn actually used.

Mr. THOMAS. If I am using language which Mr. Hepburn did not use, I am unconsciously doing him an injustice. I, of course, speaking from long experience, can say without reservation that the newspapers of the country are not always entirely reliable, and it may be that this report and this statement are incorrect and do not properly represent Mr. Hepburn as he should be represented.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS. If that is so, I wish to withdraw every criticism based upon Mr. McRae's assertion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not questioning the accuracy of the report. Undoubtedly this gentleman from Arkansas did say, at least I have no reason to doubt that he did say, what the Senator from Colorado has read.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand the Senator's position perfectly; that Mr. Hepburn did not say it.

Mr. CUMMINS. That Mr. Hepburn did not say what was there attributed to him, but did say that this bill in certain features was socialistic, and I think the Senator from Colorado will agree with me that in certain things it is socialistic, and every act of Congress ought to be somewhat socialistic.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not object to it because it is socialistic. Not at all. What I was criticizing was that the word was used as an epithet of reproach and hostility not only against the bill but against the governing body, something that characterized it as vicious and which should cause it to be rejected by the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree with the Senator from Colorado. If Mr. Hepburn had risen and said that the President and Congress are a pack of socialists, it would have been obvious that he was using those words with some sinister meaning, but he did not say anything such as is reported in the newspapers.

Mr. THOMAS. I will accept the Senator's word for that, as he has read the full report.

Mr. CUMMINS. He did not characterize them at all. He characterized this bill as one socialistic in its nature. I think we ought to be more and more careful with regard to attributing to men sentiments that they do not hold and utterances which they have never put out.

Mr. THOMAS. I quite agree with the Senator as to that and accept his assurance that Mr. Hepburn did not use the language attributed to him.

Mr. CUMMINS. We have an instance this morning. The President of the United States has been injured by just that practice.

Mr. THOMAS. Before I proceed with what I was going to say, let me further reply to the Senator from Iowa. While he may have done so, and the report does not appear in the daily press, yet I think that Mr. Hepburn should either have denied or challenged the accuracy of the statement at the time, or this bankers' convention should have given Mr. McRae an opportunity to be heard. The charge of Mr. McRae was a serious one, and I think made the same impression upon the minds of others that it made upon me. But having accepted the authority of the Senator from Iowa, I fully acquit Mr. Hepburn of any improper criticism of the Congress and the President. But, Mr. President, my principal object in referring to this report was to emphasize what afterwards occurred between Mr. McRae and the convention. Mr. McRae continued:

"Don't sidestep this issue," he went on. "The question really at stake in the currency bill is this: 'Shall the bankers of the United States control the currency of the country or shall the Government of the United States control it?'"

"We should! We should!" came in a chorus from the bankers.

There is the milk in the coconut. Shall the Government of the United States control the currency of the people or shall the bankers of the country control it? The issue is clear, well defined, and well understood; and it is fortunate that in a moment of excitement that issue was admitted so enthusiastically and so forcibly by the American Bankers' Association in convention assembled in the city of Boston.

This bill could pass to-morrow, if it were here, without reference to those criticisms that have been made of its other features, if Congress would only surrender to the banking interests of the country the power of note issue. It is needless to say that that will not be done by this Congress, and I trust in God the day will never come when the Government of the United States shall surrender to private hands the most stupendous power in its possession. A poet once said:

Let me write the songs of a nation, and I care not who writes the laws.

The bankers can well say:

Let us have the power of currency control over this country, and we care not who writes its laws.

That is the issue, Mr. President; and it is because of that issue that the incidents have occurred which inspired the discussion of this morning. There are some financial powers centered in the great city of New York that have always placed their interests above those of the Nation and above those of the people of the Nation. Those are the interests which control the currency, and through the currency the credit of the country, for with the control of the one, the other can be manipulated, and, through the agency of the stock exchange, made the most effective of all modern instruments for the transference of the property and wealth of the many to the few. This is no new manifestation; it is as old as the age of the power itself.

Mr. President, in this connection it may be interesting to read an extract from the Report on the Finances, of November 2, 1864, signed by Hugh McCulloch, Comptroller of the Currency, and William Pitt Fessenden, then Secretary of the Treasury. The report says:

Hostility to the Government has been as decidedly manifested in the effort that has been made in the commercial metropolis of the Nation to depreciate the currency as it has been by the enemy in the field; and, unfortunately, the effort of sympathizers with the rebellion and of agents of the rebellious States to prostrate the national credit has been strengthened and sustained by thousands in the loyal States whose political fidelity it might be ungracious to question. Immense interests have been at work all over the country and concentrated in New York to raise the price of coin, and splendid fortunes have been apparently made by their success. The loyal importer and manufacturer of the East, and the produce and provision merchant of the West have locked hands with the enemies of the Republic in a common effort, although for a different object, and sometimes have produced results which have created serious apprehensions that the Union might be lost for want of means to prosecute the war, or rather on account of the excessive and unnecessary costliness of the war. The Government in its struggles with a gigantic rebellion has not only been contending with armed rebels in the field, but with unarmed rebels in the loyal States, backed by an immense interest in the hands of loyal citizens.

Gold has been a favorite article to gamble in. It has been forced up and down by those tricks and devices that are so well understood at the stock board. The reverses of our arms have been used by the operators for an "advance" to send it up and our military successes have been turned to the advantage of those who were interested in a "decline." When the banks and the Government suspended specie payments and a new standard of value was created in the legal tenders, gold and value, whose legal value had been fixed by the same authority, became an article of traffic, subject to the influences that have control of the market; and yet, unfortunately, everything necessary for use or consumption was made to follow their upward tendency, as if they were still the proper and only regulator of prices.

The effect of all this has been not to break down the credit of the Government, but to increase enormously the cost of the war and the expense of living; for however small may have been the connection between the price of coin and our domestic products, every rise of gold, no matter by what means effected, has been used as a pretext by holders and speculators for an advance of prices, to the great injury of the Government and the sorrow of a large portion of the people. It is unquestionably true that the abundance of money has facilitated the operation against the credit of the Government and that a more stringent market would have tended to check and restrain them, but it is a mistaken notion that the high price of coin is an evidence of an overissue of currency or of its depreciation. If it were generally believed that the war would be ended by the 1st of January, gold would fall before that time to 25 per cent premium, if not lower, although the paper money in circulation might in the meantime be largely increased. (From Report on the Finances, November 2, 1864, by Hugh McCulloch, Comptroller of the Currency, and W. P. Fessenden, Secretary of the Treasury.)

At that time, Mr. President, when the Nation was engaged in a struggle for its life the same interests I now criticize were utilizing the then existing conditions for the purpose of manipulating the exchanges and credits and gold of the country to their profit. Those interests, Mr. President, have always been of a sinister and disloyal character. The bonds of this country issued during the war and made necessary for the preservation of the Union were made payable in lawful money, but by manipulation they were afterwards made payable in coin and yet afterwards in gold, each successive step increasing their value and the value of the money in the hands of the men who owned and controlled these securities. Finally the last great step of all was taken when one half of the metallic money of the country was stricken down, disgraced, and demonetized, and the other half made twice as valuable as it was before. These successive steps all led and pointed to the final one—"Give us control of the issue of the paper currency of the Nation and then our power and our opportunities for absorbing the rest of the wealth of the country will have no limitation."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I want to see a good banking bill enacted, and I want to see a bill enacted that is drafted in and for the interest and welfare of the great mass of the people of the country. The very fact that these great financial powers are arrayed against this bill is, to my mind, the very strongest argument that can be advanced to-day in favor of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I was unaware of the fact that he sought recognition. I certainly yield to him.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in reading the report of the proceedings before the committee and trying to keep somewhat in touch with the literature of the day upon this subject I do not recall but one leading banker in New York who has expressed decided objection to the bill in its fundamental provisions.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, that is not surprising.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. Vanderlip's testimony yesterday seemed to disclose that that class of bankers have really no objection to the bill at all, such as might be considered fundamental objections. In fact, there is one feature of the bill which has greatly interested me as probably fundamentally objectionable which they seem to approve.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think a number of the eastern bankers have been before the committee. I recall distinctly being present once or twice when some of them were being heard. I know there are a great many bankers right in the city of New York who want to see this bill or something like it enacted. I started out by saying that the great mass of the bankers, I thought, were friendly to the general principles of this measure, and I thoroughly believe they are. But why,

Mr. President, should the men standing at the head of the financial world assume a position of outspoken opposition when, through their control of the banking world, they can secure expressions through conventions and conferences and associations which are assumed more nearly to represent the spontaneous sentiment of the banking world?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know what the situation is elsewhere, but in my State the opposition comes from the small bank, the bank in the town of 2,500 people and under. I should like to know, Mr. President, what the Senator from Colorado deems to be the "general principles" of this bill. He says that he thinks the smaller banks generally are in favor of the "general principles" of the bill. I should like to know what the "general principles" of the bill are, because there are many things in the bill which I heartily favor, and I do not like to hear it said here without dispute that the opposition to the bill comes from the organized selfishness of big bankers. That is not true in my State at all, and if the Senator from Colorado will develop the "general principles" of this bill we may be able to reach a conclusion much more readily.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it is not my intention to go into a discussion of the merits of the bill now. I will say, however, in answer to the Senator's question, that what I regard as the principal features of the bill—speaking, of course, very generally—are the direct issue of currency by the Government upon approved securities, the prevention of the congestion of the loose money of the country and of the greater portion of the reserves in the great centers of the country, where they are used, very naturally and perhaps necessarily, for the promotion of speculation, but which deprive outlying sections of the use of money properly belonging to them. Another general feature of the bill, which more bankers disapprove of than any other, is Government control of the reserves and of currency issues through a board appointed by the President and also consisting, ex officio, of two members of the Cabinet and the Comptroller of the Currency. I also think, Mr. President, that another feature of the bill, which is decidedly commendable in connection with those that I have mentioned generally, consists in the power that is proposed to be given to the Federal reserve board to shift the assets or the reserves of the reserve banks from one to the other as the exigencies of business or the requirements of the country may make necessary or expedient; and, above all, the taking away from a few hands of the power to control and direct the credit of the country.

CONTRIBUTIONS FOR CAMPAIGN PURPOSES.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, in view of the passage of the tariff bill, I think it is obvious to all, without impugning the motives of anyone, that between now and the next general election every special election for a Representative in Congress that will be held to fill a vacancy will invite the utmost effort of all who are directly or indirectly interested in the result of such election, because of the supposed bearing that that election may have upon the verdict of the people on the tariff bill.

On the 11th of September I had the honor to report from the Committee on Privileges and Elections a bill to limit the use of campaign funds in presidential and national elections, the purpose of the bill being to prevent money being sent from one State to another to be used in the election of President, Vice President, Senators, or Representatives. Without any reflection upon anyone, but simply recognizing the inherent weakness of humanity, it is our duty, so far as we can, to remove temptation, and it seems to me that it is important that this bill should be passed at an early date. This morning I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Order of Business 93, being the bill (S. 192) to limit the use of campaign funds in presidential and national elections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object.

Mr. CLAPP. Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be taken up and voted on, with all amendments pending or to be offered, at the close of morning business at the next legislative session of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I will not object to the consideration of the bill, but I do object to the limitation of time as to voting upon it.

Mr. CLAPP. I will not place any limitation, but I will ask that the bill be taken up for consideration at the next legislative session at the close of morning business.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection to that, Mr. President, but I do object to its being taken up to-day, because the unfinished business will come up at 2 o'clock, and there are only 20 minutes left.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well; I understand there is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota that at the close of morning business at the next legislative session of the Senate, Senate bill No. 192 shall be taken up for consideration by the Senate? Is the request of the Senator from Minnesota that it should be made the unfinished business until disposed of?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes; until finished.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, there is a matter of unfinished business on the calendar, and I do not see how we can have two unfinished businesses at the same time.

Mr. CLAPP. We can dispose of this in a very short time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If it is disposed of before we reach the unfinished business it will be disposed of; but if it is not it could not become the unfinished business with the present unfinished business pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let us try to get an accurate statement of the unanimous-consent agreement asked by the Senator from Minnesota. As the Chair understands, it is that at the conclusion of morning business at the next legislative session Senate bill 192 shall be taken up and considered by the Senate, and that it shall then be made the unfinished business after Senate bill 136.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object to that.

Mr. CLAPP. Is there any objection to unanimous consent that we shall proceed to the consideration of the bill at the close of morning business at the next legislative session of the Senate?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Not by me.

Mr. CLAPP. I make that request.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not want to object to the Senator's motion; but at the last session the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] obtained unanimous consent to make Senate bill 136 the unfinished business of the Senate. He is here now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This does not interfere with that. The request is to take up Senate bill 192 at the conclusion of the routine morning business. The unfinished business comes up at the close of the morning hour. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement asked for by the Senator from Minnesota? The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock meridian.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I assume that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, yes; it is. It is a motion to fix the time to which the Senate shall adjourn.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am advised that it is debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it is debatable.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish to say a word or two in reference to it, then.

Mr. KERN. The rules declare that such a motion is not debatable.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understand the Chair has ruled that it is debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair finds, upon examining the rules, that it is not debatable.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move to amend the motion by providing that when the Senate adjourns to-day it shall adjourn to meet to-morrow at 12 o'clock; and I should like to say a word about it. I suppose I may say it by unanimous consent, even though the motion is not debatable.

I am one of the Senators on this side of the Chamber who believes that the financial and currency bill should be disposed of at this session, or just as soon as it possibly can be done, having due regard to fair consideration and debate. I thought that after we had passed a tariff bill it might be well to take a month's recess to give the Committee on Banking and Currency an opportunity to hear whatever was to be said upon the bill and to prepare a report upon it, and that then we ought to come together about the 1st of November and take it up and consider it continuously until it should be disposed of.

That, however, did not meet the approval of a majority of the Senate, and it is assumed that we must remain in session. If we are to remain in session I think we ought to do business, and do it with reasonable continuity. There are a great many very important bills before the committees, and there are a great many important bills on the calendar. We either ought to take a recess or an adjournment until we are ready to consider the currency bill, or we ought to proceed to do the business of the Senate, not only that which is before the Senate on the calendar but that which is before the committees upon reference.

I do not believe it is fair to keep us here with the understanding that we are to do nothing; that we are to meet on Monday and adjourn until Thursday, and to meet on Thursday and adjourn until Monday again. So far as I can effect it, I shall do whatever is in my power either to bring about a recess until the currency bill can be brought before the Senate—and I do not propose that now; I think the time really has passed for that—or to have the committees of the Senate meet and dispose of the bills before them, and have the Senate meet regularly and take up and consider and pass or reject the bills that are on the calendar and that will be on the calendar.

Mr. KERN. If the Senator will allow me to make a suggestion, the fact must be considered that at this time there is not a quorum in the city. There probably will be a quorum here on Monday, because of the required action on the conference report on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. I think at that time I will join the Senator in his proposition to proceed to work; but at this time there is no use in going through the idle ceremony of meeting here when there is not a quorum in attendance.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Indiana may be mistaken about that. I rather think there is a quorum of Senators in the city.

Mr. KERN. There is not a quorum either of the Senate or of any committee of the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. If there is not, it is because Senators generally understand that we are not going to do anything until the Committee on Banking and Currency reports, or at least not anything of importance. If there is a quorum here, they can be easily summoned.

I am not so much protesting against an adjournment until next Monday, but I am protesting against a policy of meeting on Monday and adjourning until Thursday and continuing that until the Banking and Currency Committee shall make its report. I do not believe the committee will make its report before the middle of November, and it may be even later than that. If the committee is to continue its hearings until the 25th of October, and then take up this very important and very comprehensive subject for its own consideration, we have no reason to expect a report of the committee before the middle of November.

We must decide whether we shall continue here and do the business that is before us or whether we shall adjourn or take a recess until the time the committee is ready to report. I am quite willing to continue here. I think there is enough for us to do, and that we can do it to the great advantage of the next session, which will be congested, in view of the fact that we have done nothing at this session save consider the tariff and the currency.

I withdraw my proposed amendment and yield to the Senator from Indiana in his desire to adjourn until next Monday. I have taken this opportunity, however, to say that at that time I shall hope to press this view of mine that we should go ahead in the regular way and do the business we are here to do, if we are to remain in session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

THE TARIFF—GENERAL BUSINESS CONDITIONS.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, the morning hour has been occupied almost entirely with matters referring to finance and general conditions in the country. I have in my hand a circular of a very reassuring character, issued monthly by the oldest bank in the State of New Jersey, organized in 1804. I desire that the Secretary may read the portion which refers to the general business outlook. This circular comes from a conservative bank, and sets at naught the general story of what we were told to anticipate in October. I ask that the Secretary may read the first page, going over to the other side, and I should like to have it published in the Record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request that the Secretary shall read as indicated?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Reserving the right to object, what is the bearing of this circular?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It bears on the general financial conditions of the country and the general business outlook. It is dated in October.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I know the date; but, I mean, does it refer to currency legislation or to tariff legislation?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It refers to tariff legislation. It has no reference at all to banking.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I had hoped we had finished with the tariff for this session.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. We have; but the effects of the tariff are coming afterwards.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They will be evidenced, I think, by the result.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Then I will ask that the circular may be printed without reading.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not object to either the printing or the reading. I simply desired to be informed as to what it was. If it is rosy, I should like to hear it.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is rosy; there is no doubt about that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Shall the matter be read, or not?

Mr. BACON. I hope it will be printed without being read.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is satisfactory to me to have it printed without being read. If the Senator from Connecticut desires something rosy, however, I will state to him that it is quite rosy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the matter will be printed in the Record.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NATIONAL NEWARK BANKING CO.,
Newark, N. J., October, 1913.

It is remarkable that the outlook for general business should be so good in view of the fact that a radical change is about to take place in the tariff; that very important banking legislation is pending; that there is a world-wide condition of dear capital, and that prices are so high. But it is true that most manufacturers believe themselves able to arrange their business to meet the tariff changes and are anticipating a heavy business in the near future. So much was said early in the year about the necessity of preparing for an acute crisis in the fall that almost all business men began to curtail and strengthen their position, the result being that they are now able to adjust their business to the present condition. This provision undoubtedly averted a serious strain.

The tariff uncertainty will soon be over, the crop conditions on the whole are not bad, the general political situation is brighter, especially in regard to the troubles in Mexico; the liquid money market, while not easy, is more nearly normal, and a more optimistic feeling prevails. There is as yet no snap to business, but the general feeling is that it is coming. The number of idle freight cars September 15 was 40,150 as against 58,306 on September 1, and an average for five years at this time of 44,400. The steel business seems to be holding up, especially in the matter of exports, and the demand for copper is increasing.

It is interesting to note the statistics of the foreign trade in the United States during August as recently made public by the Department of Commerce, which show that although imports for that month fell off when compared with figures for the same month last year exports increased to such an extent that they surpassed figures of any other August on record. Imports for the month totaled $137,704,195, while exports aggregated $187,812,636. The figures for the same month last year were $154,756,770 and $167,844,871. For the eight months ending with August imports to this country were valued at $1,156,575,670; its exports amounted to $1,515,085,733.

Department and other local stores report an excellent trade during September, and they are placing generous orders in the belief that the fall and winter business will reach above the normal in demand. Close collections is the order of the day among local business houses, and careful consideration is given in the opening of new accounts.

Manufacturers are for the most part encouraged over the increased number of orders, and some are working to full capacity. The importance of Newark's manufacturing interests is evident when it is considered that there are 252 distinct lines of industry here, 50 lines each turning out values of from one to thirty million dollars a year, and with the world as their market. The local manufacturing jewelers report that the demand for their products is very good, and it would not be at all surprising if they had the largest business in several years. This fact is an excellent indication of general good conditions. An optimistic frame of mind is also to be found in the leather trade. Among manufacturers as a whole a healthy increase of orders is noticeable, and this will become more pronounced with cooler weather.

RECORDS OF IMPEACHMENT TRIALS.

Mr. BACON. I offer a Senate resolution for which I ask present consideration. Before the request is put I wish to say a word. I should like to have the resolution read.

The resolution (S. Res. 190) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to examine and report to the Senate the measures necessary to gather and place in proper form the complete record of each impeachment trial which has been had by and before the Senate of the United States, with the view to the publication of the same in a suitable and uniform series of volumes; and to make such other recommendation in regard thereto as may be deemed proper by the committee.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I wish to say that, so far as the later impeachment trials are concerned, there is no particular difficulty, because they were quite fully reported and gathered in volumes. All of the later ones, since the impeachment of President Johnson, are in volumes. The records of the earlier impeachment trials, however, have never been placed in anything like complete volumes showing what occurred. Some of them are in little pamphlets, mere synopses of what occurred. The proceedings of the trials are to be found in the records of Congress and can be easily gathered together and placed in such form that they may be published uniformly, perhaps, with those which have already been published as the later volumes.

I think it really important that this shall be done, as these are records of most important trials. It has been said that the Impeachment Court is the highest court known to our law; and certainly the records of that court, the records of these trials, are entitled to as careful preservation as the records of our other courts.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I did not quite understand the resolution offered by the Senator from Georgia. My attention was diverted. Does the Senator propose to have printed, and so far as may be necessary reprinted, the volumes of all the impeachment trials that have been had?

Mr. BACON. The resolution simply directs the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the matter to see what is necessary. It may be that the committee will find that the volumes of the later trials are now sufficiently printed; that all that will be necessary will be to have the earlier volumes printed in similar form, and that the later ones will not have to be reprinted. The records of the earlier trials, however, have never been collected together in volumes which adequately record what occurred.

It is true, I repeat, as to all the later trials—those which have occurred since the Civil War—that the records are quite complete, and the volumes are possibly in sufficiently good form not to have to be reprinted; but the earlier reports have never been properly printed. It may be that the Judiciary Committee will find it is only necessary to print the earlier ones, making them of uniform size and style with the publications already made of the later impeachment trials.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I quite agree with the position of the Senator from Georgia about that. The earlier trials are not recorded in any accessible form, as I discovered when I undertook to make some study of the subject.

Mr. BACON. I hope it may be found that it will not be necessary to reprint any of the later ones.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it very important that they should be printed, and I quite agree with the purpose of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the resolution also calls for a recommendation from the committee with reference to the procedure in impeachment trials?

Mr. BACON. No; it does not. It has no reference whatever to anything except gathering together these records and having them printed in proper form.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, observing that the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections is about to leave the Chamber, I should like before he goes to ask him a question in regard to the bill (S. 2860) which was referred to the committee a short time ago, providing as an emergency measure a method of conducting elections of Senators under the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution. I should like to ask if the Senator can give me any information as to the present status of that measure and the prospect of its being reported out of the committee. The matter is one in which a great many States are interested, and a great many people are interested in some early disposition of the question.

My information is that the committee had referred the measure to a subcommittee, with instructions to report it out. Whether it has agreed upon the final form or not I do not know, but my purpose is to call attention to it and to the importance of some action being taken upon it, and to get some information, if possible, from the chairman of the committee as to the present status of the bill.

Mr. KERN. The measure was referred to a subcommittee. The subcommittee reported a substitute to the full committee at its last meeting, and I think typewritten copies of the substitute have been furnished the members of the committee. The matter doubtless will be disposed of at the next meeting of the committee and reported within a short time thereafter.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I trust that will be done, so we can get the bill before the Senate. I thank the Senator for the information.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. May I ask the chairman of the committee if he expects to have a meeting of the committee soon?

Mr. KERN. Within the next week or two.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is a subject that ought to be dealt with, I think, with some promptness. The matter has been pending here for a considerable time. The subcommittee has considered the proposed bill and has agreed upon a substitute, I understand. I think there would be no difficulty in having it reported, as I understand the attitude of mind of the various members of the committee.

I take the liberty of suggesting to the chairman of the committee that it would be well if a meeting of that committee could be called very soon, so that we could take up the subject and dispose of it.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 136.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto, and to promote safety at sea.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to press the bill for consideration at to-day's session. After I make a request and ask to have some printing done, I will ask to have it temporarily laid aside.

Before that, however, Mr. President, I should like to say that I do not press the bill for consideration to-day because I am advised that some members of the committee, among others the chairman of the committee, are absent from the city and that many of them are not advised that Senate bill 136 has been made the unfinished business. I wish to give an opportunity for the members of the committee and all Members of the Senate who are interested in this legislation, and who desire to be present, to be here when it is considered.

I understand that the Senate has already agreed that when it adjourns to-day it will meet on Monday.

Mr. KERN. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. To-day is Thursday. I think perhaps if the notice were given to-day that the bill would be taken up next Monday it would give opportunity for Senators who are absent to be here.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin, as I said personally to him on the floor, that when this bill was reported by the committee it was understood by some members of the committee that it was not to be considered at this session. I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that some legislation is very much needed, and I join with him in his desire that the matter shall be pressed at the earliest possible moment. I think, however, that next Monday would hardly give the Senators who are interested in the measure time to return. One of them I know has been here since the convening of Congress last year and he has a little private business at home that he is now attending to. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that it might be better to fix the time, say, next Wednesday.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I had some discussion personally with members of the committee who were present on the floor during the session this morning—the Senator from Mississippi, among others—and also with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who reported the bill and who gave me information that makes just a slight correction in the statement of the Senator from Mississippi as to the understanding of the committee. I see the Senator from Florida is now on the floor. I was about to say that I understood from the Senator from Florida that the understanding when the bill was reported from the committee was that, so far as the wishes or views of the members of the committee were concerned, they preferred that the bill should not be considered at this session, but that the question of consideration was a matter which the Senate would have to determine. Do I state that correctly, I inquire of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is quite correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am certainly desirous that all Senators who would care to participate in the discussion should have the opportunity to be present. Perhaps we might right at this time agree that the bill should be taken up on Wednesday of next week and its consideration continued from day to day until, say, Saturday of next week at 4 o'clock, when we might vote upon it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the purpose of my suggestion to the Senator from Wisconsin was that especially two Senators, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], might be permitted to finish up their private affairs at their homes and be here by that time, because I know that they are very anxious to be present when the bill is considered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My attention was diverted just for the moment. Did I understand the Senator to say he thought that would give them an opportunity to be here?

Mr. VARDAMAN. I would think so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That would give them an entire week. Then I will make the request in this form:

I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, the 15th of October, 1913, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, and so forth, and that not later than Saturday, the 18th of October, at 4 o'clock on that day—

Mr. WILLIAMS. The calendar day.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that calendar day the Senate will proceed without further debate to vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill, through its regular parliamentary stages, to its final disposition.

Mr. LEA. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he would change those dates to Thursday, the 16th, and Monday, the 20th, for the reason that a committee of which I am a member has an engagement that will take us out of town on Saturday, and perhaps 11 Members of the Senate will be absent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will make that substitution of those dates.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the portion of the agreement that provides as to proceeding to the consideration of the bill immediately after the morning business on any day, but I know at least one and, I think, other Senators are absent who want to be heard upon the bill extensively. I do not think that unanimous consent for the termination of debate upon the bill ought to be given now in their absence. I would not object myself, and I am not making this objection for myself, but simply speak from what has been said to me. I am quite confident that they desire to be here, and they are away. I do not know what their engagements are and whether they can return in time.

I assure the Senator from Wisconsin I am not making any captious objection to the agreement at all; but I wish he would defer his request for unanimous consent until the next meeting of the Senate, so that if after those gentlemen have had notice that such a request was made, and those gentlemen care to do so, they themselves may appear and object, if they see cause. I will not object, because I have not been requested to do it, and I have no objection myself, but I simply state what I have in mind.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator thinks that the time would not be sufficient for a full discussion of the measure, and that we should vote upon it on Tuesday, or even upon Wednesday—I do not wish to curtail debate at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no doubt of that. I know the Senator wants to be perfectly fair about it, and I have no idea—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There are very urgent reasons why this legislation should be enacted. It goes to the safety of human life upon the sea, and we are in peril every hour of having repeated just such a disaster as shocked the entire world a little more than a year ago.

I do feel, Mr. President, that we ought to dispose of this legislation as soon as it can be done in an orderly and proper way.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no doubt of that myself, and I have no disposition to thwart it in any way. I am uninformed as to the provisions of the bill; as far as I am concerned, I do not expect to take part in the discussion of it; but I hope to learn the merits of it from the debate; and, of course, I shall read the bill. I have not read it; I do not know what its merits are. I am utterly unable to form an opinion as to whether two days or three days or four days will be sufficient for the discussion that Senators will want to give it. I do not intend to object.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I simply leave it to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I was simply going to say that the Senator from Wisconsin has been here constantly during the summer. It has been a very long session and one of a very arduous character. A few of us have stayed here upon the theory that the Senate of the United States was the place where a Senator should be when the Senate is in session. The Senator from Connecticut has been very regular in his attendance here. Of course, Senators have to leave frequently upon urgent business.

It seems to me, in view of the fact that the Senator from Wisconsin has been here right along giving his time and attention constantly to the public business, when he states that he has a measure which is of prime importance, one which ought to be enacted at this session, particularly if the Senate has no other important business before it, time should to some extent be given according to his idea of what is necessary and proper under the circumstances.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. While I do not happen to have the honor to be a member of the committee which reported this bill, I must not let this occasion pass without saying here that I am extremely pleased that the bill has been reported. I have given the bill considerable study, not only during this session but during the last session. Before I came to Congress I gave a bill somewhat similar to this measure much study.

This bill has for its object the promotion of the safety of human life at sea. Do we need another Titanic disaster to convince us of our duty on this bill? How much longer must we delay when matters of such supreme importance are before us? The bill not only promotes the safety of passengers and the crew of the vessel at sea, but it also has for its beneficent purpose the abolition of a very odious form of involuntary servitude that has been carried on and imposed upon many helpless seamen.

We are here; Congress is supposed to be in session; and we ought in good faith to the people of the United States manfully to legislate on all subjects upon which we have jurisdiction or manfully adjourn.

I join with those who say we ought not to ping-pong about from Thursday to Monday, then from Monday to Thursday. Let us diligently take up subjects of legislation and treat them as they should be treated, or have the nerve and pluck to adjourn—I was about to say resign; yes, if we can not do our work we ought to resign.

I earnestly hope that no objection will be made, for this bill or some bill of this same general character should have been passed years ago.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, just a word. Some of the Senators, at least, who desire to be heard on this bill are absent. It has been generally understood by Senators on both sides that we were adjourning three days at a time for a report on the banking and currency bill. It has also been assumed by Senators who have gone away that if contested matters were to be brought up Senators would raise the question of a quorum. That question has not been raised to-day; but the Senator from Wisconsin asks for a unanimous-consent agreement to take up this bill and to vote upon it and all amendments on a certain day. The question of the particular day or the time, in my opinion, is of not so much importance. By count there are not to exceed 19 Senators upon the floor out of a body of 95, and the unanimous consent of these 19 binds all the other absent Senators.

I think that Senators who are away should be informed that this request has been made to-day and is going to be made again, so that they could be here to speak for themselves.

As I have said, I shall not object to this consent if the Senators think that it is fair to the absentees who are away on the kind of reliance or understanding I have indicated; but there is always more or less trouble about unanimous-consent agreements when Senators feel that they are cut off in what they want to say, although I agree they have no excuse for protesting against anything that is done while they are away, if it is done under the rules of the Senate. They should be here to protect themselves.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has indicated by his expression "ping-ponging" what has been happening here for some time, adjourning three days at a time because nobody wanted to press any contested matter. If that game is to be stopped—and it ought to be stopped, in my opinion—Senators will be here to protect their right.

Now, I have said all I care to say.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think the Senate ought to understand that it was the understanding in the Committee on Commerce that if this bill was reported it would not be considered until the regular session.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SHEPPARD. In just a minute. And the members of that committee who are absent went away with that understanding in their minds. It is for the Senate to say whether that understanding of the committee should be observed on the floor. I think it due to them that the statement ought to be made here.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Texas will remember that when the bill was reported and laid before the Senate in the presence of those Senators, members of the committee who had attended at that session of the committee which agreed to report it, and when it was attempted to have it go to the calendar, the proposition was made that it should go to the calendar with the understanding that it should not be taken up at this session, thereupon I interposed an objection and it went to the calendar, subject to be called up at any time. So that these Senators were advised then that the Senate had not followed their wishes in that regard.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I recall the occurrence to which the Senator alludes, and I thought it due to those Senators to make the statement to-day. I am in hearty sympathy, as the Senator knows, with this legislation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, when the bill was reported by the committee, as the RECORD shows, it was with the statement that in the judgment of the committee action should not be taken on the measure until the regular session next December. That was the judgment of the committee, and there are a number of members of the committee who are away and who are interested in this subject and want to be present when it is discussed.

I would suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that perhaps as far as he ought to go to-day, in justice to those absent Senators, is to state that on a certain day—on Monday, for instance—he would ask unanimous consent for a time to take up the bill and vote upon it. In other words, I scarcely feel that it would be fair to those members of the committee who are absent to-day to agree that on a certain date we would dispose of the bill. I think perhaps the Senator will be willing to give notice that on Monday next he will ask for that consent. That perhaps is as far as we ought to go in justice to those who are absent, believing that the matter would not be taken up at this session of Congress.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not think that any wrong can be done to any Senator if time enough is allowed for debate of the bill. It has waited consideration for 22 years, and I do not think that the matter of senatorial convenience should be strained to the last point to postpone consideration of the bill any longer, and I am going to ask unanimous consent that—

Mr. ASHURST. Before the Senator makes that request may I make an observation? Certainly the precedent should not be established that the creature of the Senate, the committee of the Senate, can in any way bind the action of the Senate. If that be true, then the creature could rise higher than its creator, because the committee is the creature of the Senate. The committee might take the view that the bill ought never to be considered. That could not bind the Senate if the Senate saw fit to consider the bill. Therefore, while I have the most profound respect for all the members of the committee and for the view of the committee and in its idea that it would not be expedient to proceed to the consideration of the bill now—

Mr. VARDAMAN. The committee is not seeking to bind anybody.

Mr. ASHURST. I say it could not in any way seek to bind the Senate or bind a Senator who is not a member of the committee and preclude him from moving to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. WEEKS. The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has been called from Washington on account of some important engagements. Before leaving Washington he said to me that he is interested in this legislation, and he hoped to be able to get back before it was given consideration in the Senate. I am interested myself, but my time is being taken entirely at the hearings of the Banking and Currency Committee, and I was surprised when I found that this bill had been made the unfinished business. I am quite sure the Senator from Wisconsin wishes to give everyone who is interested in this legislation and wishes to take part in the debate reasonable opportunity to be present. I can be myself, I suppose, by neglecting duties in other places, but I think the senior Senator from Ohio, who is a member of the committee, would be very much embarrassed if he were asked to return here before the middle of next week. Therefore I hope in asking unanimous consent that the Senator from Wisconsin will take that into consideration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I was about to make my request that the bill be taken up on Thursday, the 16th of October, and that following the usual form of the request the vote be taken at 4 o'clock on the 22d of October.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The calendar day?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The calendar day. That allows a full week for debate, and I do not think that anyone, whether present or not, can have any reason to complain of such an agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This seems to be a free discussion. The Chair has no right to say anything; but the Chair suggests that on account of the absence of the President pro tempore, the chairman of the committee, the date should be made the 23d.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that the time he names for the commencement of the debate seems to be perfectly satisfactory, but the time of closing the debate and taking a vote on the bill, it seems to me, should be determined when the members of the committee are here, and especially those who are largely interested in the proposed legislation. I hope the Senator will limit his request for unanimous consent to the proposition to commence the debate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I could not do that, because I do not have to ask unanimous consent to commence the debate.

Mr. WEEKS. I understand; the bill is the unfinished business.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If it is to run without limit, I must seek to get it up for debate on Monday.

Mr. WEEKS. I will not object to the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the request made by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] asks unanimous consent that on Thursday, October 16, 1913, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 136) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, and so forth, and that not later than 4 o'clock p. m., Thursday, October 23, 1913, the Senate will proceed, without further debate, to vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill, through the regular parliamentary stages, to its final disposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The order is entered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to have printed for the convenience of the Senate the letter written by Secretary Redfield and Secretary Wilson to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce. I have the letter as printed in my hand, but it bears no document number. I understand the edition has been exhausted from the files and I ask to have a reprint made of it. (S. Doc. No. 211.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BACON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 2 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, October 13, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, October 9, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth, who hast set Thy glory above the heavens.

Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast Thou ordained strength.

We come to Thee in our weakness praying for strength, in our ignorance praying for light, in our sins praying for forgiveness, in the temptations, perplexities, and discouragements of life praying for inspiration and courage, that we may press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONSERVATION EXPOSITION AT KNOXVILLE, TENN.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement in reference to the RECORD of Tuesday in reference to the absence of a number of gentlemen who went under the direction of the House to attend the Conservation Exposition at Knoxville, Tenn. Among those recorded I find the following gentlemen, on page 6085, as being absent, but while in the discharge of a duty, whereas their names appear as failing to answer and therefore they may be subject to criticism in their respective districts. The names are the Speaker of the House, Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. AUSTIN, Mr. CANTRILL, Mr. FRANCIS, Mr. GOULDEN, Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, Mr. KAHN, Mr. LANGLEY, Mr. MOON, Mr. RAKER, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, and Mr. STRINGER. In this connection I also desire to ask unanimous consent while upon the floor to extend my remarks in the RECORD so as to print the admirable patriotic address made by Speaker CLARK upon the occasion of our visit to Knoxville before a vast assemblage in the auditorium of the exposition, a highly creditable and successful one, published in the daily press of that enterprising city.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to call attention to the fact that that committee was absent by a vote and order of the House. They not only were charged with the duty of encouraging the purposes of that exposition, but they were in the personal charge of the Speaker and the Sergeant at Arms, and it would be an irreparable loss to the world to lose the Speaker and nobody here could get along without the Sergeant at Arms. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GOULDEN. I thank my colleague from Georgia for his statement.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 111. Joint resolution to authorize the reinstatement of Adolph Unger as a cadet in the United States Military Academy; and

H. J. Res. 132. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make an exhibit at the Sixth National Corn Exposition, to be held at Dallas, Tex., during the month of February, 1914.

OHIO FLOOD REPORT (H. DOC. NO. 246).

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a request for unanimous consent. A day or two ago, at the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK], an order was made authorizing and directing the printing of a document relating to the flood situation in the Ohio Valley to the number that could be printed under the $500 limit. The Public Printer subsequently communicated with me, because it was at my request that the document had originally been printed, to say that $500 would print 180,000 copies, which is very much more than anybody wanted. I saw the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK], and he said that 25,000 would be all that was needed. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the order be so modified as to authorize the publication of 25,000 of those documents instead of 180,000.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] asks unanimous consent that the previous order made by the House as to printing the flood reports be so modified as to authorize the printing of 25,000 copies. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, it is a very good illustration of the improvidence and danger of the House in ordering printing without any knowledge of the subject. The proposition now is to print 25,000 copies of the document, really an excessive number, where the House had ordered 180,000. Without somebody knowing about it, the consent ought never to be granted.

Mr. BATHRICK. I will say to the gentleman that an examination of the report as it appeared before the House seemed to indicate that $500 would not print anywhere near that number. The Committee on Printing were not present, but those familiar with the cost thought that $500 would cover, under the circumstances, all that were needed.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that there is an officer of the Printing Office right here near the Hall of the House. It is very easy to ascertain at any time the cost of any document.

Mr. BATHRICK. It was intended as a compromise, in view of the objections that were made, to have a certain number printed, and the gentleman will understand that it is not always practical to leave this floor when a motion is made in order to consult a printer about the cost.

Mr. MANN. Well, it is always feasible before a motion is made, and before the gentleman comes into the House to make a motion, to ascertain the information.

Mr. BATHRICK. This subject was presented to the House and it came up spontaneously.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. HOWARD, indefinitely, on account of the serious illness of his mother.

To Mr. FARR, indefinitely, on account of critical illness in his family.

To Mr. RIVERA, indefinitely, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. KREIDER was granted leave to withdraw papers filed in support of the bill H. R. 3382, Fifty-eighth Congress, first session, to remove the charge of desertion from the record of John F. Kelly, no adverse report having been had thereon.

ELECTION TO A VACANCY ON THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move the election of Mr. MICHAEL F. CONRY, of New York, to fill a vacancy on the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves the election of Mr. MICHAEL F. CONRY, of New York, to fill a vacancy on the Committee on Ways and Means. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules. (H. Rept. 90.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] presents a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 275) to provide a special order for the consideration of H. R. 7898, having considered the same, beg leave to report it back to the House with the recommendation that it be adopted.

House resolution 275.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this order the bill (H. R. 7898) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913, and for other purposes, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, be taken from the Speaker's table, that the amendments of the Senate thereto be disagreed to in gross, that the conference asked by the Senate be agreed to, and that the Speaker, without intervening motion, appoint managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that this is a report which the Committee on Rules has no authority to make, and hence it is not a privileged report.

The Speaker will notice that clause 56 of Rule XI, in reference to reports from the Committee on Rules—page 310, paragraph 725—referring to the Committee on Rules, provides:

Nor shall it report any rule or order which shall operate to prevent the motion to recommit being made as provided in paragraph 4 of Rule XVI.

Now, the rule reported from the Committee on Rules, prepared by my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], provides that immediately the Senate amendments be disagreed to, the conference asked for be granted, and that without intervening motion the conferees be appointed by the Speaker. That is in direct conflict with this rule of the House, and with the construction heretofore made by the present Speaker of the House. On a former occasion, in the last Congress, when the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], chairman of the Committee on Rules, reported a similar rule providing that a motion to recommit should be cut out, I made a similar point of order, and it was sustained by the Chair.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. Was it on a motion to send a bill to conference?

Mr. MANN. No; but that does not make any difference.

Mr. HARDWICK. It makes a great deal of difference.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. The Speaker heretofore has ruled that the motion to recommit is in order on Senate amendments. On the Post Office appropriation bill last year, when I was making a fight to have the parcel-post proposition inserted in the Post Office appropriation bill, a somewhat similar rule, which was not subject to this point of order, was brought in.

It did not cut out the motion to recommit, and I made the motion to recommit, although otherwise the situation was identical, and the Chair sustained the motion to recommit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose this rule contained a clause excepting the motion to recommit, what motion to recommit could be made?

Mr. MANN. A motion to commit, which is the same thing as the motion to recommit, could be made, and it was made by me on the Post Office appropriation bill last year after a rule had been brought in providing for the disagreement to all of the Senate amendments and the sending of the bill to conference.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman is mistaken. The rule was brought in after the conference report was made.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not mistaken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At that time a motion to commit was in order.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] ought to be better posted and is better posted. The gentleman from New York himself, when the tariff commission bill came before the House in the closing days of the Sixty-first Congress and laid upon the Speaker's table, insisted upon his right to move to commit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, on the Senate amendments, and the Speaker, Mr. Cannon, sustained his contention, and he made the motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I made the motion to recommit a bill that was brought in by a conference report.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There was no conference report on the tariff commission bill. It lay on the Speaker's table, with Senate amendments, and had gone no further. The gentleman's recollection is not as accurate as it usually is. The precise question arose on the motion to commit many times, and when last year the Post Office appropriation bill laid upon the Speaker's table, with Senate amendments, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] introduced a rule to provide that it should be in order to move to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference, and that conferees be appointed. At that time that order was passed, and the Speaker immediately named the conferees. The next morning I raised the point of order that the Senate amendments had not been disagreed to, that the rule only provided that it should be in order to disagree to them. The Speaker sustained the point of order, and received my motion to commit the bill to the Committee on the Post Office with instructions. The gentleman from Tennessee offered a motion to amend. That is the way the parcel post came along.

There can be no question that this rule cuts out the motion to recommit. There can be no question that the motion to recommit is in order, and the rules specifically provide that the Committee on Rules can not report a rule which cuts out the motion to recommit, and therefore this is not a privileged report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois has not been quite as ingenious on this occasion as he usually is.

Mr. MANN. It does not take any ingenuity, this is so plain.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me read the rule:

The Committee on Rules shall not report any rule or order which shall provide that business under paragraph 7 of Rule XXIV shall be set aside by a vote of less than two-thirds of the Members present—

That is the Calendar Wednesday rule—

nor shall it report any rule or order which shall operate to prevent the motion to recommit being made as provided in paragraph 4 of Rule XVI.

Paragraph 4 of Rule XVI, the part applicable and referred to in the rule quoted by the gentleman from Illinois, is as follows:

After the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution one motion to recommit shall be in order, and the Speaker shall give preference in recognition for such purpose to a Member who is opposed to the bill or joint resolution.

If at any time the previous question can be ordered under this rule upon the passage of this bill, the gentleman's point of order might be good; but there is no possible chance in disagreeing to these amendments to have any action taken by the House under this rule that results in the passage of the bill.

The gentleman has refreshed my memory regarding the tariff commission bill. That bill came from the Senate with certain Senate amendments. A rule was reported that the House should agree to the Senate amendments in gross, and it was held that the rule providing for the agreement to those amendments was equivalent to the passage of the bill, and under such circumstances a motion to recommit would be in order.

Mr. MANN. The rule was brought in to agree to the Senate amendments en bloc—a case on all fours.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not at all. The rule provided for the agreement to the Senate amendments, the effect of which was to pass the bill, and therefore the motion to recommit would be in order. The rule is clear:

After the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution one motion to recommit shall be in order.

The Committee on Rules shall report no rule to prevent such a motion being made, but under the rule reported by the Committee on Rules at this time the previous question is not to be ordered on the passage of the bill, and the vote to be taken by the House will not pass the bill. It is to prevent the passage of the bill in its present form. I submit it is clear that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is not well taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is strange what small holes some gentlemen try to crawl through.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The hole will be large enough for the gentleman from Illinois to crawl through.

Mr. MANN. The precise question as to whether a motion to recommit is in order was raised by the gentleman on the tariff commission bill when a rule was presented to agree to the Senate amendments, and Mr. Speaker Cannon held that the motion to recommit was in order. The precise question now before the House—exactly the same—was raised on the Post Office appropriation bill, when it was proposed under a rule to disagree to all of the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question for information. What does the gentleman say about this last sentence of subdivision 4, Rule XXVI?—

After the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of the bill or joint resolution, one motion to recommit—

And so forth—
shall be in order.

This is not on the passage of the bill or a joint resolution, is it?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. That is what it is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is on the adoption of this order.

The SPEAKER. It is one step to get rid of this bill, but surely the gentleman will not contend it is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Why, it is on the passage of the bill. If the matter gets before the House and I move to concur in the Senate amendments, that disposes of the bill, that is a vote on the final disposition of the bill; but the rule does not mean you have got to pass the bill before you can move to recommit it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, if this rule is adopted there never would be an opportunity for the gentleman to make the motion to concur in the Senate amendments. If it is not adopted, then the gentleman under the rule can have his opportunity, so the question of the adoption of this rule does not pass the bill in any sense.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it is not necessary to pass the bill; you can not determine whether a bill is passed until you have a vote on it.

The SPEAKER. There is no obscurity about this thing.

Mr. MANN. Not the slightest.

The SPEAKER. After the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution, and so forth, one motion to recommit shall be in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the rule which was reported on the tariff commission bill, referred to by the gentleman from Illinois on the 4th of March, 1911:

Resolved, That when the bill H. R. 32010, "An act to create a tariff board," shall have been received from the Senate the Speaker shall immediately, without regard to pending business, lay it before the House, and thereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on a motion to concur in the Senate amendments in gross.

That is on the motion to concur in the Senate amendments in gross.

The SPEAKER. That is practically the passage of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the passage of the bill, and therefore the motion to recommit after the previous question was ordered under the rule was in order and Mr. Speaker Cannon so held, but the adoption of this order does not put the bill upon passage; in fact, it prevents any attempt to pass the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we went over this matter very thoroughly on the Post Office appropriation bill last year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where is the gentleman's reference? I do not recall it. I desire to see what happened.

Mr. MANN. My reference is here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A good many things, Mr. Speaker, in the gentleman's head—

Mr. MANN. But that is not all; I was here at the time and the gentleman probably was not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not correct, but at the same time, in view of the fact that the gentleman got somewhat involved in reference to what happened on the floor March 4, I should like to look over the reference.

Mr. MANN. I stated what took place in reference to the tariff commission bill and the gentleman stated entirely differently.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I corrected my statement. I admit that the gentleman corrected me in part, and I accepted that correction.

Mr. MANN. I stated what took place. Now, Mr. Speaker, we argued that last year on the Post Office appropriation bill. When the rule provided for the appointment of conferees at once and making it in order to disagree to all the Senate amendments in gross, the Speaker held that on that motion we were entitled to a motion to recommit the bill. What is the motion to recommit the bill for? To give the minority under the existing rules an opportunity to test the temper of the House upon the proposition. There are two rules in reference to a motion to recommit—one making it in order to move to recommit generally and one providing that even after the previous question is ordered there shall be a motion to recommit; and the Speaker then held, as I recall it, that the rule meant that the motion to recommit was to be saved to the minority and that the Committee on Rules could not cut out the motion to recommit at any time where it was provided in the rule.

What is the purpose of this rule? To prevent the motion to recommit. They would have a right to make the motion to recommit. Would the Speaker hold that, if we had in the House this bill and proceeded to pass through all the parliamentary stages, but no motion for the previous question was actually made, then we would not have the right to move to recommit, and that the motion to recommit depends upon the previous question? Not at all. The motion to recommit comes in in spite of the previous question under paragraph 4 of Rule XVI, and we have the right under the rules to move to recommit the bill before it is put on its final passage. Under the rulings both of this Speaker and previous Speakers we have the right to move to recommit a bill which has Senate amendments pending in the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the exception on the power of the Committee on Rules to report a rule is confined to a particular motion to recommit. And that motion came into being in order to prevent the minority being denied an opportunity of presenting its position before final disposition of a matter. That was the reason for the rule. Now, here there can be, by a disagreement to the Senate amendments, no final disposition of the bill. The minority are not denied the opportunity that will come later on in the consideration of this bill of presenting their proposition, and the only exception made to the power possessed by the Committee on Rules was, I repeat, in order to prevent the final disposition of a matter so far as this House is concerned without giving to the minority an opportunity to be heard. But here, by the very action of the rule itself, there can be no final disposition of this matter so far as the House is concerned, and therefore the exception does not apply.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, one word more.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MANN. Just one word more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois states that he wants just one word more.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kentucky made an exceptionally clear statement of the purpose of the rule, but he did not go quite far enough. If the motion to recommit can not be made now, it never can be. It can not be made when the conference report comes in. The conference report is not subject to a motion to recommit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes; it is.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

The SPEAKER. Of course it is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] made a motion to recommit the conference report on the Payne tariff bill.

Mr. MANN. I can not help whether he did or not—

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will permit, the other day when these questions were floating around here in the air and being threatened, the Chair took particular pains to investigate that question. And the Chair has no doubt in his mind whatever that you can make a motion to recommit a conference report, and make it with instructions at that.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair went far enough, the Chair discovered that after one body has acted on a conference report the motion to recommit can not be made.

The SPEAKER. After the conferees of the other House have been discharged.

Mr. MANN. After the conference report has been acted upon by one body the conference report can not be made, and hence it is a pure matter of argument as to whether it can be made, and hence we have a right to assert we would not have an opportunity to make a conference report. Now, unless we have a right to move to recommit now we will never have the right to move to recommit.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will permit, he does not contend that if this rule be adopted it passes this bill, does he?

Mr. SHERLEY. It does not do that.

Mr. MANN. It passes it so far as making a motion to recommit is concerned.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman make of the language of subsection 4?

Mr. MANN. I make the same thing that the Speaker himself made when he ruled on the Post Office bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair makes the same distinction now.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the Speaker will permit, I should like to suggest another matter: The Senate having asked a conference and the conference being ordered, the matter will have to come to this House before the Senate can act on it, and therefore the condition that the gentleman presents when a motion to recommit would not be in order on a conference report can not arise as to this particular matter.

Mr. MANN. That practice has not been followed since the Democrats have had control of the House.

The SPEAKER. It never was violated but once—

Mr. MANN. It has been violated a number of times.

The SPEAKER (continuing). And it is very questionable whether it was violated then.

Mr. MANN. It was violated several times.

The SPEAKER. On the tariff bill in the Sixty-second Congress the Senate was entitled to the papers, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] came in here with the report and the papers. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] raised the point that the Senate was entitled to the papers, and the Chair interrogated the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] as to how he obtained the papers; whether he threw the Senate conferees down and took them away vi et armis, or whether they delivered them to him, or how he got hold of them. And he explained that the Senate conferees, whether they agreed in terms or not, showed their disposition to let him have the papers, and under that state of affairs the Chair ruled his way.

Mr. MANN. And the Chair having so ruled, it was done a number of times since.

The SPEAKER. It was not disputed.

Mr. MANN. Oh, what's the use? It was disposed of.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, the plain difference in the situation as presented to the House is this: The rule in one case looked to the passage of the bill and the rule in the present instance looks to keeping from passing the bill at this time. That being so, of course the objection urged by the gentleman from Illinois is not valid.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Would a motion to instruct the conferees to agree to amendments numbered 5, 6, 7, and 8 be in order now?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. MANN. It is not before the House yet.

The SPEAKER. Not as a rule. Let us see what it is. The resolution reads:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this order the bill (H. R. 7898) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913, and for other purposes, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, be taken from the Speaker's table; that the amendments of the Senate thereto be disagreed to in gross; that the conference asked by the Senate be agreed to; and that the Speaker, without intervening motion, appoint managers on the part of the House.

The Chair does not think that it comes within section 4 of Rule XVI, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman does that, I want to offer an amendment or I want to offer it at the proper time, if it is in order.

Mr. MANN. The proper time has gone by.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] said.

Mr. SHARP. I wish to know, Mr. Speaker, whether an amendment to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is now in order?

The SPEAKER. If you vote down the previous question, any amendment that is germane can be offered.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HELM. If this rule is adopted, will the Members of the House who are in favor of agreeing to Senate amendments Nos. 5, 6, 7, and 8 have an opportunity to vote on that proposition?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is ordered?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HELM. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman have in mind the amendment exempting the deputy collectors from civil-service examinations?

Mr. HELM. Yes; the amendment relating to collectors.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That amendment will be brought back here, and the House will have an opportunity to vote on it.

The SPEAKER. The matter that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HELM] inquires about is not in order. The regular order is on agreeing to the motion for the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Forty gentlemen have arisen in the affirmative. Those opposed will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] One hundred and sixteen gentlemen have arisen in the negative. Forty is a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of ordering the previous question will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The roll was called.

The SPEAKER. On this vote the yeas are 144, the nays are 56, answering "present" 8—not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The vote is on the previous question. Those in favor of ordering the previous question will, when their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is that the correct procedure?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is. It has been done both ways—the way the gentleman is thinking of and the way the Chair is thinking about. If the Chair could make a rule, he would make it so that there would be no more roll calls, but that the Clerk would be directed to call the names of those who came in later. That, however, is not the rule, and the Chair is not authorized to fix it in that way.

Mr. MANN. The rule in reference to an automatic call provides that where a quorum is not shown and anyone objects to the vote for that reason, there shall be an automatic roll call. That rule does not provide for an automatic roll call where the roll is being called. If the Speaker orders another automatic roll call and some gentleman who has answered on this call fails to answer on the other, the Speaker does not add any in making a quorum.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair happens to see him, he will add one.

Mr. MANN. If he be not in the Chamber, the Chair might have to hunt around to see the absentees, and the Sergeant at Arms has not seen them yet.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's contention? The roll call does develop the fact that there is no quorum present, and the Chair is bound to take notice of that fact.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. The question is whether the roll call should stand and possibly the House order the absentees to be brought in. We did this once before, Mr. Speaker, on one occasion, when a roll call failed to develop a quorum, I believe, on a division in the Committee of the Whole. In any event a quorum failed to develop. We had a vote, and then another vote, and then we had another vote, which, of course, might go on ad infinitum, for some Members who would be recorded on one roll call might be absent on the next.

We are in a position where I am very anxious to develop a quorum, and I hope that all who are recorded on this roll call will keep their names on the next roll call until we get enough others to make a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think the question has been decided both ways, and both practices have been followed by the House; but I think the safer way is that when the House finds itself without a quorum, under the circumstances that exist now, it is for the Speaker to order the doors closed and send for absentees and let them vote on this roll call.

The SPEAKER. On the one that is being had?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On the one now being had.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the Chair stated awhile ago, that if he had the ordering of it he would order it that way.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that Rule XV, paragraph 4, provides for the proceeding:

Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question and a quorum is not present and objection is made from that cause, unless the House shall adjourn there shall be a call of the House, and the Sergeant at Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent Members, and the yeas and nays on the pending question shall at the same time be considered as ordered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, that rule is where it contemplates the point of order being made that no quorum is present where the vote is taken without a roll call.

The SPEAKER. Evidently that is the case.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois is not exactly correct, because it says the roll shall be called and the Sergeant at Arms shall proceed to arrest Members and bring them in to make a quorum.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will read the first part of the section, he will see it says, "Where objection is made." That evidently has reference to the fact it is not a record vote, but when there is a record vote the Chair must take cognizance of the fact that there is a quorum present or not.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. When the call of the House discloses the absence of a quorum, can not the Speaker direct the Sergeant at Arms to bring in absent Members in order to make a quorum under this rule?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, without having looked up the precedents recently, my own opinion would be that the House, pending the roll call, would have the right to order the Sergeant at Arms to arrest absentees and bring them before the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] shakes his head, he may be correct.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is my own opinion. Upon the demand for the yeas and nays, the roll being called, the absence of a quorum is ascertained. Now, there must be a call of the House either automatically or by order of the House in order to determine who the absentees may be.

Mr. MANN. That is already determined.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; because Members may be present and not voting.

Mr. MANN. If Members are present, the Speaker has the right to designate them under the rule so they can be counted as present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did that a few moments ago in the case of Mr. FAISON.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In my opinion, under the practice, a call of the House must be one way or the other, either automatically or by order of the House, and I am inclined to think the Speaker is justified on a roll call under the rule, a quorum not being disclosed, in automatically ordering the call.

Mr. MANN. Well, the question is whether he automatically orders a call on this same question and we vote on the same question over again.

The SPEAKER. Now, here is the rule:

Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present and objection is made for that cause—

Now, that is on the other kind of vote, where you stand up or call out "aye" or "no," and does not apply to a roll call, evidently—unless the House shall adjourn, there shall be a call of the House and the Sergeant at Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent Members—

That is his duty without the Speaker saying a word, although the Speaker does say—and the yeas and nays on the pending question shall at the same time be considered as ordered.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, does that mean the yeas and nays shall be reordered on the pending question or continue on the question under which we are operating?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule—and if anybody differs, he can appeal—that the Sergeant at Arms bring in Members who have not voted on this roll and let them vote on the roll call.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the rule, the Sergeant at Arms not only brings in the absent Members, but he detains those who are here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair saw 6 or 8 or 10 Members march out of here in a body just now.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to call the Speaker's attention to the fourth volume of Hinds' Precedents, paragraph 3045, which says that the duty of the Sergeant at Arms shall be, without any action of the House, to detain those who are present, and without any order of the House bring those who are absent to the House.

The SPEAKER. The rule does not seem to be very clear. It says:

Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present, and objection is made for that cause—

Evidently that has nothing to do with where a roll is called—unless the House shall adjourn there shall be a call of the House—and the Sergeant at Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent Members, and the yeas and nays on the pending question shall at the same time be considered as ordered. The Clerk shall call the roll, and each Member as he answers to his name may vote on the pending question, and after the roll call is completed each Member arrested shall be brought by the Sergeant at Arms before the House, whereupon he shall be noted as present, discharged from arrest, and given an opportunity to vote, and his vote shall be recorded.

That is automatic—

It seems that rule contemplates a roll call.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNING. I voted "nay," but I withdrew my vote and voted "present," as I had a pair with my colleague Mr. SCULLY. He has since come into the Hall. Can we both vote now if we wish to do so?

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, that question is perfectly plain. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING], of course, has the right to have his name called again and to vote as he pleases. The Speaker has the right to designate the gentleman from New Jersey as "present," and then he has the right to vote.

The SPEAKER. The trouble about that is the Speaker has already announced the vote.

Mr. MANN. That is not the final announcement, because the Speaker announced the vote as it stood then. It is not a final vote.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the name of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING].

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BROWNING, and he voted "nay."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the name of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SCULLY].

The Clerk called the name of Mr. SCULLY, and he voted "yea."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] offers the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 278.

Resolved, That all leaves of absence heretofore granted, except on account of sickness, are hereby revoked, and the Sergeant at Arms is instructed to notify the absent Members by telegraph of the passage of this resolution.

[Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that in order until we have a quorum?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is in order. I have two precedents for that.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the name of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. FAISON].

The name of Mr. FAISON was called, and he voted "yea."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I refer to section 3004, volume 4, of Hinds' Precedents. A similar resolution was offered on the 10th day of September, 1890, identical in terms, and it was held to be in order as a part of the proceedings necessary to enable the House, under the Constitution, to require the attendance of a quorum. It is apparent that the House must assert its power to compel Members to come here in order to transact the public business.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant at Arms will act accordingly. The common sense of the situation in which the House finds itself is this—it may not be the rule—that as the call of the House is ordered the vote stands as it is until somebody else comes in to vote. That is what the Chair thinks of it.

Mr. BARTLETT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. It is the duty of the Sergeant at Arms also to bring the Members in?

The SPEAKER. The House has just ordered him to bring them in. The Chair simply announced it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FESS. If there is no objection to the fact that there is not a quorum, do we not constructively have a quorum to do business?

The SPEAKER. No. That is one of the things that is imperative on the Chair, that under the Constitution and the rule he is called on to decide whether there is a quorum when the roll is called.

Mr. FESS. Without anybody raising an objection?

The SPEAKER. That objection goes to a vote that is not a record vote. For instance, the Chair puts the question, "Those in favor will say 'aye' and those opposed 'no,'" and decides it one way or the other. Then some gentleman demands a division. The Members stand up and are counted, when finally somebody demands tellers, and you get the count by tellers. It does not show a quorum present, but the Chair does not have to take cognizance of that unless somebody raises the point. Then the rule applies. Neither the Chair nor anybody else can get around a roll call.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Heretofore warrants have been issued to absent Members, but owing to adjournment later those warrants have failed. It seems to me it would be necessary now to have warrants issued to all absent Members even if that motion had not been made.

The SPEAKER. That is true under the old style of roll call, but not under this.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Under the automatic call?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That would be true under the automatic call, but I think at least warrants should be issued for absent Members.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Are we now waiting for a quorum to develop on this roll call?

The SPEAKER. That is what we are doing.

Mr. MANN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to arrest absent Members and that the Speaker be directed to sign warrants for their arrest.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moves that the Speaker issue warrants to absent Members and that the Sergeant at Arms serve them and bring them in.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Under the automatic order that the Speaker stated was had under the rules will not the Sergeant at Arms proceed without the order of the Speaker for the arrest of the Members?

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes he can.

Mr. MANN. He can notify absent Members.

Mr. RAKER. I was asking directly whether under that automatic order, if the Speaker does not issue his warrant, the Sergeant at Arms can proceed and arrest the absent Members without the motion?

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant at Arms might not want to take the chance of being sued, but the Speaker can, under the rule, hold that the Sergeant at Arms has the right to go out and arrest them without a warrant.

Mr. MANN. This is not an automatic call of the House. When a quorum has failed to develop on a roll call and the yeas and nays are demanded, the House has authority to send for absent Members. The Sergeant at Arms has no authority to arrest them unless he is directed by a vote of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the question. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, another parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. The warrant of arrest is signed and issued by the Speaker and delivered to the Sergeant at Arms. This may be telegraphed and the Members may be arrested at their homes under such a warrant. Is not that correct?

Mr. BARTLETT. Wherever they may be found.

Mr. RAKER. I want to get the thing straight.

The SPEAKER. Whenever the House orders it they can be arrested.

Mr. RAKER. I may put it this way: Can not the Sergeant at Arms telegraph, for instance, to California or to Nevada a warrant of arrest issued by the Speaker and arrest Members there?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think he can. That would be a very loose way of exercising authority.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, is there not a law requiring a forfeiture of $25 a day from the salary of every Member for every day he is absent from the House without leave?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know whether it is exactly $25, but it is a sum of money equal to $7,500 divided by 305.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, there is an old statute which provides that Members who are absent without leave shall be mulcted a certain amount of their pay. The Sergeant at Arms shall deduct from their pay during the time they are absent without leave. During the Fifty-third Congress that was done. Mr. Speaker Crisp directed the Sergeant at Arms not to pay men who were absent without leave of the House during the period they were absent.

A number of them were mulcted in that way, and I know that some of them have never yet been able to have the money returned to them, because since I have been in Congress there has been a resolution before the Committee on Accounts asking that the money thus deducted be returned to those Members.

The SPEAKER. The Chair remembers very well that he was mulcted himself for two days during the time that he was down in Virginia making Democratic speeches.

Mr. SHARP. What Congress was that?

Mr. BARTLETT. The Fifty-third Congress.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that it was afterwards repaid. An appropriation was afterwards made to repay it, and if it be deducted now the same thing will be done again.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows that he never got his part of it.

Mr. MANN. The Speaker probably did not go after his two days' pay.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I know a resolution has been introduced before the Committee on Accounts, and I believe it has come up here on the floor of the House. I do not remember that it ever was passed. There is such a law on the statute books, and it is regarded as obsolete unless sought to be enforced.

Mr. MANN. All some gentleman has to do is to demand of the Sergeant at Arms that he obey the law.

The SPEAKER. Speaker Reed used to sneer at it as a police-court regulation.

Mr. MANN. It hardly comes up to the dignity of that.

The SPEAKER. It is the business of the Sergeant at Arms. It is not the business of the Speaker.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. How is the Sergeant at Arms to determine that?

The SPEAKER. He will have to take a man's word for it.

Mr. BARTLETT. He can determine it by an examination of the roll call and the Journal, which will show who has leave of absence.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether he can determine it by a roll call or not. I know I shall endeavor to help him do it for the next 60 days by having one each day.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma appeared at the bar of the House.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. CARTER, and therefore can not vote, but I desire to answer "present."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be recorded as answering "present."

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, in Ohio, I received a telegram stating that I was needed in Washington, and asking me to respond at once. I sent a telegram in reply that I would be here. I notice that these warrants must be signed by the Speaker and attested by the Clerk. I would like to know whether the Speaker signed the warrant, and I would like to know whether the Clerk, who, I understand, is absent, attested the warrant.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker pro tempore signed the warrant and the Chief Clerk of the House has the right to sign the Clerk's name, under special resolution of the House.

Mr. FESS. That resolution was passed in the last Congress. Has it been adopted in this Congress?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know.

Mr. FESS. I do not think it has.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is rather inclined to believe that that is a statute.

Mr. FESS. In looking over the RECORD, I find that a resolution was passed in the last Congress. I do not think it has been passed in this.

The SPEAKER. What sort of a resolution was it?

Mr. FESS. Authorizing the Chief Clerk to sign the name of the Clerk in the absence of the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Was it a joint resolution?

Mr. FESS. I think it was.

The SPEAKER. Then it is a part of the law of the land.

Mr. MANN. I think it was not a joint resolution, Mr. Speaker, but a House resolution, and the rules of the House have been adopted since it was passed, because that was in the last Congress.

Mr. FESS. Would that be counted as one of the rules?

Mr. MANN. Certainly not.

Mr. FESS. Then the laws of the last Congress would not include that?

Mr. MANN. We have not adopted the rules of the last Congress.

Mr. FOSTER. I call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio to the fact that that is a part of the rules of the House which were adopted at the beginning of this session. I refer to the Chief Clerk having the right to sign in the absence of the Clerk. That is a part of the rules of the House that were adopted at the beginning of the session.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SAUNDERS). For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], who is one of the gentlemen in charge of this bill, if it would be feasible to fix a day in the future and give notice that upon that day this bill will be called up.

Mr. BARTLETT. For action on the conference report?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; I mean on the rule.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I apprehend if I shall answer it will have to be by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Well, of course, I am proceeding in that way, as nobody objected.

Mr. BARTLETT. Therefore I presume, Mr. Speaker, I am to proceed by unanimous consent, subject to objection. This bill having quite a number of important provisions and a number of Senate amendments in it, I think that the conferees upon the part of the Senate and upon the part of the House, and acting upon the idea that I would be one of the conferees, having heretofore been one upon the conferences on deficiency bills, would not find much difficulty in being able to make a report to the House.

I do not say reach a final agreement, because probably we will not be able to reach a final agreement at once, but I do not believe that the conferees on the part of the House and Senate would find much difficulty in coming to such a stage in the conference that we should not be able to report to the two Houses in a very short while. Of course there are certain things in the bill on which the conferees on the part of the House would not be willing to finally act, and will not unless the House by a vote first acts upon them. Now, I would not say whether it is feasible to designate any particular day to send this bill to conference. I am afraid to say that because the moment you do that the Members who are here probably would leave the city and would not return unless you force them to return.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit me just there, I had wondered if it would be feasible to set a day, say in the early part of November. Are there involved in this bill matters of such moment as that they should be acted upon at once?

Mr. BARTLETT. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. So far as I am concerned, I am unwilling—and I speak only for myself as a member of the Committee on Appropriations and as a Member of this House—to consent that this bill shall not be pressed to a consideration as soon as possible. There is involved in this bill some very important items. We have in this bill a provision of $39,000 for the examination—

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. I have no desire to prevent the gentleman from discussing the bill, if we can have some agreement about a division of time. I suppose an agreement can not be formally made, but if the gentleman is going to tell us about the meritorious things in the bill, I would like to refer to—

Mr. BARTLETT. I called attention to the fact that I am only proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Proceed; I did not hear the gentleman say that, although I know that and so did the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I also knew it.

Mr. MANN. I am not criticizing the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. I premised my statement by saying that I would not make any statement except by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was so understood by the Chair.

Mr. BARTLETT. And I am perfectly willing my friend should have any time he wants. Assuming, Mr. Speaker, I may proceed, I will say there is in this bill a provision of $39,000 to enable the Civil Service Commission to hold examinations in all fourth-class post offices that pay over the sum of $480 per annum. And this affects every fourth-class office and the appointment of fourth-class postmasters.

The Civil Service Commission have not the funds, and they can not hold these examinations for the appointment of fourth-class postmasters until this bill shall pass. There are some 300 sites of public buildings provided for in the public buildings act of March 4, 1913. This bill contains a provision of $30,000 to authorize the inspection and the selection of those sites. There is a provision of nearly $400,000 in this bill to authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission to proceed to make physical valuation of railroads.

There is in this bill an amendment from the Senate which takes from the classified service the deputy marshals and deputy United States internal-revenue collectors, which the constituents of many Members of this House and Members of the Senate think of very great importance, they having been placed under the civil-service law by executive order in 1906, finally.

There are also deficiencies of money in the various departments, which the departments insist are necessary, and which are necessary, in order to carry on the public business.

I think, Mr. Speaker, answering the gentleman's inquiry, that this bill carries enough important items to demand that the representatives of the people should come here, make a quorum, and vote and pass it. As is true with many others, at much inconvenience to myself, I have remained here, not having been at my home for six months, or out of the city hardly a week altogether, with the hope of passing this bill, which contains so many important appropriations for the Government and legislation in the interest of the people. I think it is the duty of every man on both sides of this House to be here now, or to come here as soon as possible, and pass this bill, and, so far as I am concerned, I shall not consider any proposition for a postponement of it.

Does the statement answer the gentleman?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think it does. The gentleman knows, of course, that there are a very large number of us who, without undue self-exploitation, may claim some proper credit for remaining here at very great embarrassment.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have stated that I have done that myself at great inconvenience.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And, unfortunately, there are a great many who do remain here who are just now being punished by the absenteeism of a number of Members. I had wondered if it would be feasible to fix a day, say, in November, and give notice that upon that day the bill would be passed. That notice would go to the country, and there would then be full opportunity, and I have no doubt a quorum could appear at that time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will not be here then.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not think they will come any faster then than they are coming now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the law the Committee on Appropriations for the last five or six years has gone to Panama to examine the estimates there. A conservative estimate is that those visits have resulted in a saving of at least $10,000,000 in the work on the canal. Arrangements have been made for the committee to leave on the 8th of November in order to be back in time for the regular session. At this time in the preparation of estimates arrangements are to be made for the permanent organization of the canal force, and it is perhaps more imperative than ever that the examination be conducted on the Isthmus. So a date in November for the consideration of this bill, I think, is impracticable.

Mr. BARTLETT. Of course I was simply speaking for myself, I will say to the gentleman from New York. He will understand I was not undertaking to speak for him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand. I was just explaining this situation to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. I am satisfied the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] would not be willing to consent that this bill would be displaced until every effort was made to get a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I believe that Members should be here in order to pass this bill and furnish funds imperatively required for certain branches of the public service.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Can the gentleman from New York suggest any way by which one who has worked day and night through the hottest part of the year in about the most delicate committee service he has ever worked on could get some kind of relief from this situation?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman from Tennessee does not go away voluntarily, he should be sent away very soon, in order to get some opportunity to recuperate, because of the arduous labors imposed upon him in the heat of this summer as chairman of the committee appointed to investigate certain charges.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has had arduous labors, but he is not the only one. I take it that everybody has had arduous labors, and we all want and all need a vacation. There is no possible excuse for keeping them here next month doing nothing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The statement of "arduous labor" on the part of Members of the House reminds me of a statement that was made in the law school by one of the professors. He was accustomed to make the statement that it was a presumption of law that all lawyers had an equal knowledge of the law, but it was a very violent presumption. [Laughter.] The same is true about the arduous labors of Members of Congress. The presumption is that the labors of all are equally arduous, but it is a pretty violent presumption.

Mr. MANN. My observation in connection with Members of the House is that every Member who comes here does hard work; and while I have seen a good many Members who plume themselves with the idea at times that they do all the hard work, yet when you figure around you will sometimes find some man who is not conspicuous before the House who is doing just as much work—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Or more—

Mr. MANN. Yes; or more than those who are more prominent on the floor of the House. I do not say that in detracting of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], because we all recognize that he has had arduous labors this summer.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The labor that the gentleman from Tennessee has performed on that committee has not been any more arduous upon him than it has been on all the members of the committee, irrespective of party. This should be said in justice to them. So far as my experience has gone, it has been the best working committee I ever saw. For days and days we sat from 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the evening, and then sat at night; and with the exception of once or twice, when one or two members were compelled to be absent on the floor of the House, every member of the committee, of all parties, was present and participating in the proceedings. The labors of the chairman have not been more arduous than those of the other members of the committee.

Mr. MANN. The members of the committee have done great work, but not more than other Members have done. I was feeling pretty good myself, and yet I went home for a couple of weeks. I freely admit it. I was not worried about roll calls in the House. I spent a couple of weeks out of doors, and came back feeling like a fighting cock.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And acting like one. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. And I leave it to the House to determine as to the fact. [Laughter.]

Now, I know perfectly well that if the House or the Congress should adjourn this week or next week and go home and take a vacation until the first Monday in December it would be to the interest of the Government and to the interest of legislation. The Members would do a great deal better work and much better tempered work when they came back.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does not the gentleman think, however, that we ought to pass this bill before we go home?

Mr. MANN. Oh, this bill could be passed by the House in less than 15 minutes if the other matter were settled.

Mr. BARTLETT. We could not settle that now.

Mr. MANN. Who can settle it? Does the gentleman mean he must go up to the other end of the Avenue in order to settle it?

Mr. BARTLETT. Oh, no. Permit me to say that the gentleman does not understand me. I meant the House could not settle that question. It takes the concurrent action of both Houses to do that.

Mr. MANN. The House has not passed any concurrent resolution as yet, although it has the right to.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 277.

Resolved, That except as to the revocation of leaves of absence and the arrest by the Sergeant at Arms of absent Members of the House, as heretofore ordered, all further proceedings under the call of the House be, and the same are hereby, dispensed with.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask to have that read again?

Mr. HARDWICK. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will report the resolution again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, the motion that I offer is one that is perfectly in order at this stage of the proceedings, and one which, of course, will be followed by a motion to adjourn, to be made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

I want to say just this: We have been proceeding for the last few days on the theory that less than a quorum could not adjourn from day to day without destroying the call entirely.

Mr. MANN. I have not entertained such a theory.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have not been proceeding on that theory myself, but that is the theory upon which the House has been acting. Of course that is not the rule, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says he himself understands. This question was decided in the Fifty-third Congress by Mr. Speaker Crisp. On an order presented by Mr. Blount, of Georgia, like the order I have presented, when a point of order was presented, Mr. Crisp held this:

It seems to the Chair that it must be competent for the House in the present situation to continue the order of arrest, notwithstanding an adjournment. A recess can not be taken in the absence of a quorum, and a motion for a recess is not in order pending a call of the House. If an adjournment dispenses necessarily, notwithstanding the desire of the House to the contrary, with all proceedings under the call, including the order for the arrest of absent Members, then if the House wanted to send for a Member, say, in Texas, it would have to stay in session until the Sergeant at Arms could go there and return. The House could not adjourn without causing the proceeding to fail, and could not take a recess in the absence of a quorum. So that it seems to the Chair it must be in the power of a minority of the House, when a call has been entered upon, to adopt a resolution to continue the order of arrest and then to adjourn, the Constitution contemplating that less than a quorum may adjourn from day to day and may also enforce the attendance of absent Members. It seems, therefore, to the Chair that this resolution is in order.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. To which gentleman? Does the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. FOSTER, desire me to yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. We are, it seems to me, in this sort of a situation, where it requires a certain number of Members to make a quorum, and there are, say, over a hundred Members at this time who have not answered to their names. Now, suppose the House should take an adjournment and we permitted all the Members here to go away—that is, out of the Hall. Theoretically, the Hall is locked to keep the Members here. Now, they are turned out, permitted to go, the doors are opened. What are you going to do with the Members who are here to-day whose arrest has not been ordered, but who may not be present to-morrow to answer to a roll call? It seems to me that that may prove to be a ridiculous proceeding and accomplish nothing. Let us stay in session until we get a quorum.

Mr. HARDWICK. Did the gentleman from Illinois desire to ask me a question?

Mr. MANN. I desire to ask a question and submit an observation. The gentleman proposes to dispense with certain proceedings under the call. There has been no call of the House.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; there has been an automatic call, if the gentleman will pardon me.

Mr. MANN. That is what I thought the gentleman had in his mind. The precedent that the gentleman has is based upon an automatic call. There was no technical call, but a regular call of the House. The only thing that has been done since the absence of a quorum was disclosed was to revoke leaves of absence and order the Sergeant at Arms to arrest absent Members.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says he proposes to dispense with "other proceedings" under the call. There was no call and no "other proceedings."

Mr. HARDWICK. The Speaker held to the contrary, if I understood his ruling, that a call resulted automatically, because a vote of the House on a question pending disclosed that a quorum was not present.

Mr. MANN. The Speaker first ordered an automatic call of the House, and there being some doubt under the procedure of the House as to what ought to be done, upon reflection, seeing that that would put the House into the absurd position of calling the roll and disclosing the absence of a quorum on a question, and immediately again calling the roll on the same question, with less likelihood of getting a quorum the second time than the first, the Speaker declared he would consider that the roll call was still pending.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And that absent Members brought in would have the right to vote; but that was not under a call. Then we proceeded to revoke leaves of absence.

Mr. HARDWICK. And order the arrest of absent Members, so that, after all, the gentleman is superfining, because all of the proceedings, actual and practical, incident to a call of the House and necessarily attached to it have been taken in this case.

Mr. MANN. But what is it that the gentleman proposes to dispense with? Here is a roll call in progress. An adjournment, I take it, dispenses with that.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; that, of course, would be the only thing dispensed with.

Mr. MANN. That is what I want to know.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman and I agree on that. The roll call on the previous question will be the only thing dispensed with. What I am anxious to get at is, not what we are going to dispense with, but what we are not going to dispense with.

Mr. MANN. Except for the precedent, I should think that excepting something would not continue. The gentleman says that everything shall be dispensed with except something.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And then he proposes to adjourn. Suppose we should adjourn anyway. Would that dispense with the arrests?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; it would.

Mr. MANN. Saying you except that is a very negative way of saying that you keep it in force, and I doubt whether it would amount to anything if anyone should actually be arrested.

Mr. HARDWICK. It has been ruled precisely, and I have no fear on that point. Of course the gentleman and I are really splitting hairs about nothing.

Mr. MANN. We are trying to split hairs about the form of a very technical matter affecting the arrest of Members, and my observation is that technicalities invariably follow when people are arrested under any doubtful authority.

Mr. HARDWICK. Just one other word. The gentleman is quite right in a way, although I do not think the technicality he raises is important, but we have had here to-day what amounts to an automatic call of the House, attended with all of the phenomena that usually attend an automatic call of the House. What I am trying to do is to put the House in condition so that it can adjourn and yet preserve the orders that it has entered and agreed upon to-day, to wit, first, revoking all leaves of absence, and, second, providing that absent Members shall be arrested and brought here by the Sergeant at Arms. The gentleman is quite right on one proposition. The only important thing that will be done away with after we adjourn will be the vote already taken, so far as it has been taken, on the demand for the previous question made by myself. From a practical standpoint we do not lose very much by that, because we know very well that if the gentleman from Illinois or any other Member on that side, or any Member on this side, wishes to demand the presence of a quorum to-morrow we must have a quorum before the resolution itself can be agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman submit to a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The yeas and nays were ordered?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Would not that order still stand to-morrow?

Mr. HARDWICK. I think so.

Mr. MANN. Whether or not any Member really desired a roll call on the previous question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; I think the yeas and nays, unless vacated by unanimous consent, would be considered as already ordered for to-morrow, and that the first thing in order would be to call the roll on my demand for the previous question. It would be the unfinished business.

Mr. MANN. I should think we could adjourn and on to-morrow—as far as I am personally concerned; I can not answer for anybody else—a roll call on the rule itself might be sufficient unless some other gentleman desired a roll call upon the previous question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me, I understand the gentleman from Illinois will insist on a roll call on the rule itself on the main question.

Mr. MANN. I will do the best I can toward it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Under those circumstances I will say it will of necessity require a quorum to do business to-morrow. I am not going to indulge in any captious criticism of Members who are not here, because I realize the membership of this House has worked very hard this summer and are worn out and many of them need a rest; but this is an important bill and, in order to carry on the Government, it is necessary for it to become a law and many of the items in it can not be delayed much longer.

It is of the utmost importance that we should secure a quorum. There is probably a quorum in town. Under this order the Sergeant at Arms is already advised concerning Members who have reported present. He has the warrants for the arrest of those who have not reported to-day, and if they are found in town to-night they can be brought before the bar of the House to-morrow. I think this order will be salutary in enabling us to get a quorum here and maintain it until this bill goes to conference. Therefore I hope that the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] will pass. I do not think we could accomplish any result by spending two or three hours here this afternoon, and we probably can reach the absentees who are in town by the Sergeant at Arms to-night. I hope Members will all be here in the morning, and that we can get a vote on this resolution sending the bill to conference.

Mr. MANN. Now that the gentleman from Alabama is here, will he permit an interruption?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I offered yesterday to allow this bill to go to conference if we could have a little discussion and vote upon a dozen amendments, or such a matter. Does not the gentleman think we might more wisely have put in the time that way than spending three days in trying to get a quorum?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, that is a question; of course I am not familiar with the terms of the bill, and would not attempt to interfere with the management of the bill in the hands of the able gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. I happened to be absent myself out of town—

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman was entitled to the absence. I think we all think that, and there is no criticism of the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will permit me, the gentleman was so insistent that a quorum should be here to transact business that I was of the opinion it would be very improper and very unfair to have the important discussion the gentleman wished take place in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. MANN. Well, there was nothing to indicate a quorum was absent at the time the gentleman objected. The record showed a quorum was present until after that time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was in the air.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on my resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Friday, October 10, 1913, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, October 10, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We invoke Thy blessing, Almighty God, our heavenly Father, upon these Thy servants, here to subserve the interests of a great people. Grant that by Thy holy influence their work may be faithfully and efficiently done, that our Nation may increase in all that makes a nation great, and its gospel of liberty be felt by all the peoples throughout the earth. And Thine shall be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the action of the House in ordering the yeas and nays on my demand for the previous question yesterday shall be rescinded. And I give notice in connection therewith—

Mr. MANN. Provided the gentleman will simply withdraw his motion for the previous question, if he has the right to do so.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think I have the right to do that after the yeas and nays have been ordered. If the Chair shall hold otherwise, I am perfectly willing. I wish to give notice that I intend to withdraw my demand for the previous question—temporarily at least.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] asks unanimous consent to vacate the order for the yeas and nays. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my demand for the previous question, and I now desire to ask unanimous consent that there be one hour's general debate on the resolution, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the other half by myself, at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his demand for the previous question, coupled with the further proposition that there shall be one hour's debate on the resolution, one half of the time to be controlled by him and the other half by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman make that 40 minutes on a side?

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, 40 minutes. I will amend it.

Mr. MANN. Make it 40 minutes on a side.

Mr. HARDWICK. At the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Forty minutes on a side, at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know if it is possible for us to have 10 minutes here?

Mr. HARDWICK. You will have 40 minutes over there. I suppose the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] will yield you 10 minutes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would like to have that understanding.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will yield 10 minutes out of the 40 to the gentleman.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], with the understanding that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] is to have 10 minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes first to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the object of this rule is to enable the urgent deficiency bill to be sent to conference in order to adjust the differences on the various amendments between the two Houses. The bill as it passed the House carried about $3,900,000, recommended by the committee out of estimates aggregating over $9,000,000 from the departments, and the Senate added, in round numbers, between eight and nine hundred thousand dollars. There are 107 Senate amendments. Unless the bill be sent to conference and a number of these amendments are adjusted in the manner customary in the transaction of the business of the two Houses, it would take an interminable time to dispose of them. There are certain Senate amendments, Mr. Speaker, in which so many Members of the House have indicated a very keen interest that I have heretofore stated that if this rule be adopted and the bill go to conference no final disposition will be made of these amendments.

The report made by the managers upon the part of the House will be in such shape that a separate vote can be had in the House upon the amendments to be indicated. So that Members may understand what, at least, my attitude is, I shall state the amendments I have in mind.

First is amendment No. 8, which takes from the classified service deputy marshals and certain internal-revenue employees; amendment No. 44, to reimburse the State of Ohio for militia equipment lost during the recent floods; Senate amendment 61, which amends the provision of the bill as passed by the House so as to continue either during their lifetime or until they resign or are otherwise removed the five additional circuit judges appointed under the act creating the Court of Commerce. The House not only abolished the Court of Commerce, to take effect the 31st of December, but it abolished the five additional circuit judges created by the act. The Senate amendment changes the provision so as to continue those five judges until either they resign or are removed or die. The next amendment is No. 93, which provides an appropriation for an automobile for the Vice President. The next amendment is amendment No. 97, providing an extra month's pay to the employees of Congress.

There is one other amendment, Mr. Speaker, which I had on the list and overlooked. That is amendment No. 82, providing an appropriation of $25,000 for the commission appointed to report relative to the memorial bridge.

It may be that the managers on the part of the two Houses may not be able to reconcile the differences existing between the two Houses upon other amendments, but these amendments which I have enumerated are the ones that so many Members have indicated a desire to have an opportunity to pass upon, and I believe it to be but proper at this time to state what the attitude would be of those who, under the practice of the House, would be appointed to represent the House relative to these amendments. This will prevent misunderstanding among Members that the adoption of this rule will not prevent a separate vote upon these amendments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. MANN. We did not hear what the amendments were.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall read them again. No. 8, relative to deputy marshals in internal-revenue offices.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will take two or three minutes more to finish.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. 44, to reimburse the State of Ohio for militia equipment; No. 61, relative to the judges of the Commerce Court; No. 82, relative to the Memorial Bridge Commission; No. 93, relating to the Vice President's automobile; and No. 97, relating to the extra month's pay to the employees of Congress.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, can I ask the gentleman about the provision in the bill for the Red Cross Building?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not enumerate it. I do not know whether the managers representing the two Houses will be able to reach an agreement regarding it. If not, it will come back.

Mr. AUSTIN. We shall have an opportunity to vote on that if the House conferees fail to agree?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not say as to that. I am not in a position to state, for the reason that I have not consulted the probable managers on the part of the House as to that amendment, and I am not prepared to state at this time even what my own attitude may be. Of course, as the representatives of the House it is the duty of Members appointed as managers on these conferences to antagonize amendments incorporated in this bill by the Senate, regardless of what their personal views may be, and that necessarily must be my attitude as to all of the Senate amendments.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think we ought to have a separate vote on that Senate amendment unless the House managers are going to yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am unable to state just what the position of the Senate is, and I am equally unable to state what the position of the managers on the part of the House is.

Mr. Speaker, unless somebody wishes further information—

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to inquire as to the amendment on page 32 where there is an apparent increase of salary for the Assistant Attorney General from $7,000 to $9,600. That is amendment 54. Is that a real increase of the salary?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a real increase of the salary by $2,600. The Committee on Appropriations recommended that provision. The Attorney General pointed out that the Government was engaged in the most extensive and most important litigation known to the country in connection with the prosecution of trusts. He desired to so reorganize that part of the Department of Justice which has charge of this work that he could put the work in a shape that would enable him to eliminate to some extent the necessity for the payment of large fees to special counsel. He expressed the belief and advanced reasons to show that the compensation of $9,600 to an attorney competent to have charge of this work, to systematize the drafting of the bills to be filed, was not only not excessive but required by the interests of the Government, if they should be properly served, and the Committee on Appropriations acquiesced when the matter was presented by the department in the idea that this was a wise increase of salary.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not a fact that there has been an increase over the increase which the House allowed?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may be that there is a $600 increase.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman give the House an opportunity for a separate vote on this amendment after the bill comes back from conference?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not say that that will be agreed to. I do not think it is an amendment of such importance that the managers representing the House would be bound regarding it. I do not think that a difference of $2,000 in the salary of the man who is to conduct this litigation on behalf of the Government should be used to delay an agreement upon this bill and thus compel Members to remain here longer than otherwise would be necessary.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not a fact that this is a statutory salary, already fixed by the statute?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; but this proposes to change the statute.

Mr. FOWLER. And it is proposed to be permanent?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. It would be unfair to give the man $9,600 for the balance of this year and then reduce him to $7,000 next year. If the salary is going to be fixed at $9,600, it ought to be permanent.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not subject to a point of order as it now stands?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not now.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] would use some of his time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield, Mr. Speaker, five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GILLET. Mr. Speaker, I presume I shall be one of the conferees and therefore shall probably have an opportunity to discuss more adequately these amendments, which of course five minutes time does not allow me to do.

I am in favor of some of these amendments, and I am opposed to some. I am even in favor of some which the chairman says he opposes and will bring back to the House, but in these five minutes I simply wish to refer to one amendment which, to my point of view, is in principle and in effect more important and more vicious than any other in the bill. That is amendment

No. 8, which provides practically for taking the deputy marshals and deputy collectors of internal revenue out of the civil service. I appreciate how attractive that amendment must look to the majority. I appreciate that Members of the House, whichever party is in the majority, will instinctively be glad to take very many of the officials now under the civil service out from that service because Members of Congress are the ones whom this civil-service act most affects. We are the ones who get the patronage, if there is patronage, and we are the ones who lose it when it is under civil service. Therefore it is very natural for any party which is in power to begin by trying to take from the civil service some of the officers already in it. That side of the House has already in a number of instances manifested its disposition to act in that way.

I remember, as a conferee, having already declined to sign one conference report, because I thought it attacked the civil-service principle. I am glad to hear the chairman say that amendment No. 8 will come back to the House, and I certainly shall support him in that, so you may be sure that the conferees will not agree to this amendment.

President Cleveland was the first one to take these officials out from patronage and put them under the civil service. They remained so a couple of years, I think, and then President McKinley, with the power which the President had and which every President has now, removed them from under the civil service in 1899 and restored them to patronage. And, of course, President Wilson can, by an Executive order, at any moment accomplish just what this amendment accomplishes. I regret that President McKinley did that. Then, in 1906, President Roosevelt put them back under the civil service, and I presume that side of the House will be disposed to intimate that, having filled the offices with Republicans, he then wished to cloak them under the civil service and make them permanent. I believe that President Roosevelt did it for the genuine purpose of making this branch of the Government a permanent civil service and for taking it away from patronage.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLET. I have not the time. I believe he did it, not for the purposes of patronage, but from real zeal for civil service. From that time until now seven years have elapsed, and during those seven years about one-third of the places have been filled by competitive examinations, so that now a little over two-thirds of them are filled with the old appointments—some made clear back under President Cleveland, but of course a majority made later—and one-third under competitive examination. Of course, the same argument is open which has always been made against any extension, that it is a mere attempt to cover under civil service the officials which are there now, that it is done not because of the merit system, but to protect them from patronage. But if you are not afraid to trust your President, if he thinks that the arguments which are made that these men are of such a class that they ought to be excepted from the civil service, he can except them by an Executive order.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I presume that because of my membership upon the Committee on Appropriations and the fact that I may be called upon to act as a conferee on the part of the House upon this bill, and in view of that fact I desire to state this for the information of the Members: The conferees who have been appointed on the part of the Senate and those who probably will be appointed by the House have been in conference informally upon this bill, and I think in all probability we will be able to report either late this afternoon or at the morning session to-morrow to the House our action upon the bill, and be in a position to have submitted to the House at that time for vote the amendments which the gentleman from New York has stated the House will be permitted to vote upon. I make this statement on account of the importance of the measure, in order that Members may be informed and may govern themselves accordingly. I deem it most important, Mr. Speaker, that this bill be passed as early as possible, that the public service may be performed, and that Members may have an opportunity to go home, and until the conference report upon this bill is disposed of I think it is the duty of the Members of the House, those who are here to remain here, and those who are not here to come back and remain with those who have been here all summer, who have been attending to the public business in order that that public business may be disposed of. [Applause.]

Something has been said with reference to amendment No. 8 by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET] and by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. As far as I am concerned, I want to say that upon that amendment I am virtually upon record in this House, and when the opportunity occurs again I shall go on record as being in favor of it. [Applause.]

I offered in substance the same amendment when the bill was before the House in September, and it was ruled out on a point of order. The amendment I then offered is as follows:

All Executive orders heretofore made placing the positions of deputy marshal and deputy internal-revenue collector in the classified service and all regulations made thereunder are hereby revoked, and hereafter appointments to said positions shall be made in the same manner as obtained prior to the making of such Executive order.

Mr. Speaker, I do not admit that the Democratic Party or its members are to be classed as spoilsmen acting in violation of the civil-service law when we undertake to say that deputy United States collectors and deputy United States marshals shall not remain in the civil service, where they are required by law or by regulation to give a bond to their superior officer for the faithful performance of their duty. The law as it stands now, under section 3148 of the Revised Statutes, requires every deputy collector to give a bond to his superior collector and requires the collector to give a bond to the Government. It does not require the deputy marshal to give a bond to his superior, but it requires the marshal to give a bond to the Government, and these men are in every instance responsible for the acts of their deputies. I do not concede that it is proper administration of law that a deputy marshal or a deputy internal-revenue collector, who is sent out to serve processes, who is sent out to arrest men in the mountains or elsewhere for violation of internal-revenue laws, shall be fresh from college or school and be able to compete successfully with professors or school-teachers or schoolboys in respect to the performance of their duties. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLET] has stated that Mr. Cleveland placed these officers under the civil-service law by an Executive order. None of them have been placed under the civil service by action of the House or of the Senate or of the Congress. They are there today by Executive order, and when the time comes when the House, which has the supreme power in enacting the law, can not change an Executive order made by a President, it is time for us to adjourn and leave the administration and enactment of laws to the Executive. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The positions of deputy collector of internal revenue were first brought into the competitive service by the Executive order of May 6, 1896; later by Executive order of November 2, 1896, one position of chief deputy collector in each district was excepted from competitive examination. By Executive order of July 27, 1897, one additional position of deputy collector in each district in which the number of employees in the office of the collector exceeded four, and one position of deputy collector in each stamp agency or branch office were excepted from competitive examination. By Executive order of May 29, 1899, all positions of deputy collectors of internal revenue were excepted from competitive examination. All positions of deputy collectors of internal revenue then remained excepted from competitive examination until the Executive order of November 7, 1906, which restored them all to the competitive classified service except those receiving less than $300 a year compensation.

From 1897 to 1906, nine years during a Republican administration, every United States deputy collector, every deputy United States marshal was subject to the spoils system of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, in 1906, President Roosevelt was to retire in 1908, and when he was preparing to have nominated and reelected his own successor, having filled the offices of deputy collector and marshals with Republicans—and some very disagreeable Republicans in my part of the country, some who could not be appointed and should not be appointed to any office in any part of the country—restored these offices by Executive order to the civil service. Now, with all that done, when Congress says that, in answer to the mandate of our constituents, representing the people, we will do that by law which McKinley and Roosevelt did by Executive order, we are confronted with an appeal for the "snivel service." [Applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitancy in saying, without any desire to affect the efficiency of the civil-service officers in proper offices, that I for one, representing my people, representing good government, desiring to have the best service obtainable in those offices, shall, when this amendment comes back, join with a sufficient number of men in this House to agree to the Senate amendment and abolish this miserable pretext of "snivel service." [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP].

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, yesterday when this resolution was under discussion, had not a parliamentary situation intervening prevented it, I would have offered the following amendment:

That the House conferees are hereby instructed to reject the Senate amendment to H. R. 7898, page 2, beginning at line 19 and ending at line 8, page 3, and to refuse to agree to any modification thereof providing for the impairment of the full efficiency of the act approved January 16, 1883, to "regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," or any amendments thereto.

Had I heard or known of the intentions expressed in the frank statement just made by the capable chairman of the Appropriations Committee of this House, I would not have looked so much to the offering of that amendment as being important at this particular time. I was informed soon afterwards that it was the conviction of a majority, at least, of the conferees that that amendment could not prevail, in so far as an agreement by them is concerned, and after the statement made upon this floor that there would be ample time for debate allowed to every Member upon this amendment numbered 8, as well as a number of others, I am thoroughly satisfied that every opportunity will be given to all Members to express themselves upon this question—to my mind one of the most momentous in consequences to follow that this new House of Representatives has had to consider since the beginning of the session. The limited time I have in which to debate this question will not permit me to go at length into the history of the civil-service reform movement. I am very glad to say that 30 years ago last January this act was placed upon the statute books, that it was enacted by a Republican Congress, but introduced by an illustrious Democrat from Ohio, Senator George H. Pendleton.

The enactment of the civil-service law of 1883 was the culmination of an agitation for some such reform, following almost every change in the administration for a half century previous. The abuses which grew up under the wholesale dismissal of an army of officeholders became more and more apparent. Not only did the efficiency of the public service suffer from such change, but there was justly laid at the door of the spoils system the complaint that it was responsible for the powerful political machines which the disposition of patronage created. While during that long period of time no administration was exempt from such charges, it rarely followed that the party in power did not have to pay for its excesses in the loss of the support of the voters. With the tremendous growth of the country came an added responsibility to those in authority, and more and more the need of efficiency of service became apparent. The example alone of its benefits in the establishment of a civil-service system in the Postal Department of our Government bespeaks not only its value but indeed its necessity. The increase of the volume of business in that particular department, involving the expenditure of but a few millions per year in the days of the Jackson administration to that of nearly $300,000,000 annually at the present time, is not much more superlative in comparison than the increased efficiency in the manner of the distribution of mail from that period to this. The development in the business transacted by other departments of the Government differs from this illustration only in degree. Almost insensibly the unparalleled growth of the Nation, necessarily resulting in the creation of new departments with many additional offices to be filled, brought to the minds of the best thinkers of the country the fact that after all the running of a Government was a business matter; in fact, even if its size alone be considered, the greatest business in the Nation. Such a matter of prime importance was efficiency of service. It was not strange, therefore, that when the act in question was passed it received in its favor a 5 to 1 vote in the Senate and more than 3 to 1 in the House. From that day to this its operation has been so successful that no party dare assail it. One result of its enactment was the establishment of the same principle in a considerable number of the States, as well as in many of the leading cities of the country. In both State and city government the establishment of the spoils system—popularly called machine politics—has been in almost all cases the only cause for the ultimate overthrow of those in authority.

It seems to me, my colleagues, that if there ever was a time when the Democratic Party can afford to—nay, ought to—resist encroachments upon the civil-service system, it is now. Surely such a policy is not inconsistent with the tenets of Democratic faith. One of the things that will be longest remembered of the Cleveland administration, aside from his exhibition of courage of conviction, was his consistent support of the civil service as applied to the Government. But we need not go back as far as that period. Let me call the attention of my fellow Democratic Members to the civil-service plank of our platform at our last national presidential convention at Baltimore. I quote as follows:

The law pertaining to the civil service should be honestly and rightly enforced to the end that merit and ability shall be the standard of appointment and promotion rather than service rendered to a political party; and we favor a reorganization of the civil service, with adequate compensation commensurate with the class of work performed, for all officers and employees; we also recommend the extension to all classes of civil-service employees of the benefits of the provisions of the employers' liability law; we also recognize the right of direct petition to Congress by employees for the redress of grievance.

That, gentlemen, is what we said at our last convention, and upon that platform we appealed for a vote of confidence to the electors of the country.

Indeed, Senator Miller, during the debates upon this question incident to the passage of the civil-service act of 1883, hardly overstated the matter when he said:

Instead of patronage being necessary for the existence of a party, I do not hesitate to say that patronage will sooner or later destroy any or every party which may have control of patronage.

The conspicuous examples as they had to do with the ups and downs of both political parties in the State of New York given by him fully sustained the Senator's statement.

I do not know that I can give any better reason why this basal law of reform ought to stay upon the statute books inviolate from the hands of the spoilsman than to cite the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], who just preceded me, in his complaints of the flagrant violation of its provisions. I want to say for the encouragement of my good Democratic friends, because I have always been a Democrat and cast my first vote for Gen. Hancock way back in 1881, if we want to build an enduring party structure, maintaining it upon a rock foundation, keep this statute inviolate. We are going to stay in power so long, my friends, with the wise and patriotic man who has been guiding the affairs of the Nation at the other end of the Avenue, that long before we lose our control of the Government we will have our full share of these offices filled with good loyal Democrats in the natural order of things without the abrogation of this salutary measure. Gentlemen, do not become impatient. One of the highest tributes ever paid to Democracy was by a Republican Senator, Warner H. Miller, over in the Senate during the debates upon this measure, in which he pointed out the fact that the Democratic Party did not need patronage, because it could survive without it.

I remember many years ago when a very talented predecessor of mine, Judge Geddes, from the city of Mansfield, in my district, said to me right after Grover Cleveland's first election, "Why, Mr. SHARP, we are a great deal stronger without patronage than we are with it." I am inclined, after this 30 years of time, to heartily agree with him in so far as militant aggressiveness is concerned. It is because I want Democratic principles to triumph and the party to continue in power that I deplore this attack on the merit system.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SAUNDERS). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHARP. I wish to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I find myself constrained upon this occasion to vote against the rule brought in by the Committee on Rules. I feel that I am compelled to do so because I am not in sympathy with that part of it which says that we shall disagree to the Senate amendment generally known as the Overman amendment, the amendment which takes out of the civil service deputy collectors and deputy marshals. I see that the author of that amendment, Senator OVERMAN, is upon the floor of this House, and I for one wish to congratulate him most heartily for having gotten it into the bill. [Applause.]

A deputy, whether he be a collector or a marshal, carries with him the right to act for his principal. I do not believe that any deputy should act for his principal unless that deputy be chosen by the principal. I would take the same position if this amendment were to be to the advantage of the Republican Party. I do not believe, as I said, that a deputy should act for the principal unless the deputy is selected by the principal. But this amendment has for its purpose now a correct one, the Democratic one, that when Democrats are in control they should have the offices. [Applause.]

I am one who does not believe that when we have a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress that that completes and makes a Democratic administration. I do not believe we will have or can have a Democratic administration until every office is administered by a Democrat. [Applause.] We find the departments in Washington, we find the departments in every part of the United States, full of Republicans not in sympathy with the Democratic administration; and they are asked to administer the affairs of the Democratic administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They are there to make trouble for and to betray a Democratic administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have but three minutes.

Mr. HELM. Were you ever collector of internal revenue?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; I was collector of internal revenue under the last Cleveland administration for the second largest internal-revenue collection district in the United States, and I know whereof I speak. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized for an additional two minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. When I was interrupted, Mr. Speaker, I was about to say that I am against the adoption of this rule, because I believe we ought to instruct the conferees upon the part of the House to accept that amendment in advance of their appointment, and then if they do not want to accept it we ought to have other conferees.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I say to the gentleman that he can not be more in sympathy with the amendment than I am, but I believe the amendment requires some little amendment in order to make it effective.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I know to what part of the amendment the gentleman refers, and I am not prepared to admit that it needs amendment. The gentleman from Georgia refers to that part of the amendment which says that deputy collectors must give bonds to the principal, or to the collector.

Mr. BARTLETT. No; I do not. If the words "existing regulations" are left in this amendment, it will be ineffective. That is what I mean.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am not prepared to admit that. I am in favor of adopting this amendment just as it is, rather than to take chances of its going into unfriendly hands, into the hands of conferees that we have reason to believe are not in favor of taking these offices out of the protection of the civil service. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky who has just spoken has stated that he is opposed to the adoption of this rule, and for a logical reason. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] looks at it in another way, from a logical standpoint. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] objects to it on another proposition. Therefore the point seems to me—

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman misstates me. I am not opposed to the rule.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I understand. The gentleman is only opposed to a certain attitude on the part of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP].

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; I am glad I am.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Certainly. But the point I want to make is that your arguments and those of the gentleman from Ohio are arguments as to why we should oppose the adoption of this rule. This rule declares that we are opposed to all these Senate amendments, and there is not a Member on the floor of this House who would disagree to every amendment. Each Member is in favor of some of them and opposed to others. Then why should we pass a rule which is directly in opposition to our wishes? We do not wish to disagree to the Senate amendments in gross, and when the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] says that these matters in difference will come back on the floor of the House for full debate we ask what assurance we have of that situation. The same thing was promised in regard to the tariff bill amendments. The tariff bill contained an unjustifiable Senate provision—that relating to the civil service. The bill came back from the Senate with an amendment tacked on to it taking from the civil-service protection the general force of the Internal Revenue Bureau, and 400 to 600 men to be appointed under this bill, according to the estimate of Mr. HULL, of Tennessee, with 290 men now in the employ of the Internal Revenue Bureau, means 790 men taken out of the classified service. Yet when that legislation came back to the House we had no chance to vote on it. We were perfectly helpless. We disagreed in gross to the Senate amendments, and in that way had no opportunity to vote on the proposition on its individual merits.

Another proposition that was brought to this House from the Senate was the cotton-futures amendment, called the Clarke amendment. Gentlemen arose on the floor of this House and said that President Wilson was in favor of the Underwood amendment as a substitute for the Clarke amendment. With all the earnestness and apparent sincerity in the world it was declared that that substitute was ingrafted upon the tariff bill in good faith; and yet in the final action a preconceived plan was carried out by which there was no legislation whatever.

I ask, Why should we not take up these amendments in order and vote on them honestly? If we are opposed to amendment numbered 8, on page 2, which is a vicious blow against the merit system, let us vote against it. If we favor the spoils system, we should not be afraid to say so.

There is another amendment in regard to arbitration and conciliation that I would like to have a special vote on.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Has the gentleman any idea how long it would take to vote on these 106 amendments if they were voted on separately?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will say that the House has sufficient importance and dignity as a law-making body to express its opinion directly on these amendments without taking them entirely on faith.

Mr. HARDWICK. It could not be done in two weeks, and it is hard to get a quorum here even for a single day.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will ask the gentleman what else we are going to do more important than careful consideration of these vital questions.

Mr. HARDWICK. Some gentlemen want to go home. The gentleman himself has been away, has he not? [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. You notice I am here on the job this morning. [Laughter.]

There is at the present time a proposition for an electrical switchboard, introduced by a gentleman on the other side, and no attention is paid to it. Other matters ought to be taken up and should be given attention.

But just now I want to call to the attention of the House a strong plea which comes from the National Civil Service Reform League on the question directly at issue. It is indorsed by prominent members of the Democratic Party. I read:

The urgent deficiency appropriation bill (H. R. 7898) as it passed the Senate October 4 contains, on page 2, beginning at line 18, the following proviso, inserted by the Senate:

"Provided, That hereafter any deputy collector of internal revenue, or deputy marshal, who may be required by law or existing regulations to execute a bond to the collector of internal revenue or United States marshal to secure faithful performance of official duty may be appointed by the said collector or marshal, who may require such bond without regard to the provisions of an act of Congress entitled 'An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States,' approved January 16, 1883, and amendments thereto, or any rule or regulation made in pursuance thereof, and the officer requiring said bond shall have power to revoke the appointment of any subordinate officer or employee and appoint his successor at his discretion without regard to the act, amendments, rules, or regulations aforesaid."

On behalf of the National Civil Service Reform League, and in the interests of efficiency and sound administration, I respectfully but earnestly urge that you aid in securing the elimination of this vicious provision.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman any information as to whether those gentlemen ever made a protest like that under the McKinley administration?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I may say that one of these men is the Hon. George Gray, of Delaware, who, it will be remembered, was a very prominent candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination some years ago.

Mr. BARTLETT. Those Republicans who are prominent in that organization never raised an objection to this proposition under the McKinley administration.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], with all the honesty and earnestness and frankness so characteristic of him, is opposed to civil service in these positions. [Laughter.] But he should have an opportunity to vote on the proposition, and so should every other Member.

When the bill was under consideration in this House I took occasion to make a point of order against the provision that increased the salary of the Assistant Attorney General $2,000 a year, and it was taken out without any word of protest whatever, because it was in violation of the rule.

Now it comes back in this bill in aggravated form, appropriating a sum in excess of the original amount. On page 32 you will find that that salary is increased $2,000 instead of $2,000, making the salary of the Assistant Attorney General $9,600, when the Attorney General himself originally started at a salary of $1,500, that salary being increased subsequently, with monotonous regularity, along with all the other department heads and subordinate employees.

Now, this is a Senate amendment putting $2,600 increase on the salary of the Assistant Attorney General without any reason whatever, and here we are put in a position where we shall not have an opportunity to vote on that iniquitous proposal.

I claim that it is not fair, Mr. Speaker, for us to disagree in gross to Senate amendments here, thus preventing an honest vote upon them. Here is a proposition which will take out of the classified service 1,500 employees and put them under the old spoils system [applause on the Democratic side] which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] and others, I notice, are so much in favor of in this hour of Democratic sway. There are 1,257 deputy collectors of internal revenue and there are over 200 deputy marshals now in the classified service who will be directly affected, along with many others indirectly affected.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman know how long it will take the Civil Service Commission now if the deputies to be appointed under the income-tax provision and under this bill are required to be examined under civil-service rules? Does the gentleman know how long it will take to get the necessary number? There are 200 on the roll now. It would take 90 days to hold even an examination.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I want to say that in the past, from 1896 to 1912, the service under the merit system has increased in efficiency of collection 120 per cent, and the expenses have increased but 26 per cent. I want to say it is worth while to wait even 90 days to carry on the merit system and assure a continuance of the efficiency under the present methods.

Mr. BARTLETT. I grant that is true with reference to certain sections of the classified service.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] to yield, and he did not. Why did he yield to the gentleman from Georgia and not to me? [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from New Jersey can not take the gentleman from Pennsylvania off the floor in that way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a Member's right.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take the gentleman's time, but if the gentleman lived in the section of the country where I live he would see how inefficient and vicious is the service that we have had under the administration for eight years, during which time we have had a negro collector of internal revenue.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield for a speech on the race question.

Mr. BARTLETT. I withdraw that, if it is offensive to the gentleman.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Oh, that is all right. My friend from Georgia is always fair and square and out in the open. I only want to say that when you can increase the efficiency of the service under the merit system 120 per cent and only increase the expenses 26 per cent—

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will yield for a brief question.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. But it is not a brief question. It is something that will enlighten the House.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I have not time to yield for any speech. The gentleman from New Jersey can get time himself. I have no time to yield for a speech or a statement, however enlightening the gentleman thinks it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the point I make is that such violation of a principle by which efficiency is increased 120 per cent as compared with expense of 26 per cent—

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that the gentleman can not make a parliamentary inquiry without making a point of order and taking the gentleman off his feet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is true.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to continue.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I have not time to yield for any statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. But the gentleman said that it was a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from New Jersey can get all the time he desires in which to make any speech that he wishes to make.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. It is not a speech, but it is a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey is out of order.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the civil-service system, as was so ably described by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP], with its efficiency, is based upon a certain rule, and this Senate provision is so violently destructive of that rule that I desire to quote it word for word:

In all cases selections shall be made with sole reference to merit and fitness and without regard to political considerations. No inquiry shall be made as to the political or religious opinions or affiliations of any eligible, and no recommendation in any way based thereon shall be received, considered, or filed by any officer concerned in making selections or appointments. Any such recommendation in writing forwarded to any such officer shall be at once returned to the writer with attention invited to the purport of this order, and attention hereto shall be similarly directed in connection with any verbal recommendation. Where it is found that there has been a violation of these provisions by any officer concerned in making selections or appointments such fact shall be cause for the immediate removal of such officer from the service.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. This Senate provision is clearly in violation of the fundamental rule of the civil service.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he will not yield to me?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has already yielded to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I will yield to the gentleman from New Jersey after the gentleman from South Carolina if he has a question.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania think it a remarkable condition when the appointments are so regulated under that civil-service regulation that every single civil-service employee in the town from which I come should be a negro, and that the outgoing administration so administered that law that every employee selected there is a negro, and that a white man could not come in for any position under that whatever.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman—

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Just one moment.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I simply want to say, in commenting upon the statement made by the gentleman from South Carolina, that when we adopt a proposition here which puts party loyalty or loyalty to a political boss in a State ahead of efficiency we have come to the parting of the ways. It is not a question of race, it is a question of merit and efficiency.

Mr. GORDON. Why does not the gentleman answer the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I desired to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I am in sympathy with the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, if the civil-service law is to be maintained on our statute books, it ought to be administered on rules of fairness and equity, and should not be subverted and made to serve partisan greed and political graft. In glancing over the past administration of this law we are forced to the conclusion that it has been shamefully abused.

I am informed by the Civil Service Commission that on June 30, 1912, the public employees in the Government service were divided as follows:

Competitive classified civil service.....	236,061
Noncompetitive classified civil service.....	61,388
Unclassified civil service.....	59,423
Panama Canal service.....	28,191

Total.....	385,063
Presidential appointments.....	10,397

Grand total..... 395,460

Since June 30, 1912, Mr. Taft has placed 36,333 fourth-class postmasters under the classified civil service, and Mr. Wilson has placed them under the competitive classified civil service. Add this number to the 236,061 and we now have 272,393 Government employees under the competitive classified civil service. This is not quite all, but I will not now go into further details.

By an investigation of the political complexion of the employees in the various departments of our Federal Government it has been approximately ascertained that on the 4th of March, 1913, 95 per cent of all the civil-service employees were Republicans, while only 5 per cent were Democrats.

At the time of the passage of the civil-service law in 1883 practically all of the public positions were filled with Republicans, which constitutes about 60 per cent of our present civil-service force. Since that time about 40 per cent has been added on account of civil service; but it is remarkable when we find that three-fifths of this 40 per cent came into the public service under Executive orders, and that only two-fifths came in under competitive civil-service examination.

It is more remarkable when we consider that 4½ per cent of the Democrats in the public service on the 4th of March last came in under Executive orders, while only three-fourths of 1 per cent of that number came in under competitive civil-service examination.

If this be true, it is a terrible indictment either against the intelligence of Democrats or against the administration of the civil-service law, and each Member of this House has a right to his own opinion concerning the matter. [Applause.] For my own part, I can not indorse the administration of a law which gives 95 per cent of the employees in the public service to a party which registers less than one-half of the votes of the country and only 5 per cent to an equally great party with a better understanding of government and more devoted to the wants of the common people. [Applause.]

Mr. RUPLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; I will yield, although I only had three minutes to begin with.

Mr. RUPLEY. I want to inquire where the gentleman got those figures?

Mr. FOWLER. They came through an investigation of the various departments with the assistance of a Republican of 20 years' service in the Government.

Mr. RUPLEY. Who is this Republican; name him?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I am very sure there are many on the other side who join me in the regret that so many very important amendments which are to be passed on by this House can not be considered by this House. There has been ample opportunity for such consideration, and one wonders why at least a dozen of these questions should not have been considered and discussed by the House. If the proposition had been accepted which was made by the leader on the Republican side [Mr. MANN] three days ago, all of the dozen questions that he then suggested that ought to be considered might have been considered and debated in this House. And is this a proper method? I challenge an inquiry in the conscience of any Member of this House. Is it a proper method of legislation when men are compelled, no matter how they may vote, to stultify themselves? Either he must vote for or against this motion. There are certain of these questions for which I desire to vote and some of them against which I desire to vote. There is no opportunity for expression of individual judgment by individual legislators. Take this question, for instance, regarding this violation of the spirit and the letter of the law with reference to civil service. Gentlemen here say that the Republicans have violated the law. I challenge the accuracy of the statement of gentlemen who contend that 95 per cent of Government employees under the civil service are Republicans, and we have not been able to get any authority whatever regarding the suggestions—

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I put in the RECORD to show the law was violated when this matter was up in the House.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I am sorry, but I can not grant further time, Mr. Speaker. I can not go into a discussion of that question further than to say that I do not believe that the civil service shows that 95 per cent of those who are eligible are Republicans.

I do not believe that such facts exist, and, gentlemen, if that be true, that does not excuse your present violation of the law nor does it excuse your attempt to pass laws that will make the merit system noneffective or that will strike them from the statute books. Is it the way to cure the maladministration of a law to repeal it? You now have the execution of the law. It is a just law; it is a righteous law. If you say the Republicans have been violating the law, have not been properly enforcing it, have been guilty of maladministration regarding it, then you enforce it as it ought to be; you put it into operation as it should be; you do what the law requires in both letter and spirit and—

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. No, Mr. Speaker; I can not yield; and therefore I say I should be glad of an opportunity to vote against such proposal, and, Mr. Speaker, I should be glad of the opportunity, if I could, to vote for the amendment that is known as 107. It is called here a proposition to secure a building in commemoration of the women of the Civil War; but we all know, Mr. Speaker, what it is. It is to establish headquarters and administration facilities in this city for the Red Cross to do its work efficiently in the United States, and, in a sense, to put it under Government supervision. We all know what the Red Cross work is. There is no present arm of the Government, either in war or in peace, that is doing more practically for the betterment of humanity than that voluntary association known as the Red Cross. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN].

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, having only three minutes, I prefer not to be interrupted. We are saying a great deal here about the employees. There ought to be a word said about ourselves. I had stated the other day that our leaders, so to speak, were in fault as to the conditions here on account of absenteeism. We had the spectacle here the other day of a great measure before us, leaders absent; there was a conference committee appointed which took away four of the great men from our side—

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. And KINKEAD of New Jersey.

Mr. DONOVAN. And left our side in the charge of the Banking Committee—

Mr. BARTLETT. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT. The point of order is that no gentleman from the floor is entitled to discuss matters not pertaining to the rule.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] may proceed in the three minutes that have been allotted to him, in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that the gentleman from Connecticut be allowed to proceed in order. Those in favor of the motion will answer "aye," and those opposed "no." [After a pause.] The ayes have it, and the gentleman from Connecticut will proceed in order.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, in order to remove the charge I made, it deserves an explanation or an apology. I had in my mind, gentlemen, our leaders who have been absent from here for more than four months. I had in mind the gentleman from Alabama, whose last appearance here was on the 7th of May, 1913, when he talked upon the subject of economic conditions in the South and especially in Alabama. Now, that great leader is responsible for the absenteeism, because when men of his type leave this House the new Member, or a Member of a shorter term of service than he, will leave. When that great naval constructor, so to speak, who thinks he is fit to be President of these United States, has taken himself away from his duties in this House, when we have sent out an order by the way of the Sergeant at Arms—

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Since I got the time for the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN], is it not only fair, under parliamentary usage, that he should say something nice about me and not talk about these other gentlemen? [Laughter.]

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, when a Congressman—

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired. [Laughter.] If there is nobody else who wishes to address the House, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KINKEAD] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the last speaker on his faithful attendance on the gatherings of this House. There has never been an occasion when a quorum was necessary when the gentleman from Connecticut was not present to add his presence to the number of those who were required to constitute a quorum in this House. I sincerely hope that the good people of Connecticut, irrespective of party, recognizing honest worth, will send back to us a man that every one of us, whether we are on this side of the House or on the other side of the House, hope will be returned to this body. But, Mr. Speaker, that is not my particular purpose in rising to-day. There has been some doubt as to the reason why there is a quorum present to-day. Let no man who is within the range of my voice question at another time the reason for the presence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend and revise my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to extend and revise his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BARTON].

ECONOMY.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, the word "economy" is the watchword of every platform orator and is preached to the people in the platforms of the several political parties. This word seems to admit of so many interpretations, when applied to State and governmental business that a retrospective view of the work that is now and has been done convinces one that Webster made an error when he wrote his definition.

I look out of the window of my office and can see one definition of economy in the destruction of expensive and useful buildings now being razed to the ground. To do this costs the Government practically $4,000,000, and while the work has just commenced it will take much more of the public fund to fulfill the object of this devastation and build a park.

No one on earth appreciates a park more than I. The green grass, the green trees, and the open air add to the many comforts afforded, and were it not for the fact that the city of Washington already has scattered throughout her confines many beautiful parks, built mostly by the United States Government, I would feel that such action is economy, as it provides for the rich and poor alike a haven of rest.

But as the United States Government is now paying to the property owners of Washington approximately $600,000 per annum in rent for buildings in which are housed various Government offices, and in which are contained many of our valuable and precious records in unsafe quarters, it seems to me that a better definition of the word "economy" would be to cease building parks and build for the various branches of the Government buildings and homes and thereby furnish a safe place for keeping the records and valuable papers of the departments.

Right here let me call attention to our main thoroughfare—Pennsylvania Avenue. Would it not have been far better for the Government to have purchased the unsightly buildings, especially those adjacent to the Capitol Building, and razed them and have erected in their stead imposing structures to house the various offices of the different departments that cost the Government an annual rental of $600,000? This, in my mind, would be more in keeping with the plan to beautify Washington and at the same time be a saving to the Government.

ARMOR PLATE AND ARMOR PLANTS.

Since 1887 we have been contributing to the Steel Trust more than a million dollars' profit annually. While it seems impossible to ascertain the exact cost of producing armor plate, gun forgings, and building an armor plant, for at all times has our Government investigators been baffled by this monopoly; yet throughout the various reports issued by the investigators we have gained enough information and sufficient light to enable us to know without a doubt that we are being systematically robbed.

The problem of a Navy is a big one and involves one of the great expenditures of the Government, and while the American people as a whole desire that we be in a position to protect our country, they do not desire that we pay tribute to the trusts and moneyed interests in securing this protection, especially to those that have from time immemorial fattened on war, war scares, and the necessities of the public.

The building of a Navy is like Tennyson's Brook, it goes on forever; and it may also be likened to fashions for women, as it seems but a short time a woman's skirt or hat becomes old-fashioned; and thus it is with an armored cruiser, they soon become obsolete and are relegated to the scrap heap of "has beens." In proof of this statement I insert a statement from the Navy Department showing a list of vessels stricken from the Navy Register during the past three years:

List of naval vessels stricken from the Navy Register during the fiscal year 1911.

Alliance, sailing ship.
Hist, converted yacht.
Mindoro, gunboat.
Paragua, gunboat.
Pensacola, receiving ship.
Stiletto, wooden torpedo boat.

During the fiscal year 1912.

San Marcos, ex-Texas, old battleship.
Locust, tug.
Yosemite, ex-Ingalls, old Army transport.
McKee, torpedo boat.
Cushing, torpedo boat.
Ericsson, torpedo boat.
Yankee, transport; lost.
Atlanta, old cruiser.
Talbot, torpedo boat.
Isla de Cuba, captured Spanish gunboat.
Alvarado, captured Spanish gunboat.

During the fiscal year 1913.

Jamestown, returned to Navy by Marine Hospital Service.
Rowan, torpedo boat.
Porter, torpedo boat.
Wabash, receiving ship.
Nipsic, prison ship.
Puritan, old monitor.
A-1, old submarine.
Chickasaw, tug.
Manila, prison ship.
Newark, old cruiser.

A constant warfare is waged by the manufacturers of armor and the manufacturers of projectiles to pierce it, so that a ship that to-day may be a first-class battleship, which costs us millions, next year may be useless. A most powerful influence is back of the building of battleships—patriotism; the trusts, that furnish the material to build them; the ambitious naval officer seeking promotion, are the most potent—so that until all nations agree to cease building battleships and leave their destinies and differences to a board of arbitration the building will go on.

The Bureau of Corporations have been making an extensive investigation of the steel industry, and quite naturally one would think that in this inquiry some attention would be devoted to the production of armor plate and gun forgings. Thinking that possibly some information had been gleaned along this line I communicated with the department, which brought forth the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
BUREAU OF CORPORATIONS,
Washington, January 14, 1913.

HON. SILAS R. BARTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 12th instant making inquiry whether this bureau's report on the steel industry discusses the cost of armor plate is duly received.

All data regarding cost of production are contained in part 3 of the above-mentioned report, which you have apparently already received. Part 2, which also discusses cost of production, was merely a preliminary report on the subject. The costs of armor plate are not shown or discussed in either of these reports, and no investigation was made by the bureau on this subject.

Practically all the armor plate produced in the United States is made at three plants, and the United States Government is the only important purchaser. The Navy Department has from time to time made investigations as to the cost of armor plate and the prices. For these reasons the bureau did not deem it necessary to include this product, especially as it was not practicable to cover the entire field of the steel industry.

In compliance with your request, I have directed that there be sent to you the two previous volumes of the report on the steel industry, namely, parts 1 and 2.

Very respectfully,

FRANCIS WALKER,
Acting Commissioner.

The only reason given for not making inquiry concerning this branch of the steel industry is that the Navy Department has from time to time made investigations as to the cost of armor plate and prices. Let us examine these reports of the naval investigators and see if they have given us dependable data on which to base definite conclusions:

On December 31, 1895, the United States Senate passed a resolution inquiring into the increase of the price of armor; whether same is fair and reasonable; whether the issuance of any patents was expedited at the request of the Navy Department, and who were the owners of said patents; and whether any legislation is necessary to cheapen the price of armor for vessels. On February 11, 1897, the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs submitted a report in conformity with this resolution, and which report was confined principally to recommendations providing for legislation to regulate the action of naval officers and Government officials who had patents issued to them as well as to regulate the employment of naval officers by Government contractors. But the report shows that the Government was paying, and had paid, to the Carnegie Co. and The Bethlehem Steel Co. under Secretaries Herbert, Whitney, and Tracy, sums for armor plate ranging from $500 per ton for the lowest to $600 for the highest, the Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. being the only other bidder. The same report shows that the Bethlehem Iron Co. sold to England this same armor for sums ranging from $413 to $438 per ton. While it was impossible for the Government to secure any information from the companies direct regarding the cost of the manufacture of armor plate, naval officers acting in the capacity of Government inspectors reported that in their opinion the average cost of labor and material to produce a ton of armor plate would amount to $250. The report further states "this sum now appears excessive," and the committee reached the conclusion that until further inquiry is made $350 per ton ought to be the limit for armor purchased by the United States. However, in 1896, when this sum was specified by amendment to the naval appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1897, the House disagreed and the matter went to conference, and in the disagreement a clause was inserted in its stead directing the Secretary of the Navy to examine into the actual cost of armor plate and the price for same which should be equitably paid.

In compliance with the instructions given in this clause Secretary Herbert caused an investigation to be made, and issued a voluminous report in House Document No. 151, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, which tells the difficulty of securing information from the officials of the armor plants, but through Government inspectors, naval officers, and others detailed by the Government various estimates were submitted, giving the value of armor plants, and so forth; also an English and French estimate of the cost of the erection and establishing of an armor plant. The English estimated cost of establishing an armor plant, exclusive of the cost of land, is $1,590,074, and the French estimate 3,500,000 francs. A board consisting of Lieut. Karl Roher, Lieut. Kossuth Niles, and Lieut. A. A. Ackerman, which was called the "Roher board," reported that a complete plant, including land and everything, can be built for the sum of $3,537,000, and while the Roher board reported the components of the cost of 3,000 tons of armor amounted to a sum sufficient to make one ton cost $423.41 they included in their estimate every possible expense and contingency that they could think of, thus giving the manufacturers the benefit of their estimate. Lieut. Commander Rogers, inspector of ordnance, Bethlehem Iron Works, reports his estimate as follows: Reforged armor, $227.63; single-forged armor, $215.24.

However, these prices may vary some, and the variation depends upon the output per annum. This confirms the statement in the previous report that the estimated cost of $250 per ton made at that time was excessive. In this same report, on page 21, the Secretary of the Navy states that the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies were in sharp competition for the Russian trade, and that the Bethlehem Co. secured the contract for armor for one ship at the low price of $249 per ton, at the same time agreeing to manufacture armor for two other ships, if required, at the same price, but in the same report, in Exhibit No. 7, the following statement was noted:

It is known that after the first Bethlehem contract with the Russian Government there was a meeting in Paris of representatives of nearly all, if not all, the armor makers of the world. Whether any definite arrangements were made as to the price to be paid for armor in the future is not known. It would seem, however, that some general arrangement was reached fixing the minimum price of nickel-steel face-hardened armor of superior quality at not less than about $520 per ton.

On February 8, 1898, Mr. Hale, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate, issued a report and hearings before the committee relative to the construction of an armor-plate plant, and in which Hon. John D. Long, Secretary of the Navy, stated that bids were received and opened by the Navy Department for the construction of an armor plant, but that he was not authorized by Congress to contract for same, thus placing the blame direct on Congress. (S. Doc. No. 127, 2d sess. 55th Cong.)

Pursuant to the requirements of the clause in the naval appropriation bill of March 3, 1905, making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1906, for making a thorough inquiry as to the cost of armor plate and armor plant, the Acting Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Truman H. Newberry, issued a report (H. R. Doc. No. 193, 59th Cong., 2d sess.), in which the following statement is made:

From both the Bethlehem and Carnegie companies the board received much interesting information covering the value of investments in their armor plants and the scale of wages at present prevailing therein. Beyond a broad statement of the amount of the capital invested in its armor plant the Midvale company, for reasons of policy, declined to furnish the board with any detailed information along the line of its inquiry; all the companies declined, as violating a proper business secrecy and as contrary to their interests, to submit to the board a detailed statement of the cost of armor production as determined by them.

This same report refers to part 2, House Document No. 151. Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, in which Secretary Herbert makes a supplementary report on the price of armor and the cost of an armor plant. It was deduced that the Carnegie plant was worth $3,000,000; however, Prof. Philip R. Alger and Mr. A. S. Dunham, who were appointed by the Secretary of the Navy to make this appraisal, made a report of their estimate, which was $3,376,000.

On page 32, House Document No. 193, the board again calls attention to the difficulty in securing information from the manufacturers, and goes on to say that—for obvious reasons each armor-making company has declined to give the board figures showing what it estimates as the actual cost to it of armor production.

However, thus handicapped, they continue on with their investigation, and after having gone over and revised their estimate as given in House Document No. 151, so as to agree with the present cost of labor and material, come to the conclusion that the production cost per ton amounts to $244.27 and the full cost from $273.38 to $295.89.

On May 27, 1913, the Senate passed a resolution requesting information from the Secretary of the Navy with reference to armor plate and its manufacture; and on July 12, 1913, the Secretary of the Navy, through Senate Document No. 129, Sixty-third Congress, states two important things, namely: First, the present situation in regard to armor plate and the reasons which have convinced him that the question of a Government manufactory should be taken up at the earliest possible moment; second, the practical problem that must be solved before the determination as to the wisdom of constructing a Government plant. No figures sufficiently accurate to base an actual appropriation for the construction of an armor-plate factory are at present available, nor can any such figures be obtained until an investigation has been made by some committee or agent given power by Congress to go over the books of steel corporations now making Government armor.

It appears also from this report that the foreign Governments are awakening to the fact that they are being overcharged by the manufacturers of armor plate, which bears out the statement given in Exhibit No. 7, House Document No. 151, that there is a world-wide understanding among the manufacturers to keep up the price. However, France, Russia, Japan, and other countries have built, or are building, plants of their own, while Italy is buying abroad to break up the monopoly there.

This report further states that the last investigation, made at the beginning of President Roosevelt's second term, recommended that a plant be erected; and the appropriation of the year following gave the Secretary money and authority to build such a plant, but for some reason the administration failed to construct a Government plant after authority was given. Later on the armor-plate manufacturers raised their prices from $346 per ton in 1906 to $420 per ton in 1907, and last year they advanced it to $454 per ton.

I have read with considerable amusement editorial comment declaring the idea of the Government building and operating an armor plant revolutionary and impractical, and that a plant operated by the Government would not be a success. No doubt the same argument was used when a powder plant was proposed, but the plant was erected and is now and has been since 1901 operated by the Government. The tables following will disprove by actual application those editorial comments:

The Secretary of the Navy is deeply interested in establishing an armor plant, and gives as his reason that it will break up the combination of the steel interests and give us this necessity at cost. I hereby insert a letter addressed to me September 29th, which gives you his opinion and the benefit of his researches:

SEPTEMBER 29, 1913.

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: I am deeply interested to know from you that the Navy Department is to have your earnest support in the effort to secure a Government armor-plate factory, and in view of your advocacy of such a plant I take the liberty of saying to you that I do not believe any permanent relief from prices which are too high and fixed without competition can be had unless such a factory is established. Because this is my absolute conviction, I sent to Congress on July 12 last a letter in response to a resolution of the Senate of May 27 asking for information relative to the cost and manufacture of armor plate. In this letter I earnestly recommended that Congress make a thorough investigation of the cost of a Government armor-plate factory as well as the cost of manufacturing armor plate in private concerns dependent upon Government patronage. There is scant data available at present upon which to base an estimate, but I requested the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance to make an estimate, which was, in substance, as follows:

"The cost of a plant capable of turning out 10,000 tons a year, which is enough to build one battleship every year, is estimated at $8,466,000, and the cost of the armor at $314 a ton. This estimate is considerably in excess of the figures given the Government by the last board which investigated the subject. But even at this estimated cost of the plant and the cost of $314 per ton of armor plate there would be effected a saving of $140 a ton over the price now paid, i. e., $454. On 10,000 tons the Government would save $1,400,000 per annum. Deducting 4 per cent as the interest on the money used in building the plant, there still remains a net saving to the Government of $1,061,360."

This is a saving well worth the consideration of Congress. The three companies equipped for turning out armor plate—Carnegie, Bethlehem, and Midvale—have for years been getting the Government contracts at practically their own figures. There has been but the slightest variation in their bids—a few dollars one way or the other. I hoped it would be different this year, but when bids for the armor of battleship No. 39, now building, were opened during the latter part of August it became more than ever apparent that if the Government is to secure the benefits of competition additional responsible sources of supply must be secured, even if it is necessary for the Government itself to go into the business of erecting an armor plant. In response to the department's invitation for bids the prices named by the Carnegie, Bethlehem, and Midvale companies on armor were precisely the same, viz: On class A-1, $454 a ton; on class A-2 (turret armor), $518 a ton; on class B, $496 a ton; on class C (bronze), $1,875 a ton. On class C armor the Carbon Steel Co., of Pittsburgh, put in a bid of $448 a ton—$100 a ton lower than any of the other three—and were awarded the contract. Unfortunately, the Carbon Steel Co. is not in a position to make the heavier armor. The three companies submitting identically the same bids, even to the minutest particulars, strangely enough attest in affidavits submitted with their respective bids that "said company is not engaged in any such combination, agreement, conspiracy, or understanding as is prohibited by the naval appropriation act of August 22, 1912." Thus is afforded to science and psychology probably the most startling instance of telepathy on record.

I refused to accept these bids unless the companies laid before me figures as to the cost of production which would justify their rates. They all offered to give me the figures if I would see them in confidence, but, as I was acting as a public official, I could not accept their offer. Any information given me must be open to Members of Congress and the public.

I feel sure that Congress will not fail to back up the department in whatever steps seem best to obtain armor at a fair price. The untold possibilities for saving in a Government armor plant are indicated by the fact that the Government is now manufacturing a good part of its own guns for the armament of its ships, and also a large part of its own powder, at greatly reduced prices over those formerly paid to private concerns. The output of the Indian Head powder factory, operated by the Government, is about 3,000,000 pounds of powder, new and reworked, per year, and it is estimated by the Bureau of Ordnance that the saving over powder bought on contract is 23 cents a pound, which makes the annual saving to the Government by its own manufacture $690,000. It is estimated that, considering the building program for this year, the annual requirements for the next four years would be 6,650,000 pounds, and at a cost of 23 cents per pound the annual saving to the Government would amount to $1,529,500. As to the saving on guns, it is estimated that fifteen 14-inch guns would cost by contract $1,188,000 and by Government manufacture $825,000, representing a saving of $364,000; of twenty-eight 5-inch guns, by contract $289,800, and by Government manufacture $212,800, a saving of $77,000. The battleship building program for 1914 contemplates one battleship, six destroyers, one transport, and one supply ship. It is estimated that the armament for these vessels would cost the Government $1,856,550 if bought in open market and $1,274,110 if manufactured at a Government gun factory. The saving in the latter case would be $582,440. If we can save so much by manufacturing a part of our powder and guns, it stands to reason that we could save more by manufacturing our own armor.

As a matter of fact, within the past few weeks the hospitality of the Navy Department to competition has resulted in the saving, in round figures, of half a million dollars on the equipment of battleship No. 39. The Government has saved this much on a comparatively small part of what goes into the battleship. If we can reduce the price on structural steel, medium steel plates, casings for turbines, etc., why not on armor plate? The old identical price of Bethlehem and Midvale on structural steel plates had been set at about $284 a ton. There was a welcome newcomer which ventured in when the bids were opened, on August 22—the Carbon Steel Co.—and its bid was $187.04 a ton, a saving on the 3,900 tons required of $387,261. This was 34 per cent less than the previous price. Bids on other material, with outside competition, resulted in a saving of $19,000 on medium steel plates and of over $3,000 on angles, irons, and similar small parts. When it came to the casings for the enormous turbines of No. 39, Bethlehem and Midvale, apparently feeling safe in their conviction that they were the only plants capable of tackling the manufacture of these huge forgings, submitted bids of $160,272 and $160,568, respectively. But the new policy of the department had attracted the attention of a great foreign firm, which instructed its New York agents to put in a really competitive bid. Its price was only one-third of that offered by the two American firms. It was against the desire of the department to go abroad for anything that could be purchased at home, but the situation demanded heroic treatment, and the bid of the English firm was accepted at a saving of $102,000 on this item alone. Thus, on the turbine forgings, the structural steel, etc., the saving has run over the half million dollar mark, thanks to competition.

Of course I recognize that there are difficulties in the way of any new departure, and it is not my desire that the Government should make all the armor plate needed, if private concerns shall meet us on a competitive basis. But this is too great a Government to sit still and allow any two or three companies to fix identical prices. Unless something is done they have the Government at their mercy.

Thanking you for your cooperation, I am,

Faithfully, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

Hon. S. R. BARTON,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The first investigating committee, like a new-born calf, wended its wobbly way through the meadow and emerged at the starting place without gathering much substance and each subsequent investigation has followed the same winding trail with the same result. We have not secured enough reliable data on which to base a plan for introducing a bill for the erection of an armor plant. While we know that it would be a great saving to the Government, to be businesslike, we should know the cost of erecting a plant and the cost of producing the different grades of armor plate.

The Secretary in his letter of July 12, Senate Document 129, recommended that Congress make full, thorough, and early investigation of the cost of an armor-plate factory and the cost of manufacturing armor plate in concerns dependent upon Government patronage.

Promptly responding to his recommendation I introduced House resolution 204, July 18, which reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Corporations be directed, and he is hereby authorized, to make a full and complete report of the cost of an armor-plate factory and the cost of armor plate and gun forging in factories owned by concerns dependent on Government patronage, and that he report his findings to this body within four months after the adoption of this resolution.

This resolution is now in the hands of the Naval Committee, and I plead for an early favorable report.

Coming from a purely agricultural country, I am deeply interested in this subject and can see great future possibility in the development of semiarid sections of our great country; but to secure results Government assistance is necessary and Government funds could not be turned into more profitable channels for the benefit of the people as a whole.

In the last 17 years, or dating from the Forty-sixth Congress, when the first agricultural appropriation was made as a separate and distinct item, we have appropriated for agriculture $146,151,999.06. At the same time and for the same period we have appropriated to the Naval Department $1,718,759,451.97. These appropriations tell more than pages of record. I do not desire to be understood as opposing adequate appropriation for the Army and Navy, but I do desire to be understood in standing for economy in the conduct of these great departments to the end that the great savings that it is possible to make may be turned into the agricultural development of this great country.

The Secretary has told you in his letter about the savings of our powder plant. The actions of Congress in the years past proves that they were convinced that an armor plant would be a great saving to this country. The fact that other countries have installed plants prove their conviction. Why should we longer delay? We have bureaus empowered to go to the very heart of all other business of this country; we have done what the world proclaimed was impossible—built the Panama Canal. Must we with all our power, all our strength, and all our intelligence again run up the white flag for the steel barons?

This temporary saving spoken of by our Secretary only comes when the trusts are threatened. Just as soon as danger clouds disappear they again, like Shylock, demand their pound of flesh. The great majority of this Congress has declared that they were in favor of economy in Government, and I feel sure that with me they will plead for early action on this resolution, so that we can free ourselves from the tremendous selfish power of this trust, a power exercised so potently when our Nation is at peace and so arbitrarily when our Nation is involved in war. In taking this action and saving our country over a million dollars annually, we at the same time deal a tremendous blow to the mother of trusts—the Steel Trust.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there are 107 Senate amendments to this deficiency bill. The other day I offered, on behalf of this side of the House, to have debate and consideration of an even 12 of those amendments and let the rest go to conference and be considered as the House might dispose of them. Gentlemen on that side of the House, being always afraid of debating questions, always afraid to have these subjects fully considered in public, being unable to do it in a secret caucus on this occasion, objected and proposed to have matters disposed of in secret conference. [Applause on the Republican side.]

There has been some discussion this afternoon, and so far it has been confined to but one amendment, although there are a number of other amendments in the bill of far greater importance, except to the pap suckers, to the patronage suckers, to the place hunters, the men who try to destroy instead of building up the Government.

Now, we have been two days in the House with a majority of the House absent, and a majority of the House is still absent; and while gentlemen on that side who are here are all earnestly or practically all earnestly in favor of breaking down the civil-service law, they have not yet been able to get their conferees here and a majority of the House is still absent, although the Chair is not yet required to take notice of that fact.

We have had nothing else to do except to consider these items. There never was such a good opportunity for the House of Representatives to show that it could give consideration to public questions in the way of amendments to a bill as has been given this week. But gentlemen on that side of the House have been afraid to meet these questions.

In reference to amendment No. 8, the civil-service amendment, the President now has the power to do what you propose to do, but he is afraid to exercise that power and proposes to hide behind an unnecessary provision in the bill. [Applause on the Republican side.] And so he refuses to veto it, but hides behind it.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. MANN. I do not yield to the irrepressible gentleman from New Jersey. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois declines to yield.

Mr. MANN. Why does not the President take the responsibility? The President has the power; he is leading you around; you do not dare to adjourn and go home. You all want to go home and adjourn after this bill is finished. You could do it in a few minutes. But the President is afraid, and you are afraid, to adjourn. If we have to remain here to discuss this bill and other bills, gentlemen should be here. This bill goes to conference by the rule. When it comes back, where will gentlemen be? Will they be here when the conference report comes back? Will they stay?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] confesses he would not be here if he were not compelled to be, but says if he were not compelled to be here he would go away.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. If Congress, which has not the nerve on your side to say to the President, "We have finished our business for this session and propose to go home, where we belong at this time"—if Congress, failing to do that, proposes to stay here, I propose to do the best I can to keep them here [applause on the Republican side].

Mr. BARTLETT. That is all right—

Mr. MANN. In the hope that they will attend to business. If I have to stay in Washington to watch Democrats I want enough of them to watch to make it useful and playful to me. It takes more than an ordinary bunch of them to lend the usual fun.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, how does the time stand?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas has nine minutes remaining and the gentleman from Georgia nine minutes remaining.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, we all recognize the fact that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is actuated solely by patriotic motives in undertaking to filibuster against the passage of this bill now under consideration, and we recognize how honest and sincere he is about maintaining the civil service now that the Democrats have charge of the Government.

It is impossible for me to express my ideas on some of these amendments in two minutes. I expect to vote against this rule, because I do not wish to be understood as voting to disagree to Senate amendment No. 8, taking deputy United States marshals and deputy revenue collectors out of the civil service. I shall vote for this amendment, because I believe that every United States marshal and every collector of internal revenue ought to have the right and the power to name his own deputies without going to a civil-service list and having to select some man or having some man selected for him whom he does not know or has never seen. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Neither am I in sympathy with the Senate amendment, Mr. Speaker, which proposes an expenditure of $7,000 for an automobile for the Vice President. [Applause.]

I am not in sympathy with that amendment which appropriates $25,000 to be expended by a commission to look into plans for the building of a memorial bridge. We have committees of this House whose duty it is to look into such matters as this, and a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has already been appointed and has been at work looking into the matter of the construction of this proposed bridge. Neither am I in sympathy with the amendment of the Senate which appropriates $400,000 to construct a building here in Washington to memorialize somebody. I am in sympathy with the organization, the purposes, and the great work of the Red Cross Society. I think it has accomplished much and has measured up to a great need in this country in administering to the wants and requirements of suffering humanity everywhere. But I do not conceive it to be a proper expenditure of the people's money to erect a costly building such as is proposed at Government expense merely as an ornament to what has already been accomplished.

But, Mr. Speaker, I am in sympathy, as I stated a moment ago, with the amendment proposed by Senator OVERMAN taking these deputy marshals and deputy collectors from under the protection of the civil service; and I deny the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the President is afraid to issue an Executive order taking them out of the civil service, and I demand, if he has any proof of the President's fear on that subject, that he produce it and not make charges indiscriminately that the President is afraid to do it. The question here is not whether the President is or is not afraid to issue such an order. Everybody knows, even the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. MANN] knows, if he would admit it, that the President is not afraid to issue such an order if he thought it was his duty to do it. But if the President were afraid to do it, which he is not, the Members of this House are not afraid to do it, and we propose to do it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman want the proof now?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; if you have any proof.

Mr. MANN. The President has the power to do it. Why has he not done it?

Mr. BARKLEY. Because he may not be in favor of doing it or he may not want it done. I do not know what his sentiments are upon this amendment, but he recognizes the fact that Congress has a right to legislate upon this subject, and the mere fact that he has not issued an Executive order taking these offices from the classified service does not indicate that he is afraid to do it or that we ought not to do it here in this House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I called on the gentleman to produce the proof in support of his statement. He has produced none. But, on the contrary, the proof is that the President is not afraid to do anything that he thinks ought to be done and that he wants done. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You may as well tell me that a sheriff of a county ought not to have the right to name his own deputies or that a county clerk ought not to be permitted to name his own deputies as to say that a United States marshal or collector of revenue ought not to have the right to do the same thing. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] desire to use any more of his time now?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not at present.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, the officers of the Civil Service Reform Association should be in the galleries here to-day to note the applause that every assault upon the merit system has received from the Democratic majority in this House. That applause simply expresses the sentiment of the Democratic Party and indorses the assaults that have insidiously been made upon the merit system since the 4th day of March of this year. It was given out to the country by this administration immediately upon its inauguration that the merit system would not be disturbed. Statements were given to the press that went further than that, that the political officeholders whose commissions had not expired and who were rendering faithful service would not be disturbed during the life of the commissions under which they were holding office. The country took the word of the leader of this administration and applauded it throughout the land when he said to the country that he was not going to run a purely political administration in his conduct of the civil service of the country. But within 48 hours after the statement had been given to the country a political distribution of offices began, and has been going on ever since just as fast as Democratic Representatives and Senators could agree on men to take the offices.

Mr. FRANCIS. That is right.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I was sure no man would dispute the fact. The Democratic platform, however, indorses the merit system and pledged the administration to the enforcement of the civil-service laws of the land.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I decline to yield. I could give instances, if it were necessary to do so, to show the perfidy of this administration with regard to the administration of the civil-service laws of the land, and to show how absolutely insincere the President and his advisers were when they gave out to the country that they were going to retain the officers until the terms of the commissions expired who were holding under commissions confirmed by the Senate.

I know of a number of instances in which men of the highest grade of ability, who were rendering the very best possible service to the country, were removed to make place for mere politicians. That has been done in the Pension Office and has been done in the Post Office Department. It has been done in every department of the Government. The civil-service laws have been ignored in the departments of this Government. Men who have been serving their country as civil servants, known to be Republicans, have been told by the heads of the departments that they must take a reduction to a mere clerkship from the position of chief of bureau or get out of the service, and the only reason for that direction to these chiefs of bureaus was the fact that they were not Democrats. This action has occurred in the Department of Agriculture, which is in direct violation of the civil-service law, and yet the President would hold out to the country that he is a civil-service reformer.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it not a fact that the present Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Dr. Galloway, is the same man who has been in the Department of Agriculture for years; and is it not a fact that the man appointed as chief clerk down there the other day is a lifelong Republican, and that he was appointed by the present Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. MANN. It must hurt you bad over there.

Mr. BARTLETT. It does hurt me very bad.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This administration is only about six months old—

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Has the gentleman reported and taken up with the Civil Service Commission these violations of law of which he speaks?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have talked to a Republican member of the Civil Service Commission, who has been asked for his resignation—

Mr. SHERLEY. But has the gentleman made a formal complaint to the civil-service authorities instead of standing here and talking about being an advocate of civil service?

Mr. MANN. We have the right as legislators to call attention to these facts without having to go to the departments and—

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not crawl on my knees to a political Civil Service Commission to tell them the civil-service law has been violated, because they know it.

Mr. SHERLEY. The head of that commission was not appointed by this administration.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He is a Democrat.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman ought to be fair.

Mr. CAMPBELL. My recollection is—I know one of the avowed Republican members of the commission has resigned because he would not violate the very letter and spirit of the civil-service law.

Mr. SHERLEY. What proof has the gentleman of that statement? The gentleman says he knows it; give us the proof besides his statement.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can give you proof if it becomes necessary.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think any man who has not the proof ought to stand upon this floor and make a charge involving the honor of men.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Consult the Republican member of the Civil Service Commission who has been recently asked for his resignation.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman comes and makes a charge, and he becomes responsible for it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am responsible.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, make your proof.

Mr. MANN. Give us time and we will give you plenty of proof.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why, the proof of it is in every department of the Government civil service where employees have been replaced by Democrats.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are incompetent.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They are not incompetent.

Mr. POU and Mr. FITZGERALD rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not yield to anybody.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield to my colleague on the committee for a question.

Mr. POU. I desire to ask the gentleman if he knows any worse betrayal of the civil-service law than President Taft's order covering thirty-odd thousand postmasters into the service without an examination?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That was in the interest—

SEVERAL DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS. Of what?

Mr. CAMPBELL (continuing). Of efficiency and the classified service, classifying men into the civil service who had shown efficiency as postmasters, following exactly the example set by Grover Cleveland during the closing days of his administration. Cleveland covered these deputy marshals, deputy internal-revenue collectors, and many others into the civil service. I had a Democratic deputy internal-revenue collector in my district and he remained through the McKinley and Roosevelt and Taft administrations.

Mr. POU. Even if Mr. Cleveland did what he ought not to have done, I want to ask the gentleman candidly if he thinks the order of President Taft was in furtherance of the merit system?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I think it was in the interest of the postal service, and this has been shown conclusively by the efficiency and economy of the administration of postal affairs in the country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield that to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, it may be an easy thing for any gentleman upon the other side of the Chamber to rise in his place upon this floor and state upon his responsibility as a Representative that there has been perfidy in the administration of the civil-service law by the President and those who are in authority, and yet we have no further proof of this fact except the statement of the gentleman from Kansas, which nobody, I think, upon this side at least, and some of those on the other side of this House, would accept as being the case—

Mr. MANN. We will accept it all right.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a good deal about civil service to-day; and, gentlemen, we all believe in the merit system.

There is not anybody here who does not have that idea, and yet we have seen the civil-service law in the last 16 years administered entirely in the interests of one party. It has been stated that 90 per cent of all the officeholders of the country under the civil service come from one party.

Mr. MANN. Nobody believes that.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, it is true. The gentleman may sit there and deny the fact, but he simply denies it because he does not know the facts.

I have not the time, and do not yield at this particular time to answer my colleague further on that point. He made the statement upon the floor of the House in reference to the President of the United States, charging him with being a coward. Why, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois must realize, as every other man on that side of the House must realize, that if there is one attribute which the President has it is the courage of his convictions. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He has brought that side of the House to a realization of the force of his character and the courage to make them stand up and vote upon some propositions that they did not like to vote upon, and that their party had dodged for a long time.

Mr. MANN. We have not found them yet.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the rule which we have before us for adoption to-day means the sending of these amendments to conference, with the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that there are certain ones that will be brought back here on which the House will have an opportunity to vote; and I think it is the duty of the Members on this side of the House to stand by this rule and adopt it and get this bill into conference just as soon as possible. The statement has been made by the minority leader that without a quorum we will be unable to transact any business whatever. After remaining here in session the whole summer through, having passed the best tariff bill that was ever passed in the history of the Government, now waiting for the Senate to act upon the currency bill, which the President has asked to be passed and the American people want, I ask you to-day to adopt this rule and then on the conference report we will have an opportunity to vote upon some of these propositions that you do not stand for, that I do not stand for and propose to vote against.

I want to say that so far as amendment No. 8 is concerned I stand for a proposition of that kind [applause on the Democratic side], because I believe when a chief selects his aids, the men who personally represent him, the men who must go out and look after interests directly concerning him, he should have the opportunity to select the men whom he wants to transact that business.

Why, you remember that in a previous Congress a bill was passed to pay $173,000 for a shortage in the Subtreasury in the city of Chicago. We paid in St. Louis $61,000 of a shortage which occurred in the Subtreasury located in that city.

The claim was made upon this floor that we ought to remit that money to the subtreasurers for the reason that these clerks were in the office and the subtreasurers were compelled to take them and had no alternative of getting men of their own selection. In this case all we ask is that these men, these deputy revenue collectors and deputy marshals, who represent the United States marshal and the revenue collector, shall be taken out from under this civil service, and that the collectors be given an opportunity to appoint the officials that they desire to have in those offices.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman believe the President will sign this bill containing this provision, unless he is in favor of its enforcement?

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, so far as my opinion is concerned, at this time—of course I do not know what the attitude of the President will be—but I believe that as a good Democrat and wise statesman that he is, and standing with Congress as he has stood, and as Congress has stood with him, if this Democratic Congress passes this bill as it will finally be passed, he will sign it. The President stands for an honest enforcement of the civil service, but he is trying to correct some of the abuses of the law which have existed in the past.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman does not agree with his colleague who stated a few moments ago that he did not know what the President's attitude was, but if the President were opposed to this you proposed to force him to it?

Mr. FOSTER. We are not proposing to force the President. We are not obliged to force the President. We have faith in him that he will do what is right. The President of the United States is ready and anxious to do what is right by the American people, and he does not have to be forced to do what, in his judgment, is for their best interests. You may think the proper thing to do is to force a President to do certain things; Democrats do not have to do that with their President. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If that is the case, then what is the purpose or necessity of adding legislation when he already has the power?

Mr. FOSTER. Congress desires to express its will to the President of the United States, and Congress has a perfect right to do so. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] if he has read in the RECORD of anyone on that side who has arisen in his place to call the attention of a former President or the country to the fact that men had been taken from under the civil service by Executive order? No one on the other side has ever called attention to any abuses under the present civil-service law. Many abuses of the law could be found, but gentlemen on that side did not want to find them. They were satisfied so long as members of their own party were being appointed and promoted. No; when it comes to removing men from the civil service and giving them an opportunity to put in men of their own kind there is no objection from that side of the House; but now, when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] sees that a few of these pap suckers, who have been on the pay roll for years, have a chance of vanishing, he is very much afraid that some great injustice will be done to the merit system of the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman sincerely believe that this is what will happen in case the bill passes: That the President will sign it and make another apology to the people of the United States for another piece of bunko on the part of the Democratic House? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, the President does not have to make an apology. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Did he not make an apology when he signed the sundry civil bill with its vicious class legislation?

Mr. FOSTER. In the last administration it was not necessary for you to make an apology, because the country kicked you out so earnestly and forcibly that you did not have time to apologize before you went. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The difference between our party leader—our President—and yours is that our party President had the courage to veto an obnoxious measure, whereas your President attached his signature to it and apologized to the world for doing it, admitting he did wrong. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOSTER. The last President called on his party for solidarity for his policies and made an apology to the American people when he signed the Payne bill, and you saw very soon what the solidarity of your party meant in the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it not a fact that the country has been apologizing ever since for putting them in power? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, there is no question about that. The administration has changed. The party to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] belongs is out, and, we hope, is out to stay. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has expired. All time has expired. The previous question is considered as ordered.

Before the Chair puts this question, he wants to make a remark or two to the House. Part of the business of the Speaker is to maintain order and decorum. When a Member gets the floor and is recognized, whether for one minute or one hour, or for any other length of time, he is entitled to the floor. Any gentleman who wants to interrupt him must first address the Speaker. The Speaker asks the permission of the gentleman on the floor, asks the gentleman on the floor if he yields, and if he does not yield, the gentleman interrupting ought to sit down, and stay down. It creates an unseemly scene. The Speaker does not like to name a gentleman, as he has the right to, and he does not like to send the Sergeant at Arms after him. Some of the oldest Members of the House are the greatest offenders in this matter of interruptions.

Another thing; no Member is permitted to sit in his seat and inject remarks in another gentleman's speech. It is disconcerting; it creates disorder; and it is not right; and the Chair asks the Members to refrain from that practice.

Another thing; so far as the Speaker is concerned, he is absolutely at the mercy of the Members about parliamentary inquiries. If a gentleman gets up and states that he has a parliamentary inquiry, he ought really to have one, because the Speaker, when a gentleman says that he rises to a parliamentary inquiry, must, under the rule, recognize him. It is not fair to inject a stump speech into a parliamentary inquiry. Of course the Chair takes no exception to arguing things that are really parliamentary inquiries; but every Member, when he sits down and studies about it, will confess that he wants to see the business of this House transacted in decency and in order, and the present occupant of the chair is going to enforce that rule with all the power he has. [Applause.] The Chair will enforce it hereafter to the extent of naming Members who do not obey the mandate of the Chair [applause], and if that does not do any good, the Chair will send the Sergeant at Arms after them. [Applause.]

The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Under the resolution House bill No. 7898, with the Senate amendments, is taken from the Speaker's table, the amendments of the Senate are disagreed to in gross, the conference asked by the Senate is agreed to, and the Speaker, without intervening motion, appoints the conferees. The Clerk will report the names of the conferees on the part of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

MESSRS. FITZGERALD, BARTLETT, and GILLET.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER] be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER] making a speech, but I think it is possible that the conference report on this bill may come back this afternoon. I would like to couple with the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] the additional request that at the end of the 30 minutes granted to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER] the House stand in recess until 4 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent—

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as this requires unanimous consent, I ask to be allowed 10 minutes—

A MEMBER. Make it five—

Mr. DONOVAN. Five minutes in connection with the request of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman's request exactly.

Mr. DONOVAN. My request is that I be allowed to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. At the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER]?

Mr. DONOVAN. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER] address the House for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] for 5 minutes, at the conclusion of which time the House shall stand in recess until 4 o'clock this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York

[Mr. CHANDLER] be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] amends that request by asking that five minutes be granted to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] at the end of the address of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER], and that at the end of the 5 minutes granted to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] the House stand in recess until 4 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to get some information. Suppose the conferees are not ready to report at 4 o'clock?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If they are about ready to report, I shall then ask the House to remain for a time. If it appears at that time that they can not get ready to report this evening, then I shall ask for an adjournment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I think it possible that the conferees will probably be ready to report by 4 o'clock.

Mr. BARTLETT. We will have to put the conference report in the RECORD in any event, the gentleman from Illinois will remember.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois as amended by the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and at the conclusion of the addresses the House will automatically stand in recess until 4 o'clock.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CONRY, indefinitely, on account of serious illness of his father.

To Mr. DUPRE, indefinitely, on account of death in family.

To Mr. FINLEY, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. ADAIR, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. DALE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. UNDERHILL, for three days, on account of death of a friend.

To Mr. DAVIS, indefinitely, on account of illness in family.

To Mr. PATTEN of New York, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. WEAVER, indefinitely, on account of serious illness of a member of his family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a speech made by Mr. SHACKLEFORD, a Member of the House from the State of Missouri, at Detroit, Mich., on September 30 before the Good Roads Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a speech by Judge SHACKLEFORD, of Missouri, made at Detroit recently on the subject of good roads. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if the gentleman's colleague, Mr. BORLAND, is around anywhere. He usually objects to these requests, and I was wondering where he is.

Mr. PAGE. Possibly I preferred this request because he was not present. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not take his place.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that if I do not conclude my remarks in the five minutes allotted to me, I have permission to extend them in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that in the event he does not conclude his remarks in the five minutes granted him, at the conclusion of the address of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER], he may extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

PERSECUTION OF JEWS IN ROUMANIA.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, I wish now to address myself to the subject of Roumanian persecution of the Jew in defiance of the treaty of Berlin, and I preface my remarks by reciting a joint resolution which I have introduced this afternoon.

The joint resolution is as follows:

House joint resolution 138.

Whereas the following is the literal text of Articles XLIII and XLIV of the treaty of Berlin of July 13, 1878:

"XLIII. The high contracting parties recognize the independence of Roumania, subject to the conditions set forth in the two following articles.

"XLIV. In Roumania the difference of religious creeds and confessions shall not be alleged against any person as a ground for exclusion or incapacity in matters relating to the enjoyment of civil and political rights, admission to public employments, functions, and honors, or the exercise of the various professions and industries in any locality whatsoever.

"The freedom and outward exercise of all forms of worship shall be assured to all persons belonging to the Roumanian state, as well as to foreigners, and no hindrance shall be offered either to the hierarchical organization of the different communions or to their relations with their spiritual chiefs.

"The subjects and citizens of all the powers, traders or others, shall be treated in Roumania, without distinction of creed, on a footing of perfect equality."

Whereas the Government of Roumania accepted the terms of said articles of said treaty as a condition precedent to the recognition of her independence; and

Whereas it is a matter of certain knowledge that the Jews of Roumania, numbering about 250,000, have been the barbarized and impoverished victims of Roumanian discriminatory legislation and of Roumanian riots and massacres for a period of more than 30 years in violation of both the letter and the spirit of the treaty of Berlin: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it is the sense of the American Congress that the interests of civilization, the rights of humanity, the principles of eternal justice, and the dignity and sanctity of international law demand that the signatory powers of the treaty of Berlin compel Roumania to observe the stipulations of the treaty of Berlin in the matter of the treatment of the Jews.

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to transmit a copy of this resolution to the Governments of Great Britain, Germany, Austria, Russia, France, Italy, and Turkey.

Mr. Speaker, in all the history of prejudice the persecution of the Jew has no parallel. Whether born of human wickedness or divine vengeance, Jewish persecution is the strangest of all historical phenomena. When and where it originated and what have been its intensifying and perpetuating causes are still subjects of grave doubt and speculative debate.

When we come to trace the history of prejudice against the Jew and to seek its cause we are led by many labyrinthian paths through shadows of doubt and mystery to a remote antiquity. The popular notion that hatred against the Jew originated in the crucifixion of the Savior is without basis in reason or in fact. The tragedy of Golgotha might have been a perpetuating, an intensifying means, but it was not the origin—the originating principle.

To ascertain the real beginning of Jewish persecution we must antedate the Christian era by several centuries. We must go back to the days of ancient Egypt. We learn from Genesis xliii, 32, that "the Egyptians might not eat bread with the Hebrews: for that it is an abomination unto the Egyptians." Social discrimination and ostracism seem to have been keen and bitter even in those early times. And in the Book of Esther, iii, 8, we find an epitome of much of the complaint made by the anti-Semites and Jew baiters of modern times: "And Haman said unto the king, Ahasuerus, there is a certain people scattered abroad and dispersed among the people in all the provinces of thy kingdom; and their laws are diverse from all people, neither keep they the king's laws." Then Haman added: "If it please the king, let it be written that they may be destroyed." Those were plain, fierce days when thoroughgoing measures were unhesitatingly advised.

How thoroughly the old Romans hated and despised the Jews may be learned from early Roman writers. Cicero, Pro Flacco, says: "Their barbarous superstitions must be fought." "The Jews are nothing but a superstitious nation," says Persius. "Their Sabbath is a lugubrious day," adds Ovid. "They worship the hog and the ass," affirms Petronius. Of course, the charge of worshipping the hog was a gratuitous slander, a lie born of calumny and ignorance and perpetuated by hate and superstition.

In the annual carnivals of ancient Rome the Jews were compelled to play the rôles of clowns and buffoons, were forced to run in the races ridiculously dressed, and were compelled to ride through the streets mounted backward on donkeys, holding the animals' tails in their hands.

When the night of the Middle Ages fell upon the human race Jewish persecution often assumed forms of peculiar malignity and hate. King John of England once caused one of his Jewish subjects to be cast into prison, and then ordered that a tooth should be drawn from his mouth each day until he had surrendered his money. Seven teeth were extracted, one on each subsequent day, until, on the eighth, the unhappy and unlucky man ransomed the remainder of his teeth at the price demanded, 10,000 marks of silver.

In Toulouse, France, it was an ancient custom on certain holidays to slap the Jews in the face publicly and ostentatiously.

All the Jews in town were compelled to assemble in the public square. The Count of Toulouse then opened the miserable proceedings by slapping in the face the elder of the Jewish community, and his subjects followed suit, until all the Jews had been slapped and thoroughly humiliated.

In Germany in the eighteenth century even so grand a King as Frederick the Great persecuted the Jews by contemptible and irritating exactions. He permitted only a certain number of them to marry annually, and then only on condition that they would buy $300 worth of chinaware from his royal porcelain factory. We are reminded by this that Frederick was not only a scholar and philosopher under the tutelage of Voltaire, but that he was a money-maker as well.

But time does not permit a recital of all the laws of ancient and medieval ages whose effect was to embitter the life and degrade the condition of the Jew. The world is already too sadly familiar with the history of his woes. The references already made have been merely academic and introductory.

It now becomes my painful duty to be pointed and practical; to discuss and denounce the brutal and savage persecutions of the Jews by Roumania, reputed to be a Christian nation, pretending to be civilized and enlightened, while violating the most sacred and solemn treaty obligations to her sister nations, while trampling under foot all the charities of the heart, all the tenets of religion, and all the sentiments of humanity; and this at the beginning of the twentieth century, more than a hundred years after the American Revolution established the immortal principle that all just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed; more than a hundred years after the French Revolution sent the cry of "Liberty, equality, fraternity," reverberating around the globe; and more than nineteen centuries after the Prophet of Nazareth delivered the Sermon on the Mount—the chart of the soul on the sea of life, whose beatitudes are the glorifications of the virtues of meekness, mercy, peace, gentleness, and love.

The modern Kingdom of Roumania was formed by the union of the ancient Principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia. Provinces situated near the mouth of the Danube, having an area of about 50,000 square miles, and occupying an extent of territory some 350 miles in length and 160 miles in breadth. The shape of the country is an irregular half-moon, touching the Black Sea near the center of the crescent.

The people of Roumania proudly boast a classic antiquity in their supposed descent from the Romans who conquered the ancient Scythian Kingdom of Dacia, which was practically the modern territory of Roumania.

If not classic in history the country of Roumania is at least classic and historic in soil, for the legions of Rome, the hordes of Attila, the crusaders of Richard and Barbarossa, and the Cossacks of Peter the Great have crossed its borders and traversed its plains.

The language of Roumania has a groundwork of Latin and Slavonic, with a superstructure of Turkish, Greek, and French. The social, political, religious, and intellectual life of the people is a strange, weird blending of the cruder forms of occidental and oriental civilizations.

The population of Roumania in 1910 was about 6,850,000. Fully 6,000,000 of these were Roumans or Vlachs; the rest were Jews, Armenians, gypsies, Greeks, Germans, Turks, Magyars, Servians, and Bulgarians.

Of the total population of Roumania the Jews number about 250,000. And it is with the Jews of Roumania, in their relationship as citizens and subjects to the Government of Roumania, and with the Government of Roumania in its relationship to its Jewish population, under binding treaty obligations entered into by Roumania with the great powers of Europe, that I shall hereafter in this address deal particularly and pointedly.

I desire especially to discuss the persecution of the Jews by Roumania, in defiance of the treaty of Berlin of July 13, 1878. I shall, however, in the first place, as a foundation for that discussion, submit for your consideration a classified list of Roumanian laws, passed during the half century preceding the assembling of the congress of Berlin, which were intended to discriminate against the Jews. This list, though short, may be tedious and tiresome to study and contemplate, but it will be decidedly illuminating and enlightening when we come to consider the motive and conduct of the great powers in forcing Roumania, through treaty stipulations, to accord better treatment to her Jewish subjects. The following is a résumé, with authorities cited, of the leading Roumanian legal enactments against the Jews between the years 1802 and 1876:

1803. Alexander Monize forbids Jews to rent farms. (American Jewish Year Book, 1901, p. 48.)

May 18, 1804. Alexander Monize, of Moldavia, forbids Jews to buy farm products. (Loeb, "La Situation des Israélites en Turquie, en Serbie et en Roumanie," p. 212, Paris, 1877, hereafter cited as Loeb.)

1817. Code Cahmach, section 1430, forbids Jews of Roumania to acquire real property. (Loeb, p. 213.)

By 1818. Code of John Caradja, of Wallachia, repeats the church laws against allowing Jews to be witnesses against Christians. (Am. Jew. Yearbook, 1901, p. 50.)

By 1819. Code of Kallimachor of Moldavia gives civil rights to Jews, who, however, may not own land. (Am. Jew. Yearbook, 1901, p. 50.)

These enactments show the legal disabilities of the Jews. But they do not tell the full story of shame and humiliation of a long-suffering and wretched people. Written in the calm and dignified phraseology of the law they can not and do not recount the bloody details of riot and massacre, whose occurrence was the disgrace of civilization and whose horrors compose the blackest chapters of Roumanian history. I will not harrow your feelings with a recital of the details. I shall content myself with a simple and dispassionate discussion of legal rights and treaty obligations in the matter of Roumania and the Jews.

It was at the close of the War of the Crimea that the great Governments of Europe first gave serious attention to the oppressions of the Jews by the rulers of the principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia, the Provinces from which the kingdom of Roumania was afterwards formed. At that time the first decisive effort was made to relieve the legal disabilities of the Jews.

The following articles of the protocol of the conference of Constantinople of the 11th of February, 1856, imposed, it must be admitted, rather exacting terms upon Moldavia and Wallachia:

XIII. All the religions and those who profess them shall enjoy equal liberty and equal protection in the two Principalities.

XV. Foreigners may possess landed property in Moldavia and Wallachia on discharging the same liabilities as natives and on submitting to the laws.

XVI. All Moldavians and Wallachians, without exception, shall be admissible to public employments.

XVIII. All classes of the population, without any distinction of birth or religion, shall enjoy equality of civil rights and particularly of the right of property in every shape, but the exercise of political rights shall be suspended in the case of natives placed under a foreign protection.

The language of these articles was an emphatic and unequivocal declaration in favor of civil and religious liberty for all the inhabitants of Roumania. A complete realization of the protection afforded by these articles would have been all that the Jews could reasonably have asked. But such a thing was not to be. No such blessing was in store for them. The reigning Prince of Moldavia, Gregory Ghika, began at once a course of subterfuge and evasion for the purpose of rendering abortive the intentions and efforts of the powers. He contended that a strict application of the provisions of these articles was impracticable, if not impossible, on account of the great number of unassimilated

Jews in the Principalities; and two years later he presented a memorial to the congress of Paris asking that the realization of the principle embodied in the articles of the protocol of the conference of Constantinople, which he admitted to be excellent within itself, should be left to the discretion of the local Government, which alone, he contended, knew how to apply the principle. His arguments were plausible, if not sound and righteous, and at last, out of deference to the wishes and pledges of Ghika, the powers modified their intentions by the adoption of Article XLVI of the convention of Paris, which runs as follows:

All Moldavians and Wallachians shall be equal in the eye of the law and with regard to taxation, and shall be equally admissible to public employments in both principalities.

Their individual liberty shall be guaranteed. No one can be detained or prosecuted but in conformity with the law. No one can be deprived of his property unless legally for causes of public interest and on payment of indemnification.

Moldavians and Wallachians of all Christian confessions shall equally enjoy political rights. The enjoyment of these rights may be extended to other religions by legislative arrangements.

Indeed, the pledge of Ghika and the expectations of the powers based upon this pledge were that the Jews would be gradually enfranchised and emancipated politically by legislative arrangements. But Roumanian legislation during the past 50 years shows how badly founded were those expectations and how complete has been the evasion of that pledge.

Instead of relieving their legal disabilities, the efforts of the powers to help the Jews through stipulations of the conventions of Constantinople and Paris proved to be a positive misfortune. "So far," says a modern writer, "from ameliorating the condition of the Jews, the convention of Paris by a regrettable accident led to more burdensome disabilities and a more barbarous persecution than they had ever before endured. Under the old organic laws, by which the principalities were governed previously to 1859, the people had no effective voice in the government. Hence there was little cause for jealousy between Christians and Jews, and with the exception of occasional explosions of religious fanaticism, they lived together in harmony. The new order of things established in 1858 destroyed this equality. It gave to the Christian population a monopoly of political power which they were not slow to use against their trade rivals among the unenfranchised Jews. This unfortunate incidence of the convention of Paris was aggravated by the new electoral law under which a preponderating franchise was reserved for the mercantile classes, with whom the Jews, being chiefly of the same classes, most directly competed. The result was that not only was the fulfillment of Article XLVI of the convention of Paris rendered impossible, but the whole influence of the mercantile electorate was employed to obtain the imposition of fresh disabilities upon the Jews and to inflame the religious and racial prejudices of the populace against them. Instead of gradually emancipating them in accordance with the provisions of the convention of Paris, even their status as 'non-Christian Moldo-Wallachs,' acknowledged in that instrument, was denied them. They were assimilated by the civil code of 1864 to aliens, though admitted by the code to be 'indigenes,' and were made dependent on a difficult and tedious process of naturalization for their acquisition of political rights (Arts. VIII, IX, and XVI). Even the privilege was withdrawn from them by the constitution of 1866, which declared (Art. VII) 'that only Christians may obtain naturalization.' Consequently Article XLVI of the convention of Paris remained a dead letter."

In the meantime the Jews of Roumania were more bitterly oppressed than ever. New laws discriminating against them were passed; riots and massacres were renewed with greater fury. They were languishing in a bondage worse than that endured by their fathers in ancient Egypt when hope was revived again among them by the adoption of Article XLIV of the treaty of Berlin of July 13, 1878.

The Berlin congress of 1878 was a gathering at the German national capital of the brainiest and most brilliant statesmen of Europe. The purpose of the congress was to settle the questions growing out of the Russo-Turkish War of 1877-78.

On the 24th of April, 1877, Russia declared war against Turkey with the avowed object of protecting the Christian inhabitants of the Ottoman Empire. Bulgaria, Roumania, Servia, and Montenegro were either tacitly or openly the allies of the Czar. After varying successes the fortunes of war finally favored the Russians, and the fall of Plevna opened the way to Constantinople. The Turks sued for peace, and on March 3, 1878, the treaty of San Stefano was signed. Some of the terms of this treaty were displeasing to several of the Governments of Europe. Austria and England were decidedly dissatisfied. The political changes made and the territorial readjustments provided for in the treaty, together with the exaction of 1,400,000,000 rubles war indemnity, which promised to cripple most seriously the resources of the Turkish Empire for years to come, practically made the Czar permanent arbiter of Balkan affairs. To avert such a catastrophe had been the traditional policy of Austria, and to prevent a result so disastrous to her interests England had waged the war of the Crimea.

Assuming the initiative in the matter Count Andrassy, in the name of the Austrian Government, dispatched a circular note to the signatory powers of the treaty of Paris of 1856 and the London protocol of 1871 suggesting an international congress for the purpose of establishing "the agreement of Europe on the modifications which it might become necessary to introduce into the above-mentioned treaties," in view of the provisions of the treaty of San Stefano. The suggestion of Count Andrassy met with a ready response. Germany was especially willing to co-operate with England and with Austria, her ally, in the assembling of a congress of which her own great statesman, Bismarck, was sure to be the dominating figure. Russia was naturally displeased with the turn events had taken. She felt intuitively that she would lose all that she had gained in the war with Turkey if she consented to the revision of the articles of the treaty of San Stefano by an international conference dominated by her enemies.

But she was powerless to resist. She demanded, however, as a condition of giving her consent to the assembling of the proposed congress and of her participation in its proceedings, that the scope of its powers be limited by the exclusion of certain clauses of the treaty of San Stefano from its consideration. The reply of Disraeli, on behalf of England, to this demand was to mobilize the militia and to bring Indian troops to the Mediterranean. Finding that the diplomatic support which she had hoped to receive from Bismarck had failed her, she took the hint, and finally consented to submit the whole question of the Balkan situation to the determinations of a new international conference.

On the 3d of June, 1878, Count Münster, in the name of the German Emperor, invited the delegates of the signatory powers of the treaty of Paris of 1856 to assemble at Berlin. The invitation was accepted. Great Britain was represented by Lord Beaconsfield, Lord Salisbury, and Lord Russell; Germany by Prince Bismarck, Prince Hohenlohe-Schillingsfürst, and Baron von Bülow; Austria by Count Andrassy, Baron Karolyi, and Baron von Haymerle; Italy by Count Corti and Count Launay; France by William H. Waddington, Félix Desprez, and Le Comte de Saint-Valliers; Russia by her imperial chancellor, Prince Gorchakov, Count Shuvalov, and Paul D'Oubril; Turkey by Alexander Pasha, Ali Pasha, and Sadullah Bey.

These distinguished representatives of the leading nations of the world—lords, princes, barons, counts, ambassadors, and prime ministers—men renowned in statesmanship, diplomacy, law, and letters, convened, and organized the Congress of Berlin, on the 13th day of June, 1878, under the presidency of Prince Bismarck.

On the 13th of July, a month after the assembling of the congress, the treaty of Berlin was signed. It consists of 64 articles.

Two great purposes of the delegates of the congress are revealed in the terms of the treaty:

- (1) The reconstruction, upon an equitable basis, of the map of southeastern Europe;
- (2) The establishment of the independence of certain Balkan States upon a foundation of civil and religious liberty.

The first great purpose was achieved. In the main, by certain territorial changes. Bulgaria was divided into two parts—Bulgaria proper and eastern Rumelia. Parts of Armenia were given to Russia and Persia. Bosnia and Herzegovina were transferred to Austria, and Bessarabia was restored to Russia.

The second great purpose was accomplished by the recognition of the independence of Roumania, Servia, and Montenegro under terms of guaranty by them of civil and religious liberty to all the inhabitants of their territories.

In the archives of history are few more important documents than the treaty of Berlin. It readjusted the boundaries of kingdoms and empires. It proclaimed the independence of states and the freedom of races. It was, above all, a grand proclamation of religious emancipation.

The conditions of life among the Jews of Roumania were far more pitiable and their political situation was infinitely worse when the Berlin Congress convened in 1878 than they had been 20 years before when the conferences of Constantinople and Paris met. In 1858 the legal status of the Jews was admitted to be that of unenfranchised Roumanians. In 1878 they had been declared to be outcasts and aliens, and were cruelly treated as such. A succession of barbarous persecutions, culminating in riots and massacres had reduced them to such a state of misery and degradation that the pity of mankind was excited and the indignation of the civilized world found vigorous expression in official protests to the great powers of Europe. This was the state of affairs when Roumania asked the delegates to the Congress of Berlin to recognize her independence as a kingdom.

The representatives of the powers knew well the cunning character of Roumanian statesmanship. They remembered distinctly the subterfuge and chicanery employed to evade the pledges given at the time of the conferences of Constantinople and Paris. They recalled that discretion had been allowed and that it had been abused in the matter of the promise of Ghika to emancipate the Jews gradually by legislative enactment. They now resolved to withdraw all discretion from the Government of Bucharest in the matter of the emancipation of its non-Christian subjects. And to the demand of Roumania that her independence be recognized the powers responded with Articles XLIII and XLIV of the treaty of Berlin of July 13, 1878, which imposed as a condition of recognition the absolute equality of all religious creeds and confessions in the Kingdom. The following is the text of those articles:

XLIII. The high contracting parties recognize the independence of Roumania, subject to the conditions set forth in the two following articles:

XLIV. In Roumania the difference of religious creeds and confessions shall not be alleged against any person as a ground for exclusion or incapacity in matters relating to the enjoyment of civil and political rights, admission to public employments, functions, and honors, or the exercise of the various professions and industries in any locality whatsoever.

The freedom and outward exercise of all forms of worship shall be assured to all persons belonging to the Roumanian State, as well as to foreigners, and no hindrance shall be offered either to the hierarchical organization of the different communions or to their relations with their spiritual chiefs.

The subjects and citizens of all the powers, traders or others, shall be treated in Roumania without distinction of creed on a footing of perfect equality.

Such were the terms offered by the Congress of Berlin to Roumania as a condition of the recognition of her independence.

Strangely and unfortunately the powers were once again persuaded to agree to a compromise. "That only Christians may obtain naturalization" was a provision of Article VII of the Roumanian constitution of 1866. Acting upon the arbitrary and illegal assumption that all Jews were aliens, Roumania contended that the only disability imposed upon them was exclusion from naturalization under this article, and she consequently proposed to revise Article VII of her constitution as a satisfaction of Article XLIV of the treaty of Berlin. The offer of Roumania, in other words, was to open the door of naturalization to the Jews, the inference then being, of course, that all other blessings would flow from citizenship.

The powers pointed out in reply that by the Roumanian naturalization law the "equality of citizen" could only be obtained after a probation of 10 years, and then by individual act of Parliament, which was liable to be defeated by the Chambers; and the offer of compromise was consequently declined.

Roumania then changed her ground by deserting her legal position and urging a plea of expediency. She insisted that if the Jews were not aliens in law they were aliens in fact, "not only by their religion, but by language, custom, manners, aspirations—in a word, by all that constitutes distinctive character in a man as a member of society." She contended, further, that the Jews were "illiterate and fanatical," and that they were "peculiarly accessible to foreign influences, and that, owing to their large numbers, they were calculated to strike a fatal blow at the homogeneity of the Roumanian national character." And as a final plea it was urged that "the nation was strongly opposed to an immediate and wholesale emancipation, and that if the powers insisted upon it the effect would be that the cause of religious liberty in Roumania would be endangered rather than promoted."

The powers seem to have been somewhat impressed by the force of these contentions, but, nevertheless, they still declined to admit that a revision of Article VII of the Roumanian constitution would, in full measure, meet the requirements of Article XLIV of the treaty of Berlin.

It was then that Roumania, fearing the shipwreck of her hopes to become an independent nation, gave the most solemn assurances that if the proposed solution was accepted, it would be made to apply at once to all assimilated Jews, and that the naturalization of unassimilated Jews would be provided for and accomplished within a reasonable time.

Sir William White was told by Boeresco, the Roumanian foreign minister, "that if the present bill could only become a law, a more complete measure of emancipation would be accepted by the electorate later on when the present agitations had subsided."

But more specific and emphatic than this were the promises contained in a circular dispatch sent out by Boeresco under date of August 31, 1879, a document that he himself described as "a sort of exposé des motifs of the measure we are about to submit to the Chambers." The essential passages of this dispatch are the following:

Will the Jews who do not immediately obtain naturalization remain foreigners? No; they will remain what they always have been—Roumanian. But in the measure that they identify themselves with the population of the country, in the measure that by schools and other means of preparation they become enlightened men and attached to the country, they will be able to obtain and exercise political rights.

There will be three categories of Jews—foreigners, Roumanian subjects, and citizens. Hitherto both the foreign and native Jews have been the objects of certain prohibitions, but in their quality of Jew alone. From the moment that article 7 of the constitution shall be suppressed all these prohibitions will disappear, and no distinction will be made between the foreign Jew and the foreign Christian. It will be the same with the Jews who are Roumanian subjects. Hitherto certain civil rights have been denied them. Thus they could not be advocates, professors, State engineers; they could not serve on juries, etc. Under the new régime they will have, in the first place, all the rights enjoyed by foreigners in general. Then, as Roumanian subjects they will have the right of serving in the army and the national guard, the right of acquiring real estate, the right to be advocates, to serve on juries, to exercise freely every profession and every trade; they will, in short, have the same civil rights as Roumanians and will be protected in the same way by the same law and by the authorities. (Official documents extracted from the diplomatic correspondence of 2/14 September, 1878; 17/29 July, 1880. Bucharest, 1880, pp. 121-123.)

The Governments of Austria and Italy were somewhat inclined to accept these assurances, but England, France, and Germany still demanded that legislative guaranties be given for the faithful observance of the treaty and that this be done within a reasonable time, if not immediately.

The negotiations between Boeresco and the powers were still in progress when the Roumanian Parliament passed an act revising Article VII of the constitution, which was soon afterwards promulgated by the Prince in the following terms:

In room of Article VII, which is revised, the following shall be placed: "ART. VII. The difference of religious creeds and confessions does not constitute in Roumania an obstacle to the acquirement of civil and political rights and their exercise."

"1. Every foreigner, without distinction of creed, whether enjoying any foreign protection or not, can acquire naturalization under the following conditions:

"(a) By addressing to the Government an application for naturalization, in which must be declared the capital he possesses, his profession, and his wish to establish his domicile in Roumania.

"(b) By residing in the country for 10 years after having made this application and by proving by his acts that he is useful to the country.

"2. The following may be exempted from this delay of residence (10 years):

"(a) All who shall have introduced into the country industries, useful inventions, or distinguished talents, or who shall have founded large commercial or industrial establishments.

"(b) All who have been born and educated in Roumania of parents domiciled in the country and have, neither in their own case nor that of their parents, at any time been in the enjoyment of any foreign protection.

"(c) All who have served with the colors during the war of independence, and these can be naturalized collectively on the proposition of the Government by a single law, without further formalities.

"3. Naturalization can only be granted by a law, and individually.

"4. A special law will determine the manner in which foreigners can establish their domicile on Roumanian territory.

"5. Roumanian and naturalized Roumanian citizens can alone acquire real estates in Roumania.

"Rights acquired up to the present time are respected." The international conventions existing at present remain in force, with all their clauses and for the term mentioned therein.

This decisive action of the Parliament of Bucharest, bold in design and prompt in execution, seems to have changed the notions of the powers, for they soon afterwards consented, though reluctantly, to the Roumanian solution. But before giving their final consent they required the Roumanian Government to make a formal declaration of acceptance of the principle of Article XLIV of the treaty of Berlin and of its resolution to act upon it "loyally and sincerely." The required obligation was expressed in the following note:

Article 7 of the Roumanian constitution, sanctioning the principle of article 44 of the treaty of Berlin, has opened to the Jews access to citizenship and has abrogated all existing laws. That principle will continue to be observed sincerely and loyally. The organic powers will devote themselves to assuring its respect and will pursue its application with the view of securing a more complete assimilation of the Jews. Meanwhile all Jews residing in the country will possess, from the point of view of private civil law, an assured juridical position, and will have no cause to fear arbitrary administrative measures or exceptional laws aimed at confessions or religions. (Statement by Signor Cairoli in the Italian Parliament, Dec. 9, 1879.)

Upon the receipt of this note Austria and Italy signified their willingness to recognize the independence of the new Kingdom.

After considerable hesitation Great Britain, France, and Germany did the same, but not before they had made it perfectly clear to the Roumanian Government that they were well aware that the conditions of the treaty of Berlin had not been fulfilled, and that they relied upon the solemn pledges of the principal-ties "to observe them in the spirit and to execute them gradually in the letter."

That there might be a clear understanding of the situation the three last-mentioned powers presented an identic note to M. Boeresco on the 20th of February, 1880. The following are the essential paragraphs of that note:

Her Majesty's Government can not consider the new constitutional provisions which have brought to their recognition—and particularly those by which persons belonging to a nonchristian creed domiciled in Roumania, and not belonging to any foreign nationality, are required to submit to the formalities of individual naturalization—as being a complete fulfillment of the views of the powers signatories of the treaty of Berlin.

Trusting, however, to the determination of the prince's Government to approximate more and more in the execution of these provisions, to the liberal intentions entertained by the powers, and taking note of the positive assurances to that effect which have been conveyed to them, the Government of her Britannic Majesty being desirous of giving to the Roumanian Nation a proof of their friendly sentiments, have decided to recognize the principality of Roumania as an independent State. Her Majesty's Government consequently declares themselves ready to enter into regular diplomatic relations with the prince's Government.

Such was the result of the diplomatic negotiations of nearly two years in which the great powers of Europe had again been cajoled and hoodwinked by a contemptible little Balkan principality. Roumania had secured the recognition of her sovereignty and, in return, had given promises and pledges which the developments of the last 30 years show she never intended to fulfill.

The congress of Berlin of 1878 accomplished nothing more in fact than did the convention of Paris of 1858. The illusory pledges of Prince Gregory Ghika remained unfulfilled for 20 years. The promises of the Government of King Charles have been equally false and hypocritical, for more than three decades have passed and yet nothing has been done to meet the just expectations of the powers. A new generation of Roumanian Jews have been born in the land, and yet they are as far from emancipation as were their fathers. The night of oppression and persecution still hovers over them and the day of freedom and regeneration still seems far away. They are still held to be aliens and outcasts in the land of their birth; naturalization is still practically inaccessible to them; and the sufferings of persecution are still as great and painful as ever.

Roumanian statesmanship triumphed in the matter of the compromise of 1880, not by honest methods of skillful diplomacy, but by craft and cunning and through the negligence of the powers themselves.

It was a regrettable mistake that the Governments of Europe should have overlooked two fatal defects in the compromise. In the first place they should by all means have forced from the Roumanian Parliament a legislative acknowledgment that Jews "belonging to no other nationality and enjoying no foreign protection were Roumanian nationals in the sense of article 46 of the convention of Paris and of the admission of M. Boeresco in his dispatch of August 31, 1879."

Again the Roumanian Parliament consists of two chambers. All naturalization bills are individual and must pass each chamber by a two-thirds majority. Paragraph 3 of the revised Article VII of the constitution left Jewish petitions for naturalization at the absolute mercy of the Parliament. This was the second fatal defect of the compromise which should not have been overlooked by the powers.

These defects are all the more to be lamented because they furnish loopholes of escape to Roumania in the matter of keeping her naturalization pledges under the treaty. They gave ground for the practice of rank hypocrisy, and at the same time for a plea of seeming justification in terms of law.

The unfortunate result has been that in the matter of naturalization, so far from keeping her pledges, Roumania has almost completely ignored them, for the Roumanian chambers have in nearly every case refused to pass bills intended to confer citizenship upon the Jews. Since 1880, the date of the recognition of the new Kingdom, only 176 Jews have been naturalized out of a total population of 100,000 adult males, the greater part of whom are natives, and many thousands of whom have bravely and patriotically performed military service for the Roumanian fatherland.

When arraigned at the bar of the nations and charged with bad faith in the matter of broken pledges, the defense of Roumania is at once astonishingly simple and amazingly cynical. She simply revives her ancient argument that the Jews are now and have always been strangers and aliens in the land, and that the treaties of 1858 and 1878, under strict interpretation, did not alter their status. When pointed to the formal and categorical pledges of 1880, and the admission of M. Boeresco in 1879, which directly contradicted and repudiated her contentions in this regard, and, moreover, when reminded that Great Britain, France, and Germany had recognized her independence only after she had specifically and emphatically renounced such a theory, she simply points to the equivocal revision of Article VII of her constitution, which Europe had accepted under pressure and protest, and declares that she is bound by that alone.

Strange to say, no attempt is ever made by Roumania to conceal the hypocrisy or to hide the bad faith of her astonishing defense. Indeed, eminent writers of Roumania have frequently boasted of the trick which was successfully played on Europe. One of these, M. Suliotis, writes in this manner:

The treaty of Berlin was thought to work wonders in favor of the strangers, but Roumania has been wise enough to escape the inconveniences which might have resulted from the application of article 7 in the sense of the treaty of Berlin, which has had no other effect than to render more difficult the situation of the aliens.

Again, writing in the Romanul of December 25, 1881, M. Rosetti, an ex-minister and one of the leading statesmen of the Kingdom, has this to say:

We may congratulate ourselves to-day on having solved the Jewish question in a national sense, and that—we may now avow loudly—contrary to the manifest will of the powers and even contrary to the spirit of the treaty of Berlin.

The solution of "the Jewish question" in "a national sense," it will be readily seen, was by the simple method of having the Roumanian Parliament pass laws antagonistic to "strangers," and then have all public officials of Roumania regard the Jews as "strangers," in the application of those laws.

Nothing can better illustrate the determined efforts of the Roumanian Government to evade its pledges in the matter of the treaty of Berlin than its systematic legislation against "strangers," which was, in fact, intended to apply only to the Jews. The following classified list of laws, discriminating against the Jews, will prove conclusively that Roumania, from the very beginning, never had any intention of fulfilling her obligations under Article XLIV of that treaty:

October 21, 1879. Roumanian Senate passes law stating that distinction of religion shall not be a bar to civil or political rights, but that "strangers" may obtain naturalization only by special law on individual demand and after 10 years' residence. (Act VII of constitution; Sincerus, pp. 3-4.)

June 6, 1880. The directors and auditors of the National Bank of Roumania must be Roumanians. (Sincerus, p. 77.)

March 18, 1881. Law of expulsion passed, authorizing minister of interior to expel or order from place to place, without giving reason, any "stranger" likely to disturb public tranquillity. (Sincerus, p. 146.) (Originally intended against Nihilists after murder of Czar, but afterwards applied to Jews.)

July 10, 1881. Law promulgated declaring that all "agents de change" or "courtiers de merchandise" must be Roumanians or naturalized, except in the ports (where there are Christian "strangers"). (Sincerus, p. 45.)

October 21, 1881. Ministerial council extends the law excluding Jews from the sale of liquors in rural districts to cities and towns included in such districts. (Sincerus, pp. 22-23.)

November 11, 1881. All "strangers" in Roumania required to obtain a permit of residence before they may pass from place to place. (Sincerus, p. 163.)

February 26, 1882. Jews forbidden to be customhouse officers. (Sincerus, p. 53.)

November 3, 1882. Roumanian Senate passes law declaring all "inhabitants" liable to military service, except subjects of alien States. (Sincerus, p. 35.) See above, June 23, 1868.

January 31, 1884. Roumanian Senate decides that "strangers" have no right of petition to Parliament. (Sincerus, p. 197.)

March 19, 1884. Law passes prohibiting hawkers from trading in rural districts. (Sincerus, p. 65.)

April 15, 1885. Pharmacy law permits minister of interior to close any pharmacy not under direction of a recognized person; pharmacies may be acquired only by Roumanians or by naturalized citizens; permission to employ "strangers" extended to 1886. (Sincerus, p. 104.)

March 13, 1886. Electors of chambers of commerce must be persons having political rights. (Sincerus, p. 75.)

June 16, 1886. Druggists must be Roumanians or naturalized citizens. (Sincerus, p. 84.)

March 16, 1902. Artisans' bill requires special authorization from the authorities to carry on any trade, only to be obtained by "strangers"—i. e., Jews—on production of foreign passports, and proof that in their "respective countries" reciprocal rights are accorded to Roumanians. (Am. Jew. Yearbook, 1902-3, p. 30.)

The culmination of Roumanian meanness and malignity was reached in the passage of the artisans' bill. Other measures had been designed to cripple and harass, to degrade and humiliate them, but this bill was evidently intended to starve the Jews to death, for it inevitably deprived many thousands of Jewish artisans of the only means of earning their daily bread. The ludicrous absurdity as well as the fiendish cruelty of such a law are shown by the fact that, under its provisions, no "foreigner" was permitted to exercise a handicraft in Roumania unless "he could show reciprocity for Roumanians in his own country." The Jews being "foreigners not under any foreign protection" were unable to prove this reciprocity. They were therefore unable to carry on any trade without violating the law.

Another characteristic illustration of the ingenious method employed by the Roumanian Parliament in framing laws to evade the spirit, if not the letter, of the treaty of Berlin is afforded by the military law of November 3, 1882. By Article I of this law "all the inhabitants" of the country are liable to military service. By Article II "subjects of foreign States" are declared ineligible for entrance into the army. The Jews being "inhabitants" of the country, but not "subjects of foreign States," are required to perform military service, although deprived of all civil and political rights, because of their status as "strangers." Although forced to risk the dangers and bear the burdens of war as privates in the rank they are denied promotion on the ground that "service in the army is a duty, while the rank of officer is a public function reserved for Roumanian citizens." These distinctions and the reasons for them were all solemnly declared in a speech by M. Bratiano in the Roumanian Senate May 27, 1882. But it is needless to elaborate the question at greater length.

The hideous result of long years of persecution and oppression, of riot and massacre, has been that the Jews of Roumania have been barbarized and impoverished and that life for most of them has been rendered an intolerable burden. Within the last 10 years 60,000 of them have been forced to emigrate and 100,000 others have been reduced to a state approaching vagabondage.

Shall these frightful conditions continue to exist? Shall the barbarous practices of a semicivilized people forever violate the precepts and shock the sentiments of civilization? Shall Article XLIV of the treaty of Berlin become as dead a letter upon the statute books of nations as did Article XLVI of the conference of Paris? What says old England, the land of Magna Charta, of the Bill of Rights, the petition of rights, and habeas corpus, the birthplace of Hampden, Pym, and Cromwell, the grandest and most majestic among the commonwealths of the earth? What says she, a party to the treaty of Berlin? Shall the mighty power that conquered Napoleon and preserved the liberties of Europe be forever defied and mocked by a petty and contemptible little Balkan State? What says France, the brilliant and beautiful among the nations, whose chivalric sympathies sent Rochambeau and Lafayette as ambassadors of freedom to our shores? What says she, a party to the treaty of Berlin? Shall the bad faith and insolence of Roumania go forever unpunished and unrebuked while France, the dauntless and eternal champion of the rights of man, stands mute and motionless? And last, but not least, what says America, the country of Washington, the Republic of Jefferson, the Union of Lincoln, whose Goddess of Liberty in the harbor of New York brandishes forever a torch of freedom as a beacon light to the oppressed and distressed of all the world? What says America, the protagonist of republican virtue and the model of newborn Republics throughout the earth? Shall she give no response and make no protest when a suffering and helpless people ask for sympathy and aid?

But it is contended that America was no party to the treaty of Berlin and that it would be improper therefore for her to seek to interfere in the local affairs of Roumania. There is a grain of truth in this contention, but only a grain. The fatal defect in the argument is that the barbarous persecution and merciless oppression of any race within the borders of any country causing wholesale emigration of the members of that race to other countries as a means of preserving life are the internal affairs of the state guilty of the persecution and oppression with which other countries have no concern and in which they should not interfere. Such a contention wrongfully assumes that the intercessory and intervening powers of civilized nations are suspended and paralyzed when the laws of humanity and the rights of races happen to conflict with the local arrangements of some small despotic government.

Whether rightfully or wrongfully, America has already protested, in vigorous and solemn terms, against Roumanian oppression of the Jews; and this protest was not born of the hurry and heat of a political convention or of any other voluntary association of irresponsible persons. It was a calm and deliberate act of American diplomacy, the product of one of the noblest and finest of American intellects.

Following the passage of the artisans' bill of March 16, 1902, which was designed to prevent the Jews from earning a livelihood by any form of handicraft or trade, Mr. Secretary Hay, on August 11, 1902, addressed a ministerial note of protest to the Roumanian Government, pointing out the tendency of such legislation to produce an abnormal stream of emigration to the United States. The following is the essential passage of that note:

The teachings of history and the experience of our own Nation show that the Jews possess in a high degree the mental and moral qualifications of conscientious citizenship. No class of immigrants is more welcome to our shores when coming equipped in mind and body for entrance upon the struggle for bread and inspired with the high purpose to give the best service of heart and brain to the land they adopt of their own free will; but when they come as outcasts, made doubly paupers by physical and moral oppression in their native land and thrown upon the long-suffering generosity of a more favored community, their migration lacks the essential conditions which make alien immigration either acceptable or beneficial. So well is this appreciated on the Continent that even in the countries where anti-Semitism has no foothold it is difficult for these fleeing Jews to obtain any lodgment. America is their only goal.

The United States offers asylum to the oppressed of all lands, but its sympathy with them in no wise impairs its just liberty and right to weigh the acts of the oppressor in the light of their effects upon this country and to judge accordingly.

Putting together the facts now plainly brought home to this Government during the past few years, that many of the inhabitants of Roumania are being forced by artificially adverse discriminations to quit their native country, that the hospitable asylum offered by this country is almost the only refuge left to them, that they come hither unfitted by the conditions of their exile to take part in the new life of this land under circumstances either profitable to themselves or beneficial to the community, and that they are objects of charity from the outset and for a long time, the right of remonstrance against the acts of the Roumanian Government is clearly established in favor of this Government. Whether consciously and of purpose or not, these helpless people, burdened and spurned by their native land, are forced by the sovereign power of Roumania upon the charity of the United States. This Government cannot be a tacit party to such an international wrong. It is constrained to protest against the treatment to which the Jews of Roumania are subjected, not alone because it has unimpeachable ground to remonstrate against the resultant injury to itself, but in the name of humanity. The United States may not authoritatively appeal to the stipulations of the treaty of Berlin, to which it was not and can not become a signatory, but it does earnestly appeal to the principles contained therein because they are the principles of international law and eternal justice, advocating the broad toleration which that solemn compact enjoins and standing ready to lend its moral support to the fulfillment thereof by its cosignatories, for the act of Roumania itself has effectively joined the United States to them as an interested party in this regard.

It might be well to add that a copy of this note of Mr. Hay, American Secretary of State, to the Government of Roumania was simultaneously sent to the Governments of Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Russia, and Turkey, the signatory powers of the treaty of Berlin. By this act the United States served notice upon Roumania and upon the great powers of Europe that she considered herself a party to that treaty, if not by direct signature then at least by the laws of humanity, by the principles of eternal justice, by the binding obligations of international law in which all civilized peoples have a common interest, and by the right of self-preservation involved in the necessity of protecting her own population and her own civilization against the barbarized and impoverished victims of Roumanian persecution.

This authoritative action of our State Department some 10 years ago is still a landmark and a precedent. No one will question the righteousness of the motive or the soundness of the political principle involved in this action. No one can effectively contend that this diplomatic step should not have been taken. The only regret that can be expressed is that the results accomplished were not greater.

Historical considerations affecting the discussion of the present question are these: A great Balkan war has just been terminated. Roumania was involved indirectly in the struggle. Changes in territory, similar to those brought about at the close of the Russo-Turkish War of 1877-78, will probably be made. The Roumanians, it is said, contemplate revising their present constitution in view of changed conditions. It is more than probable that the great powers of Europe will again be called upon to adjust, in international conference, various questions growing out of the recent war.

Now, after the lapse of 10 years, Roumanian persecution of the Jews exists in more acute and malignant form than when Mr. Hay dispatched his note of diplomatic protest. Roumanian laws against the Jews have become more stringent and oppressive. Social discrimination and ostracism have become more pitiless and humiliating. Riot and massacre are still as imminent as ever.

In view of the approaching conference of the powers, what shall be done, what can be done, to compel Roumania to act justly and humanely by the Jews within her borders? The powers will have no difficulty, in the matter of the Jews, with any other Balkan State. At the same time and in exactly the same language as that employed in the case of Roumania, Servia and Montenegro promised the congress of Berlin to guarantee civil and religious freedom to the Jews within their territories in consideration of the recognition of their independence. Both Servia and Montenegro have faithfully kept these pledges, which demonstrates conclusively that there was no inherent difficulty, no insuperable obstacle in the way of Roumania's doing the same thing.

My own opinion is that the United States should accept the invitation of the European powers to become a member of the approaching international congress, if such an invitation is extended. I have been reliably informed that our Government was invited to participate in the proceedings of the Berlin Congress, but declined. If we are not invited we should ask that the United States be permitted to be a party to the next conference of the powers. We should then join with other nations in reminding Roumania of existing obligations, and in imposing fresh ones upon her in a manner that will preclude any possibility of violating them in the future. If no new conference of the powers is called, or if the United States for any reason should not be a party to it if one is called, then let us again, and repeatedly if need be, in the language of Mr. Hay, lend our "moral support" to the great cause of civil liberty and religious emancipation, by such representations to the great Governments of Europe as will secure prompt and vigorous action on their part, in compelling Roumania, even at this late date, to perform her pledges under Article XLVI of the conference of Paris and Article XLIV of the treaty of Berlin. If her sense of national honor and international obligation does not incline Roumania to deeds of justice and righteousness, then let the strong arm of force be used and the wrath of the nations be visited upon her.

But why should we do all these things for the Jews, you ask? The reply is that these things are not to be done primarily for the Jews. They are to be done to promote and maintain civil liberty and religious freedom among men; to prevent offenses against international morality and to uphold the dignity and sanctity of international law; and, above all things, to compel respect for the laws of humanity and regard for the principles of eternal justice. These are the primary objects of action to be taken against Roumania.

But if you challenge me to open declaration I will candidly say to you that I am in favor of doing all manner of good things at all times for the Jews simply because they are Jews. And in this declaration is no sickly sentimentality, no maudlin sentiment. I am well aware that the Jewish race is not a perfect one. The Jews, along with all the balance of us, have inherited the curse of Eden. The stamp of sin is upon the Jewish as well as upon the gentile brow. From the records of the courts we gather that there are Jewish as well as Christian criminals. And undoubtedly the sons of Abraham are afflicted at times with all the faults and frailties to which human flesh is heir.

And, again, it should be cheerfully admitted that individual Jews are not entitled to receive and should not receive any particular consideration; any special clemency in the exigencies and crises of life. If Jews steal, they should be sent to prison along with gentile thieves. If they murder, the death penalty should be administered to them as in the case of others. If Jews are physically, mentally, or morally unclean, they should be socially ostracized and banished, as should gentiles who are similarly afflicted. If Jews are guilty of unpardoned sins against the laws of God, they should be consigned to the same place and for the same length of time in the hereafter as in the case of gentile sinners. These statements and concessions I gladly and cheerfully make. But having said these things, I must be permitted to repeat the declaration that where the Jewish race as such is concerned and its rights are involved in terms of religious persecution all doubts should be resolved in favor of the Jews.

The marvelous contributions of the Jewish people to the spiritual and intellectual wealth of the world entitle them to the gratitude and homage, not the hatred and persecution, of mankind. If gratitude were a supreme virtue of nations, as it should be of individuals, there would never be any organized governmental persecution of the Jews. The civilized nations of this earth are too deeply and everlastingly indebted to the Jews to be able ever to cancel the obligation. They should at least treat them with humanity and accord them those considerations which are the absolute essentials of happiness in a civilized state.

The ghastly feature of Jewish persecution is the fact that it was probably born of the refusal of the Jews to yield the divine unity of Jehovah to the polytheistic demands of ancient Rome. Pompey the Great conquered Palestine and made it a dependent Roman state some 63 years before the birth of Christ. The ordinary results and usual incidents of Roman provincial administration followed. Among these was the attempt to blend the religion and mingle the god or gods of the conquered country with the religion and gods of Rome. Jewish monotheism, which civilization to-day prizes as its most precious jewel, was then sought to be destroyed.

The civil and religious differences between Jews and Romans were at once fundamental and fatal. In the first place, these two races have shown themselves to be, by all odds, the most masterful of mankind. The Romans founded the world's greatest physical empire. The Jews founded the earth's most illustrious kingdom of the spirit. In the fiber of both Jew and Roman were to be found those elements of mastery and control that have nowhere else been seen in the organization of any race, with the possible exception of the English. The Romans would brook no earthly opposition and the Jews would submit to none but God. The Romans worshiped a whole host of greater and lesser deities, who inhabited earth and sky, mountains, seas, and streams. Against this polytheism of a most extravagant kind the Jews pitted the doctrine of monotheism, the jealous and exclusive worship of one great God. Again, polytheism was an integral part of the government of the Roman state and could not be attacked or derided without constituting an act of treason against the laws of Rome and the sovereignty of Cæsar. On the other hand, the religion of the Jews and their law were identical. To submit to the worship of Roman gods was not only an act of treason to Jehovah, but was also an abrogation of Jewish nationality and a repeal of all Jewish laws. These considerations constituted a definite and acute issue between the Roman masters of the world and the chosen seed of God. The character of each race was such that neither would surrender, and the result was, of necessity, a mere struggle of the survival of the fittest. Both were victorious. The Romans destroyed polytheism, the religious empire of the Romans; and out of the struggle, which lasted for centuries, grew a bitterness and hate that has been handed down to the modern world as a hideous legacy and from which massacre and persecution have been born and multiplied.

Monotheism is Judaism's great contribution to the religious thought of mankind and to the civilization of the earth. And for consenting that their country should be conquered, their nationality destroyed, and their race dispersed throughout the world, in order that this best and noblest gift of God to man might not be sacrificed to pagan and barbarian superstition, but might instead be transmitted as a heavenly heritage to all future generations of men, the Jews have received, not the gratitude and love but the hate and oppression of the nations.

The Jew is the Prometheus of history. The Æschylean Prometheus snatched fire from the skies and gave it to mankind as a priceless boon. As a reward for his trouble he was chained to a rock while a vulture preyed upon his liver. The Jew received the fire of monotheism from Heaven and gave it to man. For his care and solicitude he has been chained to the rock of the ages while the vultures of hatred, persecution, riot, and massacre have preyed upon his heart.

Another hideous feature of Jewish persecution is the fact that its chief intensifying cause for nearly 20 centuries has been a total misunderstanding and misconception of the real facts and true meaning of the crucifixion of Jesus. The cruel and senseless notion of the implacable wrath of Deity has prevailed in all the ages as an explanation of the destruction of Jerusalem and the dispersion and persecution of the Jews. It is worse than nonsense to see in this event anything but the operation of vulgar physical forces of the most ordinary kind. The fall of Jerusalem was a most natural and consequential thing. It was not even an extraordinary historical occurrence, even in Jewish history. Titus did not so completely destroy Jerusalem as did Nebuchadnezzar before him. Razing cities to the ground was a customary Roman act, a form of pastime, a characteristic Roman proceeding in the case of stubborn and rebellious towns. Scipio razed Carthage and drove Carthaginians into the most remote corners of the earth. Was any Roman or Punic god interested in this event? Cæsar destroyed many Gallic cities and scattered Gauls throughout the world. Was any deity concerned about these things?

Roman admiration was at times enkindled, but Roman clemency was never gained by deeds of valor directed against the arms of Rome. Neither Hannibal nor Mithridates, Vercingetorix nor Jugurtha, the grandest of her enemies, received any mercy at her hands. To oppose her will was to invite destruction; and the sequel was a mere question of "the survival of the fittest." The most turbulent, rebellious, and determined of all the imperial dependencies was the Province of Judea. The Jews regarded the Romans as idolaters, and instead of obeying them as masters despised and defied them as barbarians. When this spirit became manifest and promised to be perpetual the dignity of the Roman name, as well as the safety of the Roman State, demanded the destruction of Jerusalem and the dispersion of the Jews; and destruction and dispersion followed as naturally as any profane effect follows any vulgar cause.

But the advocates of the divine-wrath theory quote Scriptures and point to prophecy in support of their contention. Then Scriptures must be pitted against Scriptures. The last prayer of the Master on the cross must be made to repeal every earlier Scriptural prophecy or decree. "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," is the sublimest utterance in the literature of the world. It is the epitome of every Christian virtue and of all religious truth. This proclamation from the cross repealed the Mosaic law of hereditary sin, placed upon a personal basis responsibility for offenses against God and man, and served notice upon future generations that those who "know not what they do" are entitled to be spared and forgiven. To believe that God ignored the prayer of Christ on the cross, and that the centuries of persecution of the Jews which followed were but the fulfillment of prophecy and fate, is to assail the Messiahship of Jesus and to question the goodness and mercy of Jehovah. Jesus knew the full meaning of his prayer and was serious unto death. To believe that the Father rejected the petition of the Son is to destroy the equality of the persons of the Trinity by investing one with the authority and power to review, revise, and reject the judgments and petitions of the others.

If the Christian doctrine be true that Christ was God "manifest in the flesh"; if the doctrine of the Trinity be true that God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost are one and the same, eternal and inseparable, then the prayer of Jesus on the cross was not a petition, but a declaration that the malefactors of the crucifixion who, in the blindness of ignorance, had helped to kill the Son of Man, would receive at the last day the benefits of the amnesty of the Father of mercy and forgiveness.

If the perpetrators of the great injustice of the Sanhedrin and of the Pretorium are to be forgiven because they knew not what they did, is there any justice, human or divine, in persecuting their innocent descendants of all lands and ages? "When Sir Moses Montefiore was taunted by a political opponent with the memory of Calvary and described by him as one who sprang from the murderers who crucified the world's Redeemer, the next morning the Jewish philanthropist, whom Christendom has learned to honor, called upon his assailant and showed him the record of his ancestors which had been kept for 2,000 years and which showed that their home had been in Spain for 200 years before Jesus of Nazareth was born." This half-humorous anecdote illustrates the utter absurdity and supreme injustice of connecting the modern Jew with ancient tragic history. The elemental forces of reason, logic, courage, and sympathy wrapped up and interwoven in every impulse, and fiber of the human mind and heart will be forever in rebellion against the monstrous doctrine of centuries of shame, exile, and persecution visited upon an entire race because of the sins and crimes of a handful of their progenitors who lived more than a thousand years before.

But if the visitation of the sins of the fathers upon the sons is to be maintained and perpetuated as a form of divine, if not of human justice, why not, at least, be consistent in the application of the principle? Many philosophers and critics have detected a striking kinship between the teachings of Socrates and those of Jesus. A celebrated historian closes a chapter of the history of Greece with this sentence:

Thus perished the greatest and most original of the Grecian philosophers (Socrates), whose uninspired wisdom made the nearest approach to the divine morality of the Gospel.

The indictments against the philosopher of Athens and the Prophet of Nazareth were strikingly similar. Socrates was charged with corrupting Athenian youth; Jesus, with perverting the nation. Socrates was charged with treason against Athens; Jesus, with treason against Rome. Both were charged with blasphemy—The Athenian with blasphemy of the Olympic gods, the Nazarene with blaspheming Jehovah. Both sealed with their blood the faith that was in them. If the descendants of the crucifiers of the Christ are to be persecuted, brutalized, and exiled for the sins of the fathers, why not apply the same pitiless law of hereditary punishment to the descendants of the Athenian dicasts who administered hemlock to the greatest sage of antiquity? Why not persecute all the Greeks of the earth, wherever found, because of the injustice of the Areopagus?

Let no persecutor of the Jew lay the unction to his soul that he is justified by the tragedy of Golgotha, for he who persecutes in the name of religion is a spiritual barbarian, an intellectual savage. Let this same persecutor not make the mistake of supposing that the Jews are wholly responsible for the persecution that has been heaped upon them. Before he falls into the foolish blunder of such a supposition let him ponder the testimony of several gentile experts upon the subject. Let him read The Scattered Nation, a brilliant lecture on the Jew by the late Zebulon Vance, of North Carolina, in which occurs this sentence: "If the Jew is a bad job, in all honesty we should contemplate him as the handiwork of our own civilization." Let him find Shakespearean confirmation of this statement in The Merchant of Venice, act 3, scene 1. If the Jew baiter objects that this is the imagination of a poet, let us then point him to the testimony of a great historian and statesman to prove to him that the gentile is in great measure responsible for the causes that have produced Jewish persecution.

In the British House of Commons on April 17, 1833, a bill for the removal of the disabilities of the Jews was the subject of parliamentary discussion. Lord Macaulay took part in the debate and spoke as follows:

The honorable member for Oldham tells us that the Jews are naturally a mean race, a money-getting race; that they are averse to all honorable callings; that they neither sow nor reap; that they have neither flocks nor herds; that usury is the only pursuit for which they are fit; that they are destitute of all elevated and amiable sentiments.

Such, sir, has in every age been the reasoning of bigots. They never fail to plead in justification of persecution the vices which persecution has engendered. England has been legally a home to the Jews less than half a century, and we revile them because they do not feel for England more than a half patriot.

We treat them as slaves and wonder that they do not regard us as brethren. We drive them to mean occupations and then reproach them for not embracing honorable professions. We long forbade them to possess land and we complain that they chiefly occupy themselves in trade. We shut them out from all the paths of ambition and then we despise them for taking refuge in avarice.

During many ages we have, in our dealings with them, abused our immense superiority of force, and then we are disgusted because they have recourse to that cunning which is the natural and universal defense of the weak against the violence of the strong. But were they always a mere money-changing, money-getting, money-hoarding race? Nobody knows better than my honorable friend, the member for the University of Oxford, that there is nothing in their national character which unfits them for the highest duties of citizens.

He knows that in the infancy of civilization, when our island was as savage as New Guinea, when letters and art were still unknown to Athens, when scarcely a thatched hut stood on what was afterwards the site of Rome, this contemned people had their fenced cities and cedar palaces, their splendid temple, their fleets of merchant ships, their schools of sacred learning, their great statesmen and soldiers, their natural philosophers, their historians, and their poets.

What nation ever contended more manfully against overwhelming odds for its independence and religion? What nation ever, in its last agonies, gave such signal proofs of what may be accomplished by a brave despair? And if, in the course of many centuries, the depressed descendants of warriors and sages have degenerated from the qualities of their fathers: if, while excluded from the blessings of law and bowed down under the yoke of slavery, they have contracted some of the vices of outlaws and slaves, shall we consider this a matter of reproach to them? Shall we not rather consider it as a matter of shame and remorse to ourselves? Let us do justice to them. Let us open to them the door of the House of Commons. Let us open to them every career in which ability and energy can be displayed. Till we have done this let us not presume to say that there is no genius among the countymen of Isalah, no heroism among the descendants of the Maccabees.

What more eloquent tribute to the Jew and his achievements could be found in the literature of the earth? And is every word of it not as true to-day when applied to the Jews of Roumania as it was when spoken by Macaulay of the Jews of England more than 70 years ago?

But, if the persecutor of the Jew is not moved by the eloquence of Macaulay or by the satire and sarcasm of Shakespeare, then let him call the roll of Hebrew great names and watch the mighty procession as it moves. Abraham among patriarchs; Moses among lawgivers; Isaiah and Jeremiah among prophets; Solomon and David among kings; Philo, Maimonides, Spinoza, and Mendelsohn among philosophers; Herschel, Sylvester, Jacobi, and Kronecker among mathematicians and astronomers; Josephus, Neander, Graetz, Palgrave, and Geiger among historians; Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, Offenbach, Goldmark, Joachim, Rubinstein, and Strauss among musicians; Sonnenthal, Possart, Rachel, and Bernhardt among actors and actresses; Disraeli, Gambetta, Castelar, Lasker, Crémieux, and Benjamin among statesmen; Halévi and Heine among poets; Karl Marx and Samuel Gompers among labor leaders and political economists; the Rothschilds, Bleichröders, Schiffs, and Seligmans among financiers; Auerbach and Nordau among novelists; Sir Moses Montefiore and Baron Hirsch among philanthropists.

Civilization may well rush to the rescue of the Jew when threatened with destruction as a terrified and frantic mother struggles to save a favorite child. For if the Bible and the Talmud of the Jews, with all that they teach and mean, should be stricken from the earth, mankind would relapse with frightful speed into savage and barbaric night.

Liberty may well complain when Jews are persecuted and oppressed, for from the days of Isaiah and Jeremiah, the first great revolutionists of earth, to the times of Gambetta and Castelar, the fierce and uncompromising advocates of republican government in France and Spain, freedom's cause has had no nobler, braver champions than the sons of Israel.

Religion and Literature will gladly join hands with Liberty and Civilization, their dearest children, in protesting against mistreatment of the sons of Abraham, for, in every century of history, with their hands tied behind them and their hearts burdened to the breaking point, with a bitter load of hatred and persecution, Jews have yet managed, from the cave of the prophets and from the manger of the Christ, from the filth of the Judengasse, and from the darkness of the hovels of the Ghetto, to plant in the garden of life, in the soil of the soul, the most beautiful and fragrant flowers that bloom and blossom there.

This race deserves the gratitude and homage, not the hatred and persecution of mankind. The parliaments and congresses of enlightened nations, whose peoples are truly grateful, civilized, and free, will in the future extend to the Jewish race, the chief benefactors of mankind, a positive protection, and will guarantee to each and every one of them who is honestly guided and righteously disposed, a free hand with a full swing in the struggle of life. [Loud applause.]

ABSENCE OF MEMBERS FROM HOUSE.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I read from an editorial in the Bridgeport (Conn.) Farmer, of September 20, the following:

When a Congressman runs away from his work and is consistently and frequently absent from the scene of his duties, he defrauds the people of that which he agreed to give them. He does wrong.

Mr. Speaker, the other day I perhaps did an injustice to the Representatives from Missouri in stating that for two days all were absent, for I should have also stated that the Representatives from Massachusetts were absent at the same time. Massachusetts is regarded by the world as the center of American intellect, and as the great Bay State is regarded also as the home of all social and religious freedom it is certainly of more importance that its members should be here upholding the high standards of their State more than perhaps any other State in the Union. Has the time arrived when Massachusetts, founded by the Puritans, will not look askance at absenteeism?

Inadvertently, the other day, while mentioning delegations that were absent I mentioned the State of Kentucky. That was wrong to some of her members, because if there are Members who are faithful in attendance and who give very able service to their people it is certainly Messrs. SHERLEY, BARKLEY, HELM, FIELDS, THOMAS, JOHNSON, and ROUSE.

Some few days ago I called attention to the fact that some of the leaders had practically abandoned their duties here and left the management of the business of the House to new men. A great currency measure was up for action, and at the same time a great tariff bill that had taken months to construct had come into the House with the Senate disagreeing.

The tariff bill had to be taken up in conference, and that took four of our leaders away from the deliberations upon the currency bill. The great leader from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD; the very able and distinguished KITCHIN, from North Carolina; one of the great intellects from our side, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. RAINEY; and the most skillful and practical Member, Mr. DIXON, of Indiana, were called away to take part in the conference with the Senate. Therefore, we could not have the benefit of their advice and support. And the rest of the so-called leaders had taken themselves away, and when the discussion of the currency bill was commenced they were not here to participate in that great measure.

A most noticeable absentee was one who is considered by himself to be presidential timber, and who is, perhaps, one of the most able ones amongst us. He has been seen here once or twice since about May 7. Now, when this great mind from Alabama absented himself from his duties and left the affairs of the Nation to new Members, how can it be expected that some of the new Members will not feel that the country will surely run along without them if it can run along without the services of the gentleman who is considered of presidential timber? We were called here by our President on April 7 last; and what an example it was that this naval constructor, who would have a battleship in every man's front yard, remained with us until May 7, when he left us as though the session was over as far as he was concerned? What sort of a condition would we have here if every Member who has been here a lesser number of terms should absent himself in the same way?

Now, there has been a daily absenteeism that averages 250 Members for several weeks past.

Honor should at least dictate that they who can not attend should resign or do their duty as they promised by their oaths. They receive good pay, and are honored by being Members of the National House, to say nothing of the prestige it gives a Member to be sent to Congress. It is likewise true that absenteeism is prevalent amongst the older members of the minority. What a spectacle for one of the great leaders, Mr. GARDNER, of Massachusetts, to take himself away in the middle of July seeking other honors and another position. It would seem as if this House liked absenteeism, for when he returned the other day after being nominated for governor of his State, he tarried a few moments in the House, was applauded, and then he left us again only to return to-day. What an example to the new Members is set by this great parliamentarian who is one of the leaders of his party?

I think it was Mr. SHACKLEFORD who told us of a member of the Ways and Means Committee resigning from a conference committee. But with this we note that the gentleman from Minnesota was careful not to resign from the position with the fine salary. This same observation might lead us to the gentleman from Massachusetts, but what a picture it presents when it is held up to comparison with some others who have held high places in the councils of their party and Nation. Augustus H. Van Wyck resigned a position paying $17,500 a year when he accepted the Democratic nomination for governor of New York; Alton B. Parker, who as chief justice of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, resigned when he accepted the Democratic nomination for President; and that very dignified and able young man whom our President selected for collector of the port of New York has resigned his position in order to be a candidate for mayor of Greater New York. Can it be said by anyone that it is possible for a man to serve two masters?

What a spectacle it is to the American people to have men in our highest positions take the oath that they will "freely, without mental reservation, faithfully discharge the duties" of the office they are about to enter, calling upon the Almighty to witness, and then what? Is being away days, weeks, and months, seeking other duties, other honors, and possibly other profits, in keeping with that oath?

Mr. GOULDEN. According to the agreement which I made with the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut, I must now ask that he be allowed to proceed by unanimous consent. What time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. DONOVAN. Five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. DONOVAN] be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say to my friend from Connecticut that, according to one of the rules of the House, it is improper to assail the conduct of Members and their motives, and if the gentleman's object in continuing his speech is to assail one of our colleagues who is absent—I do not care who he is or on what side he sits—I am going to object. If the gentleman desires to speak on some question, I do not care.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is impossible for the Chair to say what course the gentleman intends to pursue. Is there objection?

Mr. DIFENDERFER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. According to the rule previously adopted, the House will now stand in recess until 4 o'clock p. m.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 4 o'clock p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the managers on the part of the two Houses of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the urgent deficiency bill have been in conference and have finished the work. They have reached the conclusion that they will report to the two Houses. It is merely a question of the time that will be required to prepare the report and the accompanying statements. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the House take a further recess for, say, 20 minutes.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess for 20 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and accordingly the House stands in recess until 4.23 o'clock.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

RESTORATION OF CONGRESS HALL, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules be discharged from further consideration of House joint resolution No. 134, providing for the appointment of a committee from the House of Representatives and, as well, from the Senate to attend, without expense to the Government, a celebration to be held in Philadelphia on the 25th of this month in connection with the exercises covering the restoration of Congress Hall.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LOGUE] asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Rules from the further consideration of House joint resolution No. 134.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, until the deficiency matter is disposed of, I shall object to the transaction of any other business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—RECESS.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has just sent in word that it will be 5 o'clock before the conference report and statement are ready. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the House do recess until 5 o'clock.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. You can not do more than file the report under the rule, can you?

Mr. HARDWICK. Except by unanimous consent, no.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman send for the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]?

Mr. HARDWICK. One of the other conferees is present, Judge BARTLETT.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman desire to ask me a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The proposition is to take a recess until 5 o'clock. What I wanted to ask was whether it was the intention then to adjourn when the conference report was presented?

Mr. BARTLETT. The conference report will be presented in 15 or 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I know; and a request has been made to take a recess until 5 o'clock. I wanted to see if the intention was to take an adjournment then or whether it was the intention to try to keep the House in session continuously to dispose of the conference report, or whether it was desired to take a recess and work on the conference report to-night.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] just a moment ago asked unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 5 o'clock, which is about the ordinary time for adjournment. Of course, under the rules the conference report would be presented for printing in the RECORD. So far as I am concerned, I am quite willing to waive that requirement and proceed with the disposition of the conference report, and, assuming that certain items will not be included in the report, proceed with the disposition of those to-night, if it can be done.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if the House is willing to do so and will waive the requirement of the rule that the conference report be printed in the RECORD before being considered, in order to accommodate a great many Members who are here, I am perfectly willing to ask the House to consider the report at the present time. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. But may I suggest that if in case of a roll call it was developed that there was no quorum present—

Mr. FITZGERALD. We would have to adjourn, anyway.

Mr. BUTLER. On one amendment, at least, there will be an opportunity for a roll call?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman from New York will pardon me, we could at least debate Senate amendment 108.

Mr. MANN. We could debate one amendment, but I would not be willing to have a lot of amendments debated and not acted upon. Suppose the gentleman bring the matter before the House by asking unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock, and that at that time it would be in order to consider the conference report on the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, since the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is now on the floor himself, I will withdraw my request and let him make whatever request he thinks proper.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, in order to ascertain the disposition of the House I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 8 o'clock to-night, and that at that time it shall be in order to consider the conference report on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 8 o'clock, at which time it shall be in order to consider the conference report on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill without printing in the RECORD under the rule. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it may be unimportant that I should be here when this is considered, but I have been sitting about for four days, waiting for this quorum to do something. If the gentleman will make his request to go on at 5 o'clock for the consideration of that, I will be willing to stay until 12 o'clock. But I should object to taking a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me make this suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania: There are certain amendments which I stated would be reported to the House in disagreement. Many gentlemen desire to debate them. Eight o'clock was suggested so that Members might have an opportunity to have dinner and come back here then prepared to work. If we should take up the conference report at 5 o'clock with the purpose of continuing in session, I know that at about half past 6, having had very little opportunity to have any lunch and compelled to go without dinner, I myself would develop such an acrimonious temper that it would not accelerate the business of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. And I have not had any since breakfast.

Mr. BUTLER. But suppose the gentleman considers other people.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois feeds on different meat from the rest of the Members of the House and does not require the same character of nourishment.

Mr. BUTLER. There will be plenty here to listen to the argument, and this means that we will stay until very late to-night. The rest of us have been sitting here waiting now for four days, and we ought to be considered. A man of my age ought not to be expected to stay here all week and then stay here all night.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Suppose the gentleman allows me to suggest something. The gentleman must remember that personally I occupy a different position in this matter from many others. Once the debate starts I can not leave the floor, but must remain here, while everybody else can escape a sufficient time to have dinner. Because of the manner in which these amendments will be considered I would be required, as well as two or three other Members, to remain here continuously, and that would be unfair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a suggestion right there? If you are going to have a long debate, well and good; but here are a number of Senate amendments which, as I understand it, are not covered by the conference report. I take it that debate on any one of these will not be very extensive, and then will come the vote on the amendments. On some of them there will be a roll call, and the probability is that we would have a roll call at 6 o'clock and would not be able to get a quorum. Those who stayed here at that time would not get their dinner.

Mr. HARDWICK. It happens that the very first amendment to be considered is Senate amendment No. 8, on which the principal debate will occur.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There might be some discussion of the report itself before we reach any of the amendments.

Mr. MANN. If we are to come here to-night, why not make it half past 7 or 7 o'clock?

Mr. BUTLER. Make it 7 o'clock. I do not say this to be captious.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is a man of peace. How about 7 o'clock?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not care anything about peace, but I have been waiting here all week for a quorum, and if it is here let us go ahead and do something. If the gentleman will modify his request and make it 7 o'clock, I will make no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I modify the request and make it 7 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 7 o'clock to-night, at which time it shall be in order to consider the conference report on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, the rule to the contrary notwithstanding. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered, and the House stands in recess until that time.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 7 o'clock p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the urgent deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on amendments numbered 8, 10, 11, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 44, 61, 82, 93, 97, and 107.

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,

FREDK. H. GILLET,

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
